This play which Dr. Wilson plans to see has been presented for the past several hundred years at intervals of one decade. It was in 1920 that this record of performing every ten years was broken. One of the principal actors was killed during the late war, and as it takes ten or more years to be able to carry out a part, the play was called off for 1920. The presentation in 1930 will be the first since 1910. The cost of seeing this performance at Oberammergau is very small, because the admission is just enough to defray the expenses of giving it.

Motion picture companies from the United States and Europe have offered hundreds of thousands of dollars for permission to film the play, but the people will not submit. Their objection is that the companies would profit from it.

Dr. Wilson will resume his duties here September 1, 1930.

President Sproul Visits University

Dr. Robert Gordon Sproul, executive vice-president and president designate of the University of California, spent Friday and Saturday in Chapel Hill. Dr. Sproul came to Chapel Hill to visit the University of North Carolina Press.

Dr. Sproul stated that the University Press is one of the best organized college presses in the United States. He said that the University of California Press publishes only scholarly work and is limited in its scope, while the University of North Carolina Press publishes books of human interest with a scholarly background. He plans to reorganize the University of California Press and model it after the Carolina Press.

He declared that the University has one of the four most beautiful campuses in the country. In speaking of the library, Dr. Sproul said that a library is the heart of a university, and that the University library should prove of tremendous value to the University itself and the state. He was very much impressed with the appearance of the building.

Dr. Sproul is vice-president and president designate, and will become president of the University of California in July, 1930.

DR. KNIGHT'S NEW BOOK IS PRAISED

Editor of "Educational Review" Thinks It To Be The Best Book Ever Published On Education.

"A brilliant light on American public schools" is the description which Dr. William McAndrew, formerly superintendent of schools of New York City and more recently of Chicago, and editor of the Educational Review, gives in a 1200-word review of Professor Edgar W. Knight's recent book, Education in the United States, in the current issue of School and Society. "If you do not thank me for recommending to you an unusually profitable piece of reading it will be because you fail to take my advice, which is to peruse the whole of Edgar Knight's essay upon American schools. . . . Knight has the dramatist's sense of movement, the biographer's instinct for personality, the historian's patience in laborious search through archives. There is no history of education concerned with American schools that approaches this in animation, movement and epic quality." McAndrew says that the characters discussed in the book are more alive "than in any other accounts of them I ever read," and that the adventurers of these educational leaders "give spice to the book. It is not without its thrills. . . . As for style, Claude Bowers' fascinating biographies, Edwin Slosson's unique use of humor in elucidating principles of science have no score higher than that made by this Knight of the gleaming pen."

U. N. C. Professor To Be At Emory During The Winter Quarter

Dr. Louis B. Wright, professor of English in the University, will go to Emory during the winter quarter as visiting professor of English, according to an announcement made in the Emory Wheel by Dr. John Steadman of Emory.

While there he will give courses in Shakespeare, pre-Shakespearean drama, and the short story. He will take the place of Dr. James Hinton, head of the Emory department of English, who is seriously ill.

Concerning Dr. Wright the Emory paper says: "Dr. Wright has taught at Johns Hopkins University and at the University of North Carolina. He has won recognition for his work in the field of Elizabethan literature, and has published a number of critical essays and studies.

"'Emory is very fortunate in securing the services of such a well-trained, experienced scholar and teacher,' Dr. Steadman declared."

Hall Of Fame In Next Buccaneer

Golden Fleece and Phi Beta Kappa can no longer be considered the height of collegiate fame on the Carolina campus; no longer can the aspiring co-ed hope to attain the peak of campus society by rating the German Club dances or by dating the cream of Carolina, for all these are merely second rate criteria when considered along with the Campus Hall of Fame that has recently been instituted at the University.

This Hall of Fame, which has created considerable comment on the campus, was perpetrated and conceived by the members of the staff of the Carolina Buccaneer. A special section in each of the succeeding issues of the Buccaneer, beginning with the January edition has been set aside for the pictures and biographies of the most eminent students gracing the campus. Two selections to the Hall of Fame will be run in each of the five remaining numbers of the magazine, one man and one woman will be run each time. Only ten notables will be selected this year.

Each candidate will be voted upon and chosen by the members of the Buccaneer staff at its regular monthly meetings. Various qualifications will be taken into consideration in making the selections. No one characteristic will be allowed to predominate but rather will the choice be based on the sum total of the individual's attainments and personal traits. Personality, attractiveness, character, popularity, and participation in

MEMORIAL HALL QUESTION TO BE ACTED ON SOON

President Chase Calls Meeting Of Trustees; To Be Held In Raleigh.

The trustees of the University are now faced with a very serious decision regarding Memorial hall. Building experts and engineers last week declared the big structure unsafe for use, and on the strength of their recommendation President H. W. Chase will bring the matter to the attention of the trustees at a meeting set for next Wednesday in Raleigh.

Announcement that the building was unsafe came as a result of a long series of investigations by the building committee of the University. The hall has been examined by many engineers and architects, and all agree that the building may either be entirely rebuilt or torn down.

It is one of the largest, if not the largest building in the world without control supports. The roof is supported by two great wooden arches, one hundred and twenty-seven feet in diameter, lengthwise of the building. These supports were built on the ground, and raising them was a perilous task. At the first attempt a celebration was planned. All the trustees were specially invited to the ceremony. After numerous speeches and formalities, one of the arches was raised high up into the air when suddenly the tackle jammed and the ropes gave way. The arch tumbled awkwardly and dangerously to the ground. The crowd scattered, and the "show" was over. Later, however, experienced housemovers were engaged, and after much hard work the arches were finally raised.

After an investigation of the engineers recently, it was found that these large arches were rotting at the base, and if it had not been for the braces at the foot of these arches, they would have long ago fallen. It was also found that the beams had slipped as far as eight inches, and some of the nails, holding these beams, had been pulled deep into the arches. The engineers have advised that either these beams be replaced by steel ones, or that the whole structure be torn down.

'MESSIAH' TO BE STAGED MONDAY BY LOCAL GROUP

Handel's Masterpiece To Be Presented In Methodist Church Monday.

CHORUS OF ONE HUNDRED

Four Soloists And The University Orchestra Take Part In Program.

Tomorrow night residents and students of Chapel Hill will have the privilege of hearing Handel's "The Messiah" produced locally for the first time. There will be no admission charge.

The performance will be held at 8:30 o'clock in the Methodist church. It is to be executed by four soloists from this section of the state, the Chapel Hill community chorus under the direction of Harold S. Dyer, and the University symphony orchestra.

"The Messiah" was first produced at Dublin, Ireland, in 1741, for the benefit of a foundling hospital. An interesting custom was established at the time of this first performance. King George II, who happened to be in the audience, was so carried away by the final "Hallelujah Chorus" that he rose to his feet, whereupon every one else present did likewise. Audiences have usually risen ever since, during each performance of this last chorus. The custom will be repeated tomorrow night.

The libretto of "The Messiah" is taken directly from the holy scriptures and is especially in keeping with the Christmas season. It resembles most oratorios in that it is written for soloists and for a chorus accompanied by a full orchestra. The oratorio differs from other forms of dramatic musical representations such as the opera, in that it does not employ scenery, costume, or action.

George Frederick Handel, the composer, lived in Germany during the eighteenth century. Best known for his oratorios, this master composed the entire score of "The Messiah" in 24 days.

The chorus, tomorrow night, will consist of 44 sopranos, 23 contraltos, 13 tenors and 24 basses, and the orchestra will be made up of 21 pieces.

In many localities a performance of "The Messiah" is a regular annual occurrence.

Frank Graham And Fred Merryville Talk To The Engineers

At the joint meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the A.S.C.E. and the University branch of the A.I.E.E. held Thursday evening in Phillips Hall, Mr. Fred Merryfield spoke on the training of British aviators during the World War, and Professor Frank Graham talked on "The Engineer in Recent Southern History."

Speaking from experience obtained while in the British Air Service Mr. Merryfield described to the audience the various preliminary examinations which were undergone before one could get into the air service, and training which was given those who passed the examinations. He told about the thrill of the first solo and the fright that accompanies the second such flight, as well as some of the pleasant parts of flying.

Big Business Turns Covetous Eyes Upon The University

By insidious, almost imperceptible influence big business, which has come to dominate practically every phase of American life, has extended its tenacles to many of the country's institutions of higher learning. Censorship of student publications, suppression of organizations encouraging liberal thought, rigorous limitation of research which might prove detrimental to industrial interests, removal of faculty members who exhibit an active interest in the economic, social and political welfare of the nation—these have become common occurrences since the disciples of Mammon initiated their efforts to bring the college campus under the sway of their oligarchal despotism.

Fortunately the University administration has been able to preserve a comparative freedom from the sinister and stifling influence of the monied interests. But ominous portents have appeared of late. Efforts have been made by powerful outside interests to compel the resignations of at least two of the University's most prominent faculty men. Certain research projects which might conceivably produce results not exactly to the liking of captains of industry have been summarily—and suspiciously—terminated. An important conference concerned with attempts to improve conditions among the working classes in this state was tentatively scheduled to be held at the University and abruptly transferred to a neighboring institution. Indications are that the administration is attempting to preserve a neutral attitude among the faculty concerning the industrial crisis through which the state is passing; this course is manifestly impossible to maintain for any length of time. The professors here are thinking individuals, serious minded-men for the most part. They cannot fail to have decided opinions upon the capital-labor struggle, and they cannot be restrained from expressing them.

According to an article in the December 4 issue of The Outlook by Raymond F. Howe, a former member of the University of Pittsburgh faculty, that institution offers a classic example of the extent to which "big business" domination of college and universities may be carried. In 1924 Chancellor John Gabbert Bowman conceived the idealistic plan of erecting a gigantic "Cathedral of Learning" to epitomize the spirit of the city as well as to provide classrooms for the University. Andrew W. Mellon, Senator David A. Reed, the secretary of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and the presidents of the Carnegie Steel Co., the Westinghouse Air Brake Co. and the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. were among those appointed directors of the campaign for the huge structure. Most of these men were already on the Board of Trustees. The campaign was successful; most of the contributions were large sums donated by the corporations represented upon the campaign committee and the Board of Trustees. As a result the business interests practically gained control of the University.

The editor of the Pitt Weekly was told by his Dean that he would have to do one of three things: go along with the administration 100 per cent, submit to a strict censorship, or resign. The Pitt Panther was suspended by faculty order. Socialism was barred as a subject for an intercollegiate debate, Dr. Harry Elmer Barnes was chased off the campus by hirelings of the administration when he attempted to speak under the auspices of the Liberal Club, the Club was denied the right to hear such men as Louis Untermeyer and Arthur Garfield Hayes at their meetings. Two student leaders of the Liberal Club and one member of the faculty were suspended from the University. Another faculty man of liberal tendencies was offered $500 not to return the next fall. In answering a civil action brought by the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of the expelled students, Chancellor Bowman made the significant statement through his attorneys that the power of expulsion rests not with him but with the Board of Trustees.

It is to be hoped that the administration here can prevent the University of North Caro- from becoming the "Pitt of the South." Huge contributions from powerful corporations and industrial families should not be encouraged by the new Alumni Loyalty Fund or other agencies or individuals, for dangers of domination in such cases are great. Even a man of such strong character as President Chase might be powerless to avert the passing of control of the University to a clique of wealthy individuals, the mouthpiece of big business interests, if a few large contributors are allowed to finance the expansion of the institution. Small contributions from the entire body of alumni and friends of the University, rather than immense sums from a few, should be encouraged to provide the funds necessary to supplement state appropriations. And may the administration be successful in its efforts to keep the University out of the clutches of big business.

Witch Burners Busy Again

Much evil has been cloaked in the garb of liberality. It is also true that license for the mere sake of "freedom" often degenerates into liceniousness. We hold no brief, either, for those who would discard all that which is old on that ground alone, for such a practice is vicious, in addition to being naive. But when centers of higher education, and one in particular which is enjoying considerable respect in the South, takes up a witch hunt, with an alacrity and vengeance which are astounding, where the grand old states of Tennessee and Arkansas have left off then it is time for those left in possession of their sanity and equilibrium to strike out with all the power and intensity they can command at that hydra-headed creature—Intolerance.

Dr. John C. Dawson, president of Howard College, a Baptist institution, demanded and received the resignation of Dr. Horace Calvin Day, young professor of biology, who in addressing a chapel group at the college had the courage to say—"We should not give too literal interpretation to the Bible. There are some people so ignorant that they still believe that Noah crowded two of each species of animals into the ark during the flood. How could he have gotten all those animals into the ark? During my years of biological experience I have studied two kinds of whale and found it impossible for either of them to have swallowed a man whole and anyway no man could live inside a whale. These references seem illogical, but God is logical."

The news story is its own most powerful editorial. The modern and logical view of the Christian religion and the Bible is that they are a religion and book of great humanitarian ideas and not controversable words. The ecclesiastics who spend their life times in argumentation over the number of angels who can stand on a needle point, and more specifically justifying and proving the fact that Jonah could have existed within a whale, or that the ark could have possibly held two of each species of animals, in their narrow, petty ineffiency shut themselves away from the views of the founder of their religion (with which they are so much concerned) with dogmas and creeds; they enervate whatever energy they have for good by a practice of preaching and not living. Emerson once said "I can't hear what you say, because of what you are and do."

No Christian need concern himself with dogma and interpretations, but whether or not his religion can be lived; if it cannot then the religion should be discarded for one which can. Science has no quarrel with religion, although it disagrees with a literal interpretation of the Bible. No scientist lives who has not proved the existence of Divine Law.

Howard College must bow her head with the shame of bigotry, and a sense of having failed under stress to uphold the university tradition of open mindedness and freedom of thought.

As for Dr. Day, he has the alternative of accepting a post at either Leland Stanford University or the University of Indiana. Howard College loses a courageous mind, and Dr. Day grows in prestige among the remaining liberal institutions.—J. E. D.

The National Scholarship Average for the Fraternities

According to figures issued by the National Interfraternity Council the national fraternity scholastic average for the past year was 69.969. The lowness of this average was blamed upon Columbia University, but the dean of students there ridiculed the idea that Columbia men pulled the average down, as their average was between C and B.

In the registrar's report issued here last year the average of the fraternities was a little better than a C, about the same as Columbia's, and was a slight bit higher than the average for the non-fraternity men. Certainly Carolina's average did not pull down the national fraternity average.

Among the majority of people the idea is prevalent that fraternities tend to pull down one's scholastic work; upon the campus here, however, it is commonly accepted that fraternities have little to do with a man's grade, one way or the other. Perhaps the high rating of the Carolina fraternities in scholarship is due to the fact that the most intelligent students here join fraternities.

For the national average to fall below the passing mark is a deplorable condition. Perhaps some steps should be taken in those universities where the average is so very low to remedy conditions; certainly some fraternities must be at a rock bottom for the national average to be pulled down.

We would suggest that each university confronted with the problem of low scholarship in its fraternities establish some regulation whereby groups falling below a certain level would automatically be dissolved. For a low national average reflects discredit upon the large number of fraternities that have high scholarship and are doing something to build up and maintain scholarship.—J. D. M.

FROSH WRESTLING PROSPECTS GOOD

Many High And Prep School Star Matmen Add To Strength of Team.

The outlook for the 1929 freshmen wrestlers shows another group of matmen who should be capable of equaling last year's record. Last year the team completed a very successful season without being defeated, although two of the matches resulted in draws.

The squad this year consists almost entirely of men who have not had previous experience, but a lot of hard work has been shown this fall and as a result there are several in different weights who show promise of a great future.

The squad at present is not so large but after the holidays a larger number are expected to be out for workouts. There are some good prospects out now, but sufficient material in the 115 pound weight and heavyweight is lacking.

At present Louis and Deitz are showing up well in the lightweight. In the 125 weight there are Seligman and Hine. The 135 and 145 pound weights show a variety of men who have not been classed in their proper weight. These men are Webb, Leary, Stone, Winstead, Conklin and Bradley. All have been doing good work. Just now the 155 pound weight is lacking in candidates but one or two are showing good promise. Keith and Idol are doing fine work in the 175 lb. weight. Charles Nichols is the only candidate for the unlimited weight at present.

The freshman team will have tryouts before each meet as the varsity, and each man will be given a chance to take part in the matches.

It has been customary for the frosh and varsity to hold their meets on the same trip. The freshmen match being held in the afternoon and the varsity at night. This same plan will probably be carried out this season.

The schedule for coming meets has not been fully drawn but the freshmen will probably meet such teams as V.M.I., V.P.I., Virginia, Washington and Lee and perhaps Duke.

The team has not been picked yet and all freshmen who can come out are urged to do so.

Slater High Scorer On Basketball Team

In the three games played during the week Carolina has scored 96 points. Ten men have contributed to this total, John Slater showing the way with 24 points. The players who have scored are: Slater 24, Brown 16, Harper 13, Hutchison 12, Marper 10, Cleland 10, Choate 6, Dameron 4, Race 2, Crouch 1.

SIDELIGHTS

by "Heinie"

BASKETBALL seems to have taken the spotlight in sports at the Hill for the past week. Two of the three games played fell on the credit side of the ledger for Carolina. Out of green material Coach Ashmore seems to be moulding another representative Tar Heel quintet. Brown, Marpet, and Harper are leading the U. N. C. delegation as the veterans. Several new men were tried out in the first pre-season game with Raleigh Y, and they responded well by the experience gained. Both Greensboro and Durham carried the small end of scores back to their home towns. Billy Devin and Rufus Hackney led the Durham Y. against their former team-mates but all to no avail.

THE CO-EDS have finally come to the conclusion that education may include sports as well as the classroom. The new co-ed basketball team is thought to be merely a beginning towards bigger and better women's physical activities. 'Tis a pity that this education should only center around basketball, perhaps football lore would help matters also. But perhaps the remarks about home-runs at the football games were not made by co-eds.

Second place in the Tag League received 35 points, third got 20, fourth 15, fifth 10, and sixth 5. The table with all the teams scores follow in another part of the paper.

Although at present Beta is leading by a large margin the Intramural Association wishes all other teams entered to notice that 150 of these points were amassed in the one event, the tag football league.

The same number of points will be given for winning a title in the baseball and basketball league as in the tag league, and it is expected that the Intramural Department will probably have three other events in both the spring and winter quarters.

IT WON'T BE LONG before Winter Football practice will vie with basketball for the campus spotlight in sports. Prophets will then sharpen their pencils and start writing well-founded predictions about the 1930 prospects for U. N. C. on the gridiron. These winter practices have shown up some very good prospects for the varsity from the freshmen teams in past years (so they tell me) but this year's edition of the Tar Babies will only need to supply parts of a line. Writeups of Freshmen games give Bill McDade, hefty Tar Baby tackle, individual honors on the Tar Baby squad.

Collins' Figures Out Of Reach For Georgetown School

The excitement about Chuck Collins' offer seems to be all over. Dispatches from Washington are to the effect that the figure Collins named was too steep for the Georgetown officials and accordingly they have turned elsewhere for a coach. Elmer Layden, one of the famed "Four Horsemen" of Notre Dame, and now head coach of Duquesne University, is the man under consideration. The position has been offered to Layden and the probability is that he will accept the offer.

Very few thought that Collins seriously considered taking the Georgetown post since he has everything shaped up for a good season next year and, as far as matters around the Hill stand, is sitting pretty. He has a strong squad lined up for next year and everything points to a successful season and a probable renewal of contract. It is the opinion of the News and Observer that "Chuck" was only being courteous in answering a "feeler" from Georgetown and named the high salary as the most logical way out.

Sentiment for Collins is strong around Carolina and undergraduates and alumni are apparently well satisfied with the prospect of his staying on at least until his contract runs out. The outlook for next season is more hopeful than it has been for years and a change of coaching systems might have much to do with cutting down Carolina's chances at the conference crown in 1930. With Collins in charge and with the material on hand the Tar Heels are in a good way to repeat this year's performance and come through the season on the winning side.

Makes Study of Carolina's Educational Broadcasting

George Zehmer, director of the extension department of the University of Virginia, was here yesterday in connection with a survey of educational broadcasting he is making for the national committee on educational broadcasting.

Mr. Zehmer was appointed to make the study by Secretary of the Interior Wilbur and came here to determine what was being done along this line by the extension division of the University.

Mr. Zehmer was formerly head of the department of extension teaching of the extension division of the University of North Carolina.

American Historical Society Will Hold Its Annual Meeting

Washington Duke hotel in the former place has been designated as headquarters for members of the association. In addition to the gatherings in the Washington Duke, parts of the program will be given on the Duke campus. On Tuesday, December 31, when conferences are held in Chapel Hill, the Carolina Inn will serve as headquarters.

Several members of the University faculty will figure prominently on the program. On Monday at the afternoon sessions of the Hispanic American Association William Whatley Pierson, acting dean of the graduate school, will address the assemblage on "Foreign Influences in the Political Theories of Venezuela." While at the dinner of the Mississippi Valley Historical Association Archibald Henderson, head of the mathematics department, will speak on "A Pre-Revolutionary in the Old Southwest."

On Tuesday, when the association comes to Chapel Hill, a series of discussions will be given on American social history, in Pharmacy hall; ancient history, in Bingham hall; American history, in the Playmaker theatre; English history, in Manning hall, and modern history, in the Playmaker theatre. Several of the sessions were scheduled for Gerrard hall, but, according to Mr. House of the arrangements committee, these meetings will be transferred to the Playmaker theatre.

At 12:30 there will be three luncheons. The luncheon conference on modern European history at Swain hall will be given by courtesy of the University, as will the luncheon on commemoration of the revolution in the West which will be held in the dining room of the Inn.

The joint luncheon of the Historical Association with the Agricultural History Society will be addressed, among other speakers, by J. G. deRoulhac Hamilton of the history department. He will talk on "Agricultural History Materials and Their Collection." The final session before the group returns to Durham will be a business meeting in the Playmaker theatre.

"Contemporary North Carolina" will be the subject on which Robert D. W. Connor, head of the history department, will speak before the dinner of the association in the assembly room of the Washington Duke on Tuesday evening.

The program of the meeting, copies of which were issued here on Friday, indicates that all arrangements have been satisfactorily concluded.

DUKE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE DURHAM, N. C.

campus activities, are the attributes that will be taken into consideration.

It is the consensus of opinion on the campus that this Hall of Fame will fill a crying need that has arisen at the University in recent years due to the rapid growth to the student body. Not only will this Hall of Fame bestow upon worthy students the recognition that they rightfully deserve but it will acquaint each and every student with the Who's Who of Carolina.

Season's Greetings

The 1929-30 year, to date, has been a big, eventful one for the University.

The football team won a second State title, won 9 of 10 games, placed 3rd in the Conference, set a new Tar Heel scoring average of 34.6 points a game, and placed second in the nation's scoring.

Chuck Collins became the South's "wonder coach."

The cross-country team won a fourth consecutive Southern Conference title.

The University initiated its first course in aeronautics.

Governor Gardner presented the magnificent new $625,000 library on behalf of the State.

The Playmakers won new laurels on a record Northern tour.

An unknown donor presented the University with $40,000 for its first pipe organ.

Memorial Hall was condemned, and word is that the University is to have a modern, adequate auditorium.

The Tar Heel became The Daily Tar Heel, the South's first college daily.

Officials Expect Larger Registration For Winter

Enrollment for Winter Quarter Is Expected to Exceed Number Last Fall; Registration Closes Wednesday.

While no official figures have been announced by the registrar's office, indications are that the enrollment for the winter quarter will equal if not exceed that of last fall.

The registration of freshmen shows an unusually large number of new students, who together with the normal registration of first year men returning for the second quarter, are expected to swell the freshman class total to around 800.

With late arrivals still coming in, it is possible that when registration for the winter quarter closes tomorrow, a record enrollment for that quarter may be set.

Due to finances, failures, and transfers, the enrollment of upperclassmen, most of whom registered before the holidays, appears to be slightly less than that of the fall quarter. This loss will be offset to an extent, however, by the return of many old students and teachers who work half the year in order to attend school the winter and spring quarters.

A conservative estimate would place the total registration for the winter quarter at around 2600.

The smallest man at the University is Billy Arthur of Charlotte, who is known to radio and vaudeville audiences as "One Yard of Fun," because of the fact that he is only three feet tall. Billy comes to Carolina as a freshman from Charlotte Central High, where he graduated in 1928. Last year he spent in vaudeville work, touring the south with the Keith circuit and the north with Loew's circuit. He is registered for an A. B. degree in the school of journalism.

Lang To Address Assembly Tonight

The Phi assembly will open its winter quarter's program with a meeting tonight in New East building. Speaker John Lang will open the meeting with his inaugural address. He will appoint the standing committees for the quarter and will name a number of special officers. The regular business will be transacted.

The resolution to be discussed is "Resolved, that the executive committee of the Democratic party in North Carolina would be justified in reading Senator Simmons out of the Democratic party."

Speaker Lang requests that all members of the assembly be present. He states that several important announcements will be made. The meeting convenes at 7:15 o'clock.

U. D. C. Meets Today

The U. D. C. will meet with Mrs. A. A. Klutz today at 3:30 P. M. Mrs. Harry Comer will review Allen Tate's "Life of Jefferson Davis." All members are urged to be present.

Yackety Yack Notice

There will be a meeting of the business staff of the Yackety Yack tonight at 7 o'clock. All members and new men are asked to be present.

Buccaneer Notice

An important meeting of the editorial staff of the Buccaneer will be held today at 5 o'clock in the basement of Alumni building.

UNIVERSITY TOUR TO FRANCE AGAIN

J. C. Lyons To Manage Trip for Third Successive Year.

Final arrangements for the third University residential tour to France have been completed, and the membership of the group is beginning to be made up. The itinerary includes France, Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium and England, with the longest stops in Paris, Rome and London.

For those who are interested in the study of French, a month's residence is provided in the university city of Grenoble in the French Alps. An ideal summer climate is thus combined with an opportunity for study at one of France's leading universities. Those who are interested in taking courses for college credit in this country will find two courses offered by the director of the group.

For those who would like to accompany this group, but are not interested in study, a special program has been provided during the time that the study group is in residence at Grenoble. This program includes additional time in Paris, and automobile trips through southern France and over the French Riviera.

The great feature of next summer in Europe is that spectacle which is to be seen but once every ten years, the Passion Play at Oberammergau. The U. N. C. group will see a performance as one of the high spots of the sojourn in Germany. In short, almost nothing of major interest in western Europe is omitted from the program.

Any students at the University who are considering a trip to Europe next summer may arrange to do so by applying to Professor J. C. Lyons of the romance language department. Many variations and combinations on the itinerary are possible for those who want to do some things that are not included in the group's program.

Esperanto Club Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Esperanto club today at 5 o'clock in Murphey hall. At that time Esperanto grammars, which were received by Dr. Metzenthin, will be issued to those people who ordered them.

Sophomore Chapel

Definite arrangements concerning attendance at sophomore chapel were announced yesterday in chapel by Dean F. F. Bradshaw. The sophomores will meet on Monday as usual, thus allowing a total of ten meetings this quarter. Of this number only three cuts will be allowed, since three amounts to about the same percentage as granted when sophomores attended twice a week.

ODUM SELECTED AS PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL GROUP

University Professor Chosen To Head American Sociological Society.

Dr. Howard W. Odum, director of the University school of public welfare and one of the country's foremost sociologists, was elected president of the American Sociological Society at the closing session of the annual meeting of the association in Washington on December 30.

The election of Dr. Odum, who succeeds Dr. W. F. Ogburn of the University of Chicago, brings the presidency to the south for the first time.

Dr. Odum is a native of Georgia. He was educated at Emory University, University of Mississippi, Clark University and Columbia University. Before coming to North Carolina almost ten years ago he was dean of the college of liberal arts at Emory. In addition to his work in the school of public welfare, Dr. Odum heads the University institute for research in social science and the department of sociology. He is also managing editor of Social Forces, a sociological magazine of national circulation, and the author of a number of books and brochures dealing with sociological subjects.

Dr. Odum is a member of the committee of five noted sociologists recently appointed by President Hoover to make a study of significant social changes in American life.

Following his election by the body, Dr. Odum has announced that the general subject of the 1930 meeting of the society will deal with the conflict of cultures. The plans will provide for a joint meeting with the American Statistical Society, the American Economic Association,

David Lawrence Selected To Speak at Sixth Annual Newspaper Institute Which Meets Here January 15, 16, 17.

David Lawrence, editor and founder of the United States Daily, will deliver the principal address at the sixth annual newspaper institute which is to be held here January 15, 16 and 17 under the auspices of the North Carolina Press Association and the University.

Mr. Lawrence now writes a daily dispatch on national affairs. He began newspaper work on the Buffalo Express in 1903 before entering Princeton University, joining the Associated Press after his graduation in 1910. In 1915 he became special correspondent of the New York Evening Post.

STUDENTS ASSUME MANAGEMENT DRY CLEANING PLANT

Two students, Royal Brown and William Carbine, have recently undertaken the management of the Carolina Dry Cleaning establishment and announce complete renovation of the plant.

Brown and Carbine assumed control of the establishment the first of the year. However, extensive plans had been made for enlarging the plant and improving the service. A new pressing machine was installed and a dry cleaner from Charlotte with 18 years' experience engaged. According to the management the fastest dry cleaning service in town is available at the Carolina Dry Cleaners. A five-hour service is guaranteed.

Besides the new dry cleaner another experienced presser has been engaged. The plant now has five men working. Jobs are called for and delivered all hours of the day until 7 o'clock in the evening.

Directory Notice

All new students and students who have changed their addresses within the past month or more are especially requested to call by the Y office and leave a note of their change.

Student Coupon Books

The Athletic Association coupon books for the winter quarter may be had upon presentation of the receipted tuition bill to the Business Office on Wednesday morning.

STATE REALTORS WILL MEET HERE

First Convention of This Kind To Assemble February 12.

Realtors from all sections of the state will gather here February 12 and 13 for a real estate institute to be held under the auspices of the North Carolina association of real estate boards and the extension division of the University of North Carolina.

It will be the first such institute to be held in this state. The institute will take the form of a sales conference. John Berge, sales counselor of the national association of real estate boards, will be in charge. The conference will be a school for those engaged in the real estate business.

Arrangements have been made for visiting realtors to spend the night in Chapel Hill during the progress of the conference.

"The program provides for two days of intensive study of our work," one member of the committee on arrangements said yesterday. "No man in the real estate business in North Carolina can afford to miss it."

Intensive educational work of this type has been performed at similar conferences in a number of other states, notably at Rutgers University, where the fourth has just been held, and the attendance at each has steadily increased.

Although this will be the first conference of the kind in North Carolina, it is regarded as highly probable that it will become an annual event.

As part of the conference realtors in attendance will be permitted to ask questions concerning problems in which they are particularly interested. In fact, questions and answers are expected to constitute one of the most important phases of the program.

President Montana College Visits Here

Dr. S. E. Davis, president of the Montana State Normal College, was a visitor at the home of Dr. and Mrs. E. R. Mosher last Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 4-5. Dr. Davis is the author of several well known books on education.

Grail Dance Saturday

There will be a Grail Dance in Bynum Gymnasium Saturday, January 11. Music will be furnished by The Carolina Buccaneers. This orchestra has established a good reputation and the dance is expected to be an exceptionally good one on account of the large crowd of girls expected down for the week end. Tickets will go on sale at the rear of the gymnasium at exactly 8:30 P. M. Only a limited number will be sold.

Lack of Adequate Hall for Performances Causes Cancellation Of Scheduled Appearance Here.

Sir Ben Greet and his company of actors, who are making a nation-wide tour, enacting many of Shakespeare's plays, will be unable to appear at the University tonight because of the lack of a proper stage and auditorium, it was announced yesterday by the Student Entertainment Committee, of which Dean Addison Hibbard is chairman.

The Tin Can has proved to be too cold for entertainments of this nature and Swain hall, the only other large building that could possibly house the large audience, has not sufficient stage accomodations for a stage performance of Shakespeare's plays.

Although definite arrangements about the contract have not, as yet, been made, the Ben Greet players will give the performance scheduled for the University of North Carolina at Hollins College in Virginia.

Ben Greet, who recently celebrated his fiftieth year on the English stage, and who has been knighted by King George, brought his troupe over from England for the first time and at the performance he gave in New York, was greeted enthusiastically by the press.

In the eventuality that Memorial hall will be fit for occupancy or that other means will be found so that the celebrated English group of actors may produce their work under suitable conditions, they will be seen here during the Spring quarter. The Student Entertainment Committee may secure prominent lecturers to speak here during February as a feature that will compensate for the loss of the Ben Greet players.

High School Debate Query Announced By Executive Committee

According to an announcement made recently by E. R. Rankin, secretary of the high school debating union, the annual high school debate tournament this spring will have the following query: "Resolved, that North Carolina should adopt the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the classification of property for taxation."

The question as to whether North Carolina should adopt the proposed amendment authorizing the classification of property for taxation is a matter of public importance in the state at present. Under the present constitutional requirements property in North Carolina is taxed by uniform rules whether it be tangible or intangible.

The following students and faculty members compose the executive committee which has been selected to conduct the preliminary debates between those teams which will come to Chapel Hill in April to compete for the Aycock medal by virtue of having won on both sides of the question in previous preliminaries: N. W. Walker, chairman; E. R. Rankin, secretary; L. R. Wilson, D. D. Carroll, George McKie, E. R. Hamer, J. C. Williams, H. H. Hobgood, R. M. Albright, H. B. Parker, Garland McPherson, J. E. Dungan and J. H. Anderson.

Tar Heel Topics

Whatever you may say about Andy Mellon, you've got to admit that he is in Art Shires' class as a publicity getter.

Five days of the quarter gone and not a single fraternity house burned! Chapel Hill must not be as hot as it was last quarter.

Registration this quarter will be the largest in the University's history, according to stories sent out by the News Bureau. Maybe the trustees and the legislators will remember that we are still auditoriumless when they read those stories.

Bobwhite Linker, of the Romance Language faculty, is authority for this one: a University student included in his outside readings, when asked to list them on the final examination last quarter "Rabelais, but I don't remember who wrote it."

Chicago has dismissed 473 cops because of reductions in the city's 1930 budget. Judging from past performances in the Windy City, a few hundred cops more or less won't make any difference; no one pays any attention to cops in Chicago anyway.

The Post-Holiday Depression

An atmosphere of confusion pervades the campus after every protracted vacation period, especially during the first week following the Christmas and summer holidays. Classes are frequently shifted from room to room and from building to building, courses are dropped and others substituted, rooming and boarding places are changed—the entire machinery of the "diploma mill' is temporarily out of gear. It is not surprising that the student, returning from the careless freedom of the holidays to face the wearying ordeal of registration and the necessity of accustoming himself to a new schedule, should react unfavorably to the scholastic environment, perhaps find himself regarding with aversion the process politely termed "getting an education."

This post-holiday dejection usually wears itself out after the first three or four days of the new quarter and is succeeded by content with or resignation to the accepted scholastic order of things as the student settles down to a more or less pleasant routine. But sometimes, in the case of the individual who is particularly sensitive to his environment and who experiences difficulty in orientating himself to changes, this initial period of dejection continues until it brings about a condition bordering upon melancholia. A distaste for his new courses and an active dislike for the men who conduct them, entirely irrespective of the real attraction these courses and professors may possess for him, is engendered in the individual. Thus a perfectly natural mental condition that is almost inevitable for a brief period may persist until it proves disastrous to an entire quarter's work, even wreck an entire college career.

The post-holiday period of melancholy is highly dangerous. Many of us fall under its influence without making a concious effort to free ourselves from it or to logically determine its basic causes. Strenuous efforts to "snap out of it" are often necessary if decidedly harmful effects are to be avoided.

The New Year

The Christmas holiday season has come and gone. Another year is ahead. The charms of the old year are passed away. The new year in all of its hopefulness and optimism greets old and young, rich and poor, alike. 'Tis time now to begin to put customary new year's resolutions into effect.

At this time of the year there can be no doubt that "hope springs eternally from the breast of mortal man." Time and again when the darkest moments of despair visit the individual he sees, even though it be in fancy, better times, better luck, and greater opportunities for success in the dawning. Indeed, mortal man could not endure the dull, drear, drab realities of a life governed by natural laws of unchangeable consequences were it not for the balm of hope that never fails to flow to him in the darkest hours of his earthly pilgrimage.

To say the least, there is one advantage inherent in this customary two-week recess in the process of getting an education. Reference is made here to the absence from the monotony of classroom work and extracurricular activities—the absence from humdrum duties which never fail to engender a monotony and a dread of the ruinous variety. It is essential that the strain of student life be relieved periodically. The Christmas recess, moreover, affords both the occasion and the opportunity to meditate and ponder over the successes and failures of the old year.

We all have time, and plenty of it; the length of the day is universal. Yet some accomplish great things, while others know not the satisfaction which accompanies success. We refer to college students in particular when we say that all too much time is spent in pursuing that which is not worthy of pursuit, that which is ill-advised and shamefully unprofitable. Much time is spent in striving to secure things which are non-essential. The past period of vacation and rest from college duties has given such persons an opportunity to come into a realization of what has been worthy in their activities of the old year, what has been futile, and the resultant idea of what should be sought in 1930.

To him who has let the past twelve months slide by without accomplishing anything worthy of note another year, a new year, opens her gateway of opportunity just as wide as to those who have done great things in 1929. There is still time to gather up the loose ends; outgrow the shortcomings of the old year; and hit the stride which will do credit to the new year, 1930.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

IN DEFENSE OF WOODROW WILSON

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I have read the article "Ten Million White Crosses" that appeared in the December 14 issue of the Tar Heel. Such ignorance, or failure to face the facts as they exist, as Mr. Cook has shown, is, to put it lightly, pathetic. Mr. Cook contends that the J. P. Morgan Co., Myron T. Herrick, and William G. Sharp dissuaded France from making peace in the latter part of 1914; they said that they would stir up propaganda in the United States against Germany and in sympathy with France. I neither affirm nor deny that they tried to stir up such sentiment in America, for I do not know the facts; but I do deny that any such propaganda was responsible for the participation of America in the World War. In what way could sentiment in America, if it were incited to its highest pitch, influence Germany to begin a submarine warfare against this nation? Propaganda or no propaganda, our sentiment against Germany and in sympathy with France was justified. We desired no conflict with Germany, but when our freedom of the seas was denied us by the Imperial German Government, then, and only then, did we take up arms against her. We were fighting "for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts,—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their government, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free."

Yet there are many that accuse Woodrow Wilson, the greatest President that "the land of the free and the home of the brave" has ever known, of being responsible for the whole war. It is true that Wilson was elected in 1916 on a platform that declared "he kept us out of war." As a matter of fact, we should have had war sooner, but only after all means of conciliation has been tried and proved worthless, did Wilson ask for a declaration of war. Suppose we had not entered the conflict at all? In what regard would the United States be held by the rest of the world? We would have been looked upon with ridicule, and our name would have been trampled under the feet of the other people of the world. Theodore Roosevelt said that he would have entered the war when the Lusitania was sunk. But not Wilson. Only after he saw that the conflict was inevitable did he break diplomatic relations with Germany.

For many months all the world looked to Wilson as its deliverer. He bore the responsibility of almost all the allied nations. He carried America through to victory. After the Armistice was signed Wilson went to France to attempt to outlaw war forever. While there, his own people, inconsiderate for political reasons, turned against him. He did his best and will so be awarded hereafter. I once heard a speaker describe the departure of Wilson from France for America. Everybody seemed to be looking in the direction of an automobile. All the people boisterously called for Wilson. After a short while, a man with a haggard look in his face, a troubled look spread all over his countenance, and a look of friendship in his eyes, stepped from a car, and with a wave of his silk hat, bid the French an affectionate farewell. That, gentle readers, was Woodrow Wilson coming back to America to be called a fool by his own people. To be called a fool, however, is the price of greatness, and when all his bitterest denouncers are marked by unknown graves, Woodrow Wilson will be remembered as the greatest President that the United States ever had. To deny his right to such a place of prominence in the world is to make honor, achievement, and duty well done a thing of perniciousness.

New Music Composed For 'Hark The Sound'

The new music for "Hark the Sound" has been recently completed and is now in the hands of the music department.

Because the traditional song was not original, the glee club could not use it in the national contests. Moreover, Mr. H. S. Dyer, director, has found from experience that many contests have been won or lost on the strength of the school alma maters, which alone count twenty per cent of the contest score.

The glee club officers thus voted for a special arrangement by the leading American composer, Arthur Edward Johnstone.

Mr. Dyer says the song is very melodic, possessing a real vigor and style, which should put it above other alma maters.

The song is to be typewritten immediately, and will be published at Chicago in a new book of leading college songs.

The text is the same as that of the old song, and the music is so written that the part, "I'm a Tar Heel born" etc. can be added as before.

Church Secretary Here

Miss Priscilla Chase, secretary of the congregational church in the Carolinas, is working here with the United Congregational church. Miss Chase has been here for the last two weeks helping complete the union of the Christian and Congregational churches. She will be at the Carolina Inn for the next ten days, and she is especially anxious to see any members of the student body who are interested in the United Congregational church.

Merely Meandering

john mebane

Christmas is over and the pure snow (through which we walked twenty damned miles a day carrying mail) has disappeared like perfume wafted away on a great breeze. Dejection gnaws the very marrow of our bones, transfixes the white of them, and casts us down into fetid sloughs of dismalness. Eight-thirty classes leer at us over edges of icicles and beckon with frost-nipped fingers. And on top of all that, we haven't had a bite to eat since breakfast.

The Copy Cat of the N. C. C. W. Carolinian recently made satirical remarks in her column concerning the "editorial trios at Carolina and Duke which have been so ardently advocating brotherly love since the Press Convention." But while a feline solo may put to shame the harmonies of a pair of trios, the fact remains that the alliance of a trio from Carolina with one from Duke isn't a commonplace occurrence to be treated satirically—it's a miracle!

A columnist on a college weekly in this state recently used half a column singing the praises of the editor and the other half lauding herself. Columnists are funny that way.

We haven't enough space in this column to praise the editor.

And besides, what does he think the editorial columns in a college paper are for?

We planned yesterday to take up golf; and we borrowed three golf balls and a club from the editor of the tar heel. But after losing the trio of balls and breaking the club, we decided to give it up in favor of taking up collection.

And all we collected was the scorn of the editor and a bill for a new set of golf balls.

William J. Horney, our fast friend from Greensboro, who happened to be along with us as personal advisor, told us that we were a little stiff. That started the fight.

It's all right for the teacher to correct the student, but when he starts calling names that's a different matter.

Ken Gay, track star extraordinary, came trotting along when we were in the middle of our game and, observing that Bill had turned from boxing to golf, shrieked out "sissy!" Bill ran one way and we ran the other, tearing our trousers as we climbed the fence.

Golf is all right; but from now on we stick to checkers.

And at the end of the college year, we'll probably have a pretty checkered career.

But nothing much matters now that we have passed Geology 2.

Glee Club Begins Intensive Training

The University glee club will begin its winter work, especially preparing for the south atlantic contest to be held in Greenville, S. C., February 7.

Membership in the glee club is open to any student or University attache. H. S. Dyer, director, stated that as fast as new material can be developed, it will be added to the regular group.

Several men who sang in the glee club during past years but who have been too busy to do so the last quarter, indicated they would again join the squad.

Mr. Dyer emphasized that students should take advantage of the free system of voice training offered them here. The class schedule this quarter is Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, from 4:30 to 6 o'clock. Many from these voice classes are admitted to the glee club, and those not picked in the regular group have access to the library and other facilities of the music department.

Three Aspirants For Wrestling Team Away On Co-op Duties

Coach Quinlan Must Fill Six of Eight Positions With New Material.

The excellent prospects for the 1930 wrestling season were blasted by the information that three lettermen will not be available part of the season due to scholastic requirements. The three men—George Thompson, heavyweight; Marion Cowper, 165-pound division, and Roy Moore, 155-pound division—are all junior engineering students and will be forced to spend half the quarter away on co-operative work.

With men returning to fill five of the eight divisions prospects were exceptionally bright for a great season in wrestling. However, upon the reopening of the University for the winter quarter the announcement came that three of the lettermen would be away during the season. Thompson is away now and will not be available for the hard meets with Duke, Navy and Princeton. These meets are considered three of the hardest during the season. Moore and Cowper will leave during the middle of the season and will miss the final meet with V. M. I. and the Conference tournament at Lexington March 1.

In the light weights two excellent prospects are back, Captain Woodward, 125- pound star, and Stallings for the 115-pound weight. Other men with experience are Albright and Zealy in the 135-pound class; Ferguson, 175-pound letterman, who will probably take over Thompson's place in the heavyweight division with Cowper doing work in the 175-pound class; Saunders and Tsumas in the 145-pound division, and Houghton and Hushner in the 165-pound division.

With the loss of these three men Coach Quinlan is anxious to have new men come out regardless of their experience. The University this year is engaging its hardest schedule and is bidding for a national reputation against Navy and Princeton. Practice is being conducted every afternoon at the Tin Can.

TAR HEEL QUINT TO OPEN SEASON IN GREENSBORO

Return of Neiman and Edwards Strengthens University Court Team; Face Stiff Schedule.

With Dave Neiman and John Edwards now eligible, Coach Jim Ashmore is hoping to be able to present a much smoother working offensive when the Tar Heel quint makes its appearance at Greensboro with the Y team as opponent next Friday night.

Both Neiman and Edwards had to drop out of school the last quarter due to illness, but reports are that the fast forward and center are both in good shape now.

Their return to the squad should help things a great deal. The Tar Heels have won three of four pre-season practice games against nearby Y teams, but their offensive showing was far from pleasing to Coach Ashmore.

Neiman is perhaps the fastest and the best floor man of the men who reported as forward candidates at the beginning of practice.

Edwards is big and rangy and able to back up Harper at center, so Coach Ashmore can shift Dameron over to forward.

Track Notice

All men interested in varsity track are requested to report to Coach Dale Ranson this afternoon between 3 and 5:30 o'clock at Emerson Field.

FRESHMAN TRACK PROSPECTS GOOD

Cinder Coaches Have Excellent Material; Much Disclosed In Cake Race, Novice Track Meet And Gym Tests.

Prospects for a strong freshman track team this year are bright judging from the amount of promising material uncovered thus far. The cake race, novice meet, and the gym tests have enabled the coaches to gain a fair estimate of the material they will have to work with this spring.

In the sprints Bob Drane, Lewis Whitehead, N. J. Bonner, Ellis Dudley, W. B. Ridenhour, J. F. Geiger, and W. V. Shepherd have good records. Drane was a member of the mile relay team from McCallie School, which won this event in the Southern Prep School meet held here last year.

Mitcham, Evans, Watkins and Brock are veterans in the 440. Mitcham and Evans placed first for Charlotte High School in the state meet here last year. Watkins and Brock were members of the McCallie mile relay team last year.

In the distance runs Clarence Jensen, who led the freshman cross country team this year heads the list. Jones, winner of the mile run in the state high school meet here last year, and member of the freshman cross country team, Cordle, member of the freshman cross country team, and Watkins, winner of the cake race show promise. Others who have creditable records are: Stikeleather, Cox, Lumpkin, Zelly, Caldwell, Pratt, Hamilton, Singletary, Boyd, Hanscome, Leonard, and Hirsch.

Davis, Ridenhour, Whitehead, Stafford, and Dudley show promise in the hurdles. Davis won the high hurdles for Woodbury Forest in the Southern Prep School meet here last year.

Stuart Chandler, with a 170 foot javelin throw to his credit is the most promising looking of the javelin throwers. Morrison and Olivirio showed up well in the novice meet. Thomas, Griffith, Watkins, Sexton and Howard, had the best marks in the gym tests.

In the high jump Newland and Rowland, with jumps of 5 feet three inches in the novice track meet, and Howard, with 5 feet three in the gym tests, have the best performance thus far. Bennett, Vinson, and Gidney are showing up well.

Martindale and Crumpler each give promise of clearing 11 feet in the pole vault before the season is over. Harrell has a good mark to his credit in this event.

In the broad jump Watkins, Howard, Ridenhour, and Dunn turned in the best marks in the gym tests.

Basketball Notice

All candidates for positions as sub-assistant manager of the basketball team are requested to report to the manager's office at Emerson stadium at once.

Where?—In Tar Heel Ads.

(Sports Editor)

SPORTS AT CAROLINA seem to be almost nil as far as news is concerned at present. Both varsity and freshman basketball are well under way and varsity and freshman track has settled down for a winter's grind. The gridiron warriors seem to be idle at present but winter practice is expected to start in a few days.

COLD WEATHER will probably drive the golf and tennis teams indoors or out of practice a good part of the winter quarter. Boxing and wrestling will vie with basketball for the spotlight, while co-ed athletics are also expected to get started soon.

RECENT ADDITIONS to the varsity basketball squad raise Carolina's chances for a successful season. Nevertheless, it is generally conceded that the Tar Heels' chances are much lower this year than last. Recent performances by the Duke and N. C. State quintets show the weakness of the Tar Heel team. Against the same teams the Blue Devils and Wolfpack almost doubled the score made by the Tar Heels. However this was at a time when the University was still waiting for some of last year's reserves to return. At the beginning of the 1929 season the Tar Heels showed a weak team but rounded out fast to defeat Duke, runners up for the S. I. C. title.

BOXING AND WRESTLING got off to a flying start last quarter, but have been slowed down due to loss of material. Captain Archie Allen is leading the 1930 mitmen in preparation to defend their Southern Conference title. However, the loss of Evan Vaughn and Obie Davis somewhat weakened their chances. The wrestling team is weakened by the loss of material that will be away on engineering co-op work. The most important of these matmen are Moore and Cowper who will be away for the final meet with V. M. I. and the first annual conference tourney at V. M. I. March 1. Thompson is away now and will not be available for the hard meets with Duke, Navy and Princeton that feature the first half of the schedule. It is expected that Ferguson, 175-pound letterman, will be shifted to Thompson's heavy berth. Cowper will fill Ferguson's place while he is here.

TRACK PROSPECTS are brighter this year than in any other recent years with such outstanding sprint men as Gay, Farmer, Slusser and Erickson. Captain Dave Nims will lead the 1930 cinder path team in an attempt to wrest the Southern Conference laurels from Louisiana U. Last year the Tar Heels were forced into second place by a small margin.

Y SELF HELP BUREAU HAS STUDENT CARPENTER

The self-help bureau of the Y announces that there is at present a boy available who is able to do any sort of carpentering work. Heretofore there have been many that could do this work, but not until now has there been a student that had his own tools. This student is capable of doing any sort of work along this line, and the bureau states that all persons who have any work of this type to be done can call at the self-help bureau and secure this student.

ASHMORE SEEKS SMOOTHNESS IN TAR HEEL TEAM

Shifts Made In Effort To Present Faster Combination Against Collegiate Competition On Courts.

Search for a smooth working combination for the regular Tar Heel five was continued yesterday by Coach Ashmore with the actual opening of the season only four days away. Various changes at every post featured the practice.

The latest shift found Jenks Hutchinson, star freshman forward of last year, back at his old berth after a trial at a guard position. During the pre-Christmas practice games, this fast rookie was run at forward, but after taking stock of his guard material, Coach Ashmore decided that Hutchinson's chances were better at forward.

Two veteran guards, remnants of last year's team, are expected to hold down the opposition's score. Artie Marpet and Billy Brown are the two regulars. Pushing them for the guard positions are Page Choate and Tom Alexander, a reserve combination that should find plenty of action during the strenuous schedule.

Outlook for the forward positions are not so promising. Five or six claimants for these posts seem to show about average ability. With the return of Dave Neiman and Tom Alexander to school after the Christmas vacations, the fight for these berths has become more intense.

The regular season will be opened with a return engagement against Greensboro Y Friday night in the Piedmont city and the first collegiate game against the Davidson quintet in Charlotte Saturday night.

W. T. SHORE WILL HEAD UNIVERSITY ALUMNI OFFICERS

Officials Alumni Association Elected by Ballots Before Holidays; Patterson and Laughinghouse Are Vice-Presidents.

W. T. Shore, prominent Charlotte lawyer, has been re-elected president of the General Alumni Association of the University for 1930, it was announced here Saturday by J. Maryon Saunders, secretary of the association.

Mr. Shore was elected over F. L. Carr of Wilson, the other nominee. The election was conducted by mail, the ballots having been sent out following the meeting of the General Alumni Assembly here.

Mr. Shore has been actively connected with alumni activities. He was president of the association for 1929, is a member of the Alumni Loyalty Fund Council, and is secretary of the class of 1905. While a student at the University, he was editor of the Tar Heel and a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

Other officers elected by the Association included Dr. J. C. Patterson of New Bern, who defeated J. G. Adams of Asheville as first vice-president, and Dr. C. O'H. Laughinghouse of Raleigh, who won over Lawrence S. Holt of Asheville as second vice-president.

Dr. Foy P. Roberson, Durham, was re-elected without opposition as alumni representative on the athletic council for a three-year term.

The tallying committee consisted of Carl T. Durham, T. S. Howard and A. M. Covington.

All of these officers, with the exception of the alumni representative on the athletic council, are for one year. They are to take up the duties of their offices immediately.

Delta Tau Delta To Have New Government

The national organization of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity made an innovation in fraternity administration recently when it created a plan of alumni supervision of all chapters of the society. Local standing committees of influential alumni will be formed.

According to Harold D. Meyer of the University faculty, who is the advisor of the local chapter of that fraternity, the group will visit the fraternity once every three months. In creating the committee the officials of Delta Tau Delta hope to strengthen relationships between the graduates and active members and to give the chapter the benefit of the experience of older men in various fraternity problems.

The membership of the group includes Mr. Meyer, C. T. Boyd, a lawyer of Greensboro, C. D. Beers, of the zoology department; Tyre C. Taylor, secretary to the governor of North Carolina; W. H. Andrews, of the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company of Greensboro; and Dewey Dorsett, a member of the State Industrial Commission in Raleigh.

University Press To Announce List Of Publications

The University Press intends to announce its book list for spring publications at an early date. Meanwhile, "The Life of Miranda" by William Spence Robertson, the tenth book of the fall series, is expected to arrive from the printers within ten days. A specially bound edition of this volume, composed of 90 copies, will be issued.

Robertson was in Chapel Hill and visited the Press during the convention of the American Historical Association last month.

During the holiday period copies of Sales' "The Tree Named John" and of "The Virginia Plutarch," by Alexander Bruce, sold exceptionally well. These are the latest books by the Press.

A renewal of interest in some of the problems presented in "The American Scholar" written by Norman Foerster and published by the Press, was manifested at the meeting of the Modern Language Association in Cleveland, Ohio, in December. Mr. Foerster, a member of the University faculty, treated numerous problems of instruction and scholarship in his book, which was involved in a great deal of controversy in the discussions of the association.

Mitmen Have Stiff Schedule for Winter

The Tar Heel varsity mitmen are now working hard in preparation for one of the hardest schedules ever undertaken by a Carolina ring squad. The highlights of the season are the matches with Penn State, last year's national intercollegiate A. A. champions, Virginia, and the Southern Conference championships to be held at the University of Virginia February 28 to March 1.

Penn State, coached by Leo Houck, well known referee and an experienced trainer of professional boxers, who was once among the leaders in the light-heavyweight class, presents a stiff test for the Tar Heel squad. Ever since their entrance into the intercollegiate A. A. boxing tournaments, Penn State has practically alternated with Navy in winning the championship. Much of their success in this sport is due to the fact that more than 100 men try out for the team each year.

Led by Captain Epstein, 115 N. I. A. A. champion, the Pennsylvanians should provide a red hot match when they meet in the ring with such good men as Captain Archie Allen, Warren, Davis, Goodridge, Vaughn and Sheffield of North Carolina.

The University was represented at the recent convention by Dr. Odum; Dr. Katharine Jocher, assistant director of the institute; Dr. Lee M. Dr. Brooks had a place on the program, reading a paper on "The New Mobility and the Coastal Island."

HISTORICAL MEET ENTERTAINED BY LOCAL COLLEGES

University and Duke Joint Hosts To American Historical Association Convention.

The annual meetings of the American Historical Association were held in Durham and Chapel Hill from December 31 to January 1, approximately 600 delegates attending the meetings.

The program began Monday morning at 10:30 with a joint session of the National Council for Social Studies and the American Historical Association. Guy S. Ford of the University of Minnesota presided, while A. C. Krey of the University of Minnesota and Truman L. Kelly of Stanford University were the speakers.

At a luncheon conference on social studies in the schools Edgar Dawson of Hunter College led the discussion. J. Fred Rippey of Duke University presided at the same time at a luncheon conference on "Hispanic American History."

Dr. James Harvey Robinson, noted historian and lecturer and president of the association, spoke that night at 8:30 in the Duke University auditorium. After his speech the delegates attended a smoker.

On Tuesday, December 31, all the meetings of the association were held in Chapel Hill. Five sections, meeting at different places on the Carolina campus at 10 o'clock, dealt with history in general. Each of these sections was presided over by noted men, who had become famous in their particular branch of history.

The last meetings of the association were held Wednesday on the Duke campus. During the morning each section held its last meeting, while at 12:30 four luncheon meetings were held for the different sections. The concluding meetings of the association were held at 2 o'clock.

TRUSTEES WILL DECIDE FATE OF MEMORIAL HALL

Final decision as to the fate of Memorial hall will be made this month by the University trustees. At a meeting of the executive committee held shortly before the Christmas holidays in Governor Gardner's office no action was taken.

STUDENTS FREED FROM BLAME FOR CHRISTMAS FIRE

Dr. R. E. Coker Says Insinuating Statements Unfair To Chi Psi Fraternity.

Student members of the University chapter of the Chi Psi fraternity, whose house was destroyed Christmas night by fire of unknown origin, have been done an injustice by the recent report of the State Insurance Commission, Dr. Robert E. Coker, a faculty member of the chapter, said today.

Dr. Coker takes issue with the statement of Dan C. Boney, insurance commissioner, that the house, which was insured for $9,000 had a value estimated at from $4,500 to $5,000. Dr. Coker says the estimated value of the house was around $12,000. Commissioner Boney's conclusions were based on a report made by W. A. Scott, who made the investigation for the department.

Dr. Coker further stated that the report that a number of the students rooming in the house had removed their trunks before the holidays was without foundation.

"Twelve students were rooming in the house before Christmas, but so far as I can learn only two of them removed their trunks before the holidays," Dr. Coker said. "These two said they did so because the house was robbed during the holidays a year ago and they preferred not to take chances. On the other hand, two other students who were planning to live in the house after Christmas, moved their things there before the holidays and lost them in the fire."

Dr. Coker said that all of the private records pictures, and emblems of the fraternity, as well as the furnishings, were lost in the fire.

"I was glad to see the statement of Commissioner Boney in which he said that "we are not insinuating that the members of the fraternity or any particular

The papers submitted should be between 1,500 and 2,500 words in length and must be delivered or mailed to the commission not later than May 1.

According to the announcement the subject has been chosen "because it furnishes a common ground on which all may stand." The purpose of the study is to lead college men and women to inquire into conditions existing between the white and colored people of America.

A list of subjects for study are given and sources of information on the subjects are included in the announcement of the contest.

Inquiries concerning the contest should be directed to R. B. Eleazer, 409 Palmer Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Y CABINETS MEET FOR FIRST TIME SINCE HOLIDAYS

The freshman, sophomore, and junior-senior cabinets of the Y met last Monday night for the first time this quarter. The meetings were held in the respective rooms of the cabinets in the Y at 7:15.

Aubrey Perkins, presiding in the absence of the president, opened the freshman program. After Mr. Perkins had told of the unfortunate mishap of Alex Webb, the cabinet voted to send him some sort of gift which was to bought by a free will offering of each member. Since Webb will be unable to attend school this quarter, the cabinet elected Jimmie Kurfees as temporary president. After announcing about the Human Relations Institute that will be held here next year, and after making an announcement concerning the Blue Ridge conference next summer, Mr. Perkins outlined a few plans for the coming quarter. The meeting then closed with sentence prayers.

The program for the sophomore cabinet consisted mainly of business. All the plans for the coming quarter were thoroughly discussed. The meeting was closed with a word of prayer by Grady Leonard.

The junior-senior cabinet also had a very important business meeting, discussing some of the features on the Y program for the winter and spring quarters. A word of prayer closed the meeting.

NOTED ALUMNUS TO SPEAK HERE

Judge J. Crawford Biggs To Address Law School Students Thursday.

Judge J. Crawford Biggs of Raleigh will deliver an address on "Practice in the Federal Courts" Thursday at 11 o'clock in the first year room in Manning hall. Judge Biggs is one of the leading members of the bar at Raleigh and he has been identified with a great deal of the important litigation of the Federal courts of this state.

He graduated at this University summa cum laude in 1893. He was editor of the Tar Heel and a member of the varsity football team during his student career. After his graduation he was for a time a member of the law faculty of this University and later of the law faculty at Trinity. Subsequently he was a judge of the superior court for four years and during the Wilson administration he was special assistant to the attorney general of the United States.

Ever since he won the Mangum medal while a student here, he has been noted as an interesting and attractive speaker. All students in the University are invited to hear his address.

Saville Photographs Wilmington Section

Thorndike Saville, professor of sanitary and hydraulic engineering, made what is believed to be the first series of air maps for any branch of the state government when he took pictures from an airplane Saturday of the section of beach from Wilmington south to the Cape Fear river.

These air pictures were made for the water resources division of the department of conservation and development in connection with its beach studies.

Professor Saville flew to Wilmington from Raleigh with an aerial photographer from the Curtiss Flying service at Raleigh, and made the pictures during the afternoon. He returned to Raleigh the following day.

An American Folk Drama Being Developed Here At University

(By Frederick H. Koch)

I have been asked to write something about my adventures in playmaking and about the Carolina folk-plays written by our young playwrights at the University of North Carolina. From the first, our particular interest has been in discovering native materials and fresh dramatic forms in play writing and in acting. We have cherished the locality, believing that if the locality were interpreted faithfully, it might show us the way to the universal. For, if we can see the lives of those about us with understanding—with imagination—why may we not interpret that life in significant images for all? It was so with the Greeks before us, and with our own English forbears. It has been so in all lasting art. It should be so for us here in America.

It is a fallacy of the young writer, I have found, to think of the dramatic as something unusual and remote from his own experience and observation. Long ago now, and far away, at the frontier state university of the prairies of Dakota, where I began my adventures in play writing, a young freshman wrote for me a theme about "A Storm in New York City." I couldn't understand how the boy happened to write on such a subject. I called him into my office.

"Have you ever been in New York?" I asked him.

"No . . ." he admitted frankly.

"Where do you come from?"

"I live in the country, near Langdon," he explained.

"Oh, yes.—That's where they had a cyclone last week, wasn't it?"

"Yes. You know up there in Langdon I saw where the cyclone had driven a hitching-post right through a telegraph pole!"—And, with assurance in his voice, "That's where I got my idea!"

"You went through that cyclone yourself and then wrote about a storm at the Flatiron Building in New York City, which you have never seen. Why did you do that?"

"Oh, I thought it would be more interesting."

This attitude seems to be characteristic of many of our youthful writers—and of some who are not so youthful. It

Local Engineering Society To Receive National Charter

Announcement was made yesterday that the petition of the local mechanical engineering society for a student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers had been approved by the council of the national organization which means that the University now has an official student branch of this national engineering society.

Notice of the approval of the council was received by Professor H. G. Hoefer from the secretary of the national society, stating that such approval had been given by the council at the last national convention of the society which was held in New York during the first week of December.

The establishment of the student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers followed the petitioning of the national body for a student chapter by the local mechanical engineering society which was organized last quarter.

Since its organization in the fall quarter, the society has held several meetings and has started activities among the younger members of the group by the organization of model airplane club. It is planned to continue this activity under the new organization name.

The establishment of the student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers makes a total of three student branches of national engineering societies which are now on the campus. Student branches which were already established are those of the American Society of Civil Engineers and the American Institute of Electrical Engineers.

A change has been made in in the hours which the Bull's Head Book Shop will be open on Saturday. Instead of being open from 8:30 until 12, as it was last quarter, it will be open from 9:00 until 12:30.

Representative Of Electric Company Talks To Engineers

Speaking before the students of the school of engineering Monday noon on the topic "Personality and Its Influence on a Business Career," Howell Van Blarcon, sales supervisor of the Westinghouse Electric Company outlined the factors that make up a personality and what can be done to cultivate a pleasing set of personal characteristics.

Beginning with a summary of the things which contribute to a successful career in which he included native intelligence, natural aptitude, education and a pleasing personality, Mr. Van Blarcon stated that of these four only the last can be changed to any great degree and that this one is extremely important in the present-day business world.

Continuing with an analysis of what makes up personality the speaker mentioned the four factors of appearance, manners, friendliness, and forcefulness. Each of these is important, he stated, and each is subject to change which can be brought about by the application of well known principles.

Mr. Van Blarcon was in Chapel Hill Monday interviewing seniors in electrical engineering who are contemplating entering the service of the Westinghouse company after graduation.

1929 Building In Town Amounted To Well Over $750,000

A backward glance at the building operations carried on in Chapel Hill, for the year now closing, shows the expenditure of rather more than three quarters of a million dollars for buildings and other improvements, according to a story by H. D. Carter in The Chapel Hill Weekly.

The University has completed and occupied the new library and also Bingham Hall, and has the old Library alterations, to equip the building for the uses of the music department, almost finished, although the new music auditorium has not been started. Rooms have been built on the top floor of Spencer hall. Extensive work has been done on the grading, walks, and gutters of the south campus. Parking space has been made in the south of the new library, and Route 54 provided with concrete paving from Pittsboro road to the Country Club road. This road now has sidewalks, and the adjacent land has been graded.

Fraternity house building has been unusually active, nine being either built or under construction with housing facilities for 280 students. These structures represent an aggregate outlay of about $320,000 exclusive of the furnishing.

News Of Tremendous Importance To The University

An announcement of potentially tremendous importance to the University was made recently by Harry Frank Guggenheim, United States ambassador to Cuba and administrator of the Fund founded by his father, Daniel Guggenheim, for the promotion of aeronautics. According to the announcement, the elder Guggenheim has donated an additional $500,000 to the fund.

Daniel Guggenheim gave $500,000 to New York University in 1925 to create a school of aeronautics; a few weeks later he announced the founding of the Fund with an initial donation of $2,500,000. His son was made president. A large portion of the expenditures by the Fund has been in the form of gifts to university aeronautical schools, approximately $1,200,000 having been expended in this manner. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and New York University in the East, the University of Michigan in the Middle West, and Leland Stanford University, California Institute of Technology and the University of Washington in the Far West have received grants for schools of aeronautics. Among the numerous other projects for the advancement of aeronautics sponsored by the Fund were the Lindbergh and Byrd flights to Europe.

When the final $500,000 is expended the Fund will pass out of existence. Daniel Guggenheim has made provision through it for the establishment of a first-class school of aeronautics in the South, in order that no section of the country will be without an adequate institution for research and training in aeronautical affairs.

The establishment of this fund is the greatest step, outside of the government's own work in the aeronautical field, to promote the interest of aviation in this country and in the world.

It is a living proof that a few men of vision are awakening to the fact that aviation and aeronautics will soon play a most important part in the history of civilization.

The Farm Board Gives a Warning

Yesterday's news dispatches carried the warning of the Federal farm board that cotton farmers must cut down their acreage for next year's crop if they expect to receive any substantial aid from the board in keeping prices up. The same conditions, it is stated, apply to all other crops seeking "relief" from the board.

The job assigned the farm board is a gigantic one. From many angles the whole proposition seems utterly hopeless. Faced with the problem of organizing the farmers before anything can be definitely accomplished, the farm board has struck the same old problem of securing the co-operation of millions of men, many of whom are illiterate. The very nature of farming is such that those who engage in it cannot as yet be organized. There are many little farmers with only a few acres who fail to see the problem of the farmers as a whole, and who do not belong to any organization, who make the regulations ineffective. Not until all the land is owned and operated by large corporations, or a few men, can any organization be permanent and effective.

When the farm board asks the farmers to cut down their acreage, the individual farmer reasons that since all his neighbors are cutting down their production, then a few more acres on his part with the increased prices will mean a good deal of money. The result is that the production is greater next year. Then the board is confronted with a bigger problem in disposing of the increased surplus.

Only by getting an unanimous membership in the co-operative marketing associations or by promoting large corporations to operate farms can the farm board ever hope to do anything permanent. Such warnings as it issued yesterday not only will prove ineffective, as there is no organization with power to enforce the regulations, but may prove a stimulant to more production and a greater surplus.

Student Inertia— Cause and Effect

This thing we call college spirit is a strange and uncertain creature. It is the bane of all college presidents, student editors, and cheer leaders. Strange to say, it affords sport for cynical and satirical persons alike. It is not at all uncommon to hear people refer to college spirit as the soul of the American college. Some even go so far as to measure an institution's worth in terms of the manifestations of its spirit. Football teams wax mighty when nourished by this thing which we call college spirit. The players seem to play the game with a zeal which is in direct proportion to the noise-making qualities of the brass band and the yelling activities of the crowd.

Oftentimes, college spirit appears in the form of alumni loyalty and devotion. On some occasions and under some circumstances it is likely to become the object of our sarcasm. Regardless of the angle from which you view it, college spirit is a mysterious thing which may be powerful one day and helpless the next, the controlling factor on one occasion and a matter of no consequence on other occasions. When developed to its logical conclusion it stimulates constructive work and enthusiasm in all lines of endeavor, gives impetus and meaning to the student honor system, increases the scholastic averages of fraternities, makes student government more effective, and lubricates student-faculty dealings. When it droops and fades away, however, its absence promotes disturbances among groupes and looseness of organization. Moreover, when college spirit has been allowed to approach a dormant stage, it is very difficult to arouse.

This preliminary discussion of the seemingly intangible features of that vital factor known as college spirit brings us down to the point of practical application to conditions which exist on the campus of this university. The writer is backed by sources other than personal observation in the contention that this collegiate year has witnessed a lamentable let down in the ardor of the Carolina student body. Something on the order of indifference is alleged to have made an undesirable inroad on the campus. On the whole, the enthusiasm which has been demonstrated at football games played on the home field has been lukewarm in intensity and feeble in point of application. The literary societies are, to say the least, rather listless. It would seem that students are fast becoming blase, uninterested, and afflicted with an unqualified condition of inertia as a result of their connections with the so-called process of getting an education.

Upon casual examination of the matter we are inclined to allocate the blame to the disrupting influences arising from the University's speedy transition to a big institution. A more careful scrutiny of the situation, however, will convince one that this rapid transition cannot be classed as a valid cause, for numerous other colleges and universities have experienced a similar expansion without the accompanying lapse of interest and college spirit on the part of their student bodies. Undoubtedly, the principle source of trouble is contained in the fact that there is at present a scarcity of campus leaders in proportion to the total number of students. The cheer leader cannot be held solely responsible for the let up in cheering. The upperclassmen members of the student body have unconsciously fallen into an indifferent attitude toward the matter of preserving and promoting college spirit on the campus of this institution. As a rule, they feel that they are above outward demonstrations of college spirit. They seem to be of the opinion that freshmen should make all of the noise at football games. This is considered evidence that they have outgrown the barbarous stage of college life.

This development in the student body of this university is worthy of careful consideration. Although the upperclassmen have a sincere regard for "Old Carolina," they are loathe to parade it. On the other hand, the freshman, looking up to the upperclassmen as patterns, becomes discouraged and lapses into inactivity. It is impossible to divorce college spirit from emotional manifestations without dealing the death blow to its existence.

A closer organization of classes with the class officers taking the lead in pounding life into their respective groups would, we venture to say, bring back our waning heritage.—J. C. W.

Vacations! What a world of pleasure the word conjures up. It is undoubtedly man's punishment for the original sin, which causes the realization of some pleasure or the gratification of some emotion to be far less pleasurable than he had expected. Vacations are not the long discussed "brilliant exception," but most certainly prove the case. Everyone starts out on his vacations intending to read at least a half dozen books, write inumerable letters, and accomplish something extraordinary. You know the story—what he does is to over eat, over sleep, and get an over amount of the girl-friend.

With this thought in mind, we suggest compulsory adherence to routine by all students in all future vacations during their collegiate career, or better still, the abolition of all vacations, the collegiate experience of most students being one perpetual vacation anyway. Will Rogers is to be commended for his proposal recommending a clearing week for holidays once each year, but he doesn't go far enough.

EARLY DAYS OF CAFETERIA HERE CAUSED COMMENT

Opening of University Cafeteria Nine Years Ago Proved Novel Experiment; Helped Solve Eating Problem Then.

Gaily decked out in new trappings and resplendently bright and cheery with a new coat of cream-colored and brown paint, the University Cafeteria with the opening of school this quarter is beginning its ninth year of being a part of Carolina.

The "serve yourself" establishment today is such an integral part of America's eating system, that another cafeteria has no more effect on the mind of the average person than another Ford.

But it was not always so. Eight years ago when Miss Iona Cates came down from Burlington to open the third cafeteria in the state, her spacious new establishment proved the biggest curiosity to University students since the old days of Barnum and Bailey.

This beginning and a subsequent fine history of service form an interesting chapter of the University's recent history, for the University Cafeteria also, admittedly by one of the members of the building committee, helped the University solve an intense eating problem and kept the state from having to build another wing on Swain hall.

That first day was like a circus come to town. Students stood on the outside to watch self-conscious people go in and pick up a tray and ramble down the long serving counter.

Only the bravest had the nerve to go through the "new fangled" procedure. The rest stood outside and eyed with one of those "what's the world coming to next?" looks. The story is told but can't be vouched for that, as one boy walked in, the crowd stood back, surprised at his bravery, and yelled, "Don't drop that tray, boy, hold on to it."

Eight years can make a vast difference. From an establishment that incited the utmost in curiosity and wonderment, Miss Cates' place, in its same location across from the Methodist church, has come now to be a recognized and integral part of the University atmosphere.

It is not only a favorite with students but also with the old grads who come back for football and other games and wish to make the best of the short few hours' opportunity to talk over the days when . . .

Its waiters and cooks include darkies who have been known by almost the entire student body for nearly twenty years. When a darky starts work in town his career begins as a shoe-shine boy, then he becomes a janitor in one of the dormitories, and if he is well liked he is likely to attain a position of prominence as one of the white-coats at Miss Cates'.

Chapel Notes

DEAN BRADSHAW TALKS

Continuous progress in intellectual sincerity, and honesty and in ambition is more important in the life of the student than obtaining good marks or making any other purely material achievement, Dean F. F. Bradshaw said in chapel yesterday in welcoming the freshmen back to school for the new year.

Dean Bradshaw does not put much faith in New Year's resolutions, which are ultimately broken, but he does believe in the steady advance of the "state of mind" that fosters serious thinking. He discussed yesterday mental changes of the transition from childhood to manhood, which he considers indicative of the student's progress.

The passing of the attitude and state of dependency into one of responsibility and self-reliance was emphasized especially by the dean. He deplored the passive attitude with which students so frequently regard their duties. An active existence is the best under all circumstances. Considered from this viewpoint, he declared that there is essentially no such thing as an excuse and that the purposeful man should move with this understanding.

According to the dean's observation, a distinct change should come about in the young man's way of thinking. This should express itself in the replacement of wishful thinking by realistic thinking. The dean of students encouraged his hearers to meet each situation as it exists. It is through these things, he concluded, that one becomes a mature man in control of his own life.

Vaughan And Davis Back In Tar Heel Boxing Camp

All But One Of Last Years Regulars Are Back To Defend Southern Title.

Tar Heel boxing stock took a decided rise today when Evan Vaughan and Obie Davis, regulars from off last year's Southern championship team, reported for practice.

Both men missed fall practice, Davis being out of school due to death of his father, but they are eligible for this year's practice.

Their return gives Coach Crayton Rowe six veterans from last year's title-winners and leaves a gap only at the heavyweight post.

Vaughan is one of the cleverest bantams the Tar Heels have ever produced and should make this weight again this year.

Harry Sheffield and Noah Goodridge are both back for the 125 and 135 pound weights.

Captain Archie Allen, who will box in the 145-pound berth again, was a Southern champion in the same weight last year.

Davis is a 160-pounder, and John Warren, brother of the nationally famous Add Warren, is a light-heavy.

Avery, Smathers and Rosenfeldt, all rookies, have been showing well as 160-pounders.

It is just possible that Coach Rowe may find his 160-pounder from this trio and shift Davis to light-heavy and Warren to heavy, as last year.

Bill Koenig, big football star, is to get a try at the heavy post, however, and if Koenig makes the grade, this shift would be unnecessary.

Other outstanding candidates who may push the veterans are: Hoke Webb and Jack Farris, 145-pounders; and Cohen, Gray and Gatlin, featherweights.

GOLF COMMITTEE ANNOUNCES RULES

Before anyone not a member of the country club will be permitted to play on the local golf course tickets must be purchased either at the Student Supply store or at the Book Exchange. The ticket entitles the holder to play as many holes as he desires. However, the ticket must be used the same day it is dated and issued.

Purchasers of tickets are instructed to tear the ticket into two parts, deposit one in a box to be found on tee No. 1 and keep the other half to show to the course manager. Players are cautioned not to go to the course without a ticket, since the greens committee has instructed the course manager not to permit anyone, except regular members, to tee off without first presenting a ticket signed by the chairman of the golf committee.

The golf course is now in excellent condition. The greens are smooth, the fairway is cleared off, and possibility of losing balls is minimized. The course is open all day, with an all-time student in charge, who will upon request interpret the local rules and direct the play. A "foursome" will allow a "threesome" and a "threesome" a "twosome" to pass upon request. Women are asked not to travel in "foursomes." Players are instructed to play winter rules until further notice, and use wooden tees or improve the lie of the ball as they desire.

NORTH CAROLINA TEAMS SUPERIOR

State, Duke, and Carolina Outstanding In South Atlantic States In 1929.

North Carolina teams, led by the University of North Carolina, overshadow their Southern Conference rivals in Virginia and Maryland for athletic honors in the South Atlantic states during 1929, according to recent compilations by W. H. Wranek, Jr., University of Virginia sports writer.

The Tar Heels led other North Carolina teams by ranking first in football, track and boxing during 1929. The Duke Blue Devils came out undefeated in the baseball division, and North Carolina State starred at basketball.

Carolina was generally given third place in the Southern Conference football race. But the Tar Heel boxers battled their way to win the S. C. title for the second straight year in the annual ring tournament last March.

The Tar Heel track team also earned South Atlantic final honors. In the annual meet in Birmingham, the title went to Louisiana State with 35 points while Carolina took second place with 32 2-5 points.

The W. and L. track team won the mile relay and five men from the South Atlantic section were awarded first places in the meet. Among these five were Harper of Carolina in the discus and Woodward of Duke in the mile run.

Duke celebrated their entry into Southern Conference circles by winning the baseball title and coming through with a second in basketball. N. C. State kept the court title in the state for another year by winning from Duke in the final game. Duke had previously eliminated Carolina in the semi-finals.

By winning the S. I. C. title in the Atlanta basketball tourney the Southern Conference court honors came to the Old North State for the fifth time in the past nine years. Four of the wins were accounted for by the Tar Heels, thus making the first recent win by any North Carolina team, excepting Carolina.

Pagentry," "Dramatic Art Work of the North Carolina Educational Association," and "Interesting the Community in Dramatics."

Two plays will be given in the afternoon. The first will be a drama written and produced by the Dramatic Department of Lenoir Rhyne College, of which Miss Pearl Setzer is director. The other will be a rehearsal staged by the Carolina Playmakers with Hubert Heffner directing. The purpose of these two performances is to give directors who are planning on entering plays in the annual state tournament some idea of how their productions should be staged.

The play will be criticized by the standards of judgment for the tournament—that is, different judges will criticize the production from the standpoints of acting, choice of play, and stage craft. Judges for acting will be Mrs. Louise S. Perry of Swannanoa High, Miss Ella Henninger of Greensboro College, and Elmer Hall of Chapel Hill High. For choice of play, Prescott Farrar of Chapel Hill and C. Robinson of Goldsboro High. For stagecraft, E. R. Harrington and Miss Edith Russell of the Theatre Workshop of Asheville. The plays will be staged at 2:30 and the rehearsal immediately afterwards.

Students Freed From Blame For Xmas Fire

set of boys set the house on fire', for I don't believe for one moment that any student had anything to do with the origin of the fire, but I am inclined to believe that someone started the blaze, possibly a burglar or a firebug," Dr. Coker said.

Dr. Coker said the crudely drawn map showing the approach to the house, which was found by the Chapel Hill police the day after the fire, was as much a mystery to him as anybody.

"We should like nothing better than to apprehend the guilty party or parties, if any, but it is only fair that the members of the fraternity be absolved from blame," Dr. Coker declared.

ASHMORE SELECTS TENTATIVE FIVE

Neiman and Edwards Pair With Three Veterans To Form Starting University Basketball Team.

Out of an average basketball squad of thirty players, five smooth working, well balanced veterans, are beginning to take form as the 1930 Tar Heel basketball team. Four weeks of intensive training under Coach Jim Ashmore have ironed out the rough spots and transformed an unpromising bunch into a worthy successor to the state champion quintet of 1929.

The five are composed of Puny Harper, center; Artie Marpet and Billy Brown, guards, and Dave Neiman and John Edwards, forwards. This group has been working together for the past week and seem sure to form the starting outfit for the majority of the games on the schedule.

The representative quintet has by no means been chosen yet, and Coach Ashmore is only waiting for the games this weekend to watch his charges under fire. Most likely, a regular five will not be selected throughout the season, and the first team will be composed of any of the men on the squad.

Activities for the new year will be opened Friday night against the Greensboro Y in the Piedmont City. Coach Ashmore's boys defeated the cagers from Greensboro in a practice game before the Christmas holiday, but this encounter does not reveal the relative strength of the two teams because both had seen only a few days of practice before the game.

On Saturday the Tar Heel five will journey to Charlotte where they meet the representatives of Davidson College in the first collegiate game of the season.

All-Year Intramural Competition

At the end of the first quarter's competition in intramural competition Beta Theta Pi fraternity led the entire league by virtue of its championship in tag football and 42.5 points scored in the novice track meet for a total of 192.5 points scored. New Dorms, winner of the dormitory championship in tag football, was second with 118 points. These two teams were the only ones scoring more than 100 points during the first quarter.

Ruffin dormitory and D. K. E. fraternity, however, were near the top with 96 and 90 points respectively. Ruffin scored 65 points in tag football competition, one in the novice track meet, and 30 in the cross country run. D. K. E. amassed 85 points in tag football, running second in the fraternity league, and five in the novice track meet.

The Intramural Department keeps a record of all individual performances, scoring points for playing on winning teams, points for actual scores, and points for individual performances. The athlete scoring the largest number of points during the season is awarded a cup. Cups are awarded also for team championships in the various departments.

This winter basketball will hold the high spot of intramural competition, however, competition in other winter sports are planned. Announcements as to the opening of the basketball season and winter activities will be made in the near future according to intramural officials.

The standings are as follows:

seems to me the young playwright must, first of all, see the interesting things in the life about him if he is to interpret life interestingly to others.

Our Carolina plays have been drawn directly from the lives of our own people, from native tradition and from present-day life. They are single plays of common experience and common interest, ranging in scene from the Great Smoky Mountains on the western border to the shifting shoals of Cape Hatteras. Some of the titles will suggest the variety of the materials from which the plays are drawn: A Shotgun Splicin', a comedy of mountain wedlock; Old Wash Lucas, a farm tragedy of the stingiest man in Harnett county; Off Nags Head, the haunting mystery of the lost daughter of Aaron Burr; Lighted Candles, a tragedy of the Carolina highlands; In Dixon's Kitchen, the interrupted courtship of the sun-tanned country boy; Dod Gast Ye Both!, the robustious comedy of a mountain moonshiner; Blackbeard, pirate of the Carolina coast; The Scuffletown Outlaws, of the Croatan Indians of southeastern Carolina; Job's Kinfolks, from the lives of three generations of mill people in Winston-Salem; Trista, a wistful fantasy of the fisher folk of the little town of Beaufort.

These little plays have caught the popular imagination wherever we have played them. (We have played in every nook and corner of our own state, and into South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland, District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and Connecticut. And this past year took us to Boston in Massachusetts.) The reason for this is evident, I think, to those who know the plays. They are true to the lives they record, and to the human nature in all of us.

One of Paul Green's early plays, Fixin's, written in collaboration with his little sister, Erma, will serve to illustrate this. Here is a study of the grinding poverty of tenant-farm life, which the authors have observed from childhood. Here the pent fury of the work-driven woman, Lilly Robinson, is portrayed with grim and terrible reality. She craves a little beauty—"purty fixin's." But her husband's eyes can not see beyond the sod he plows. The scene is a bare cabin home in Harnett county, but the theme is universal—the pitiful conflict of two natures which are irreconcilable.

In all the towns where we have played it, this play has made a powerful appeal. The editor of the Smithfield (Johnston county, N. C.) Herald expressed it: "Fixin's went straight to the hearts of those present. Too many times had that scene been enacted before their eyes in real life. The simple story of the tenant farmer's wife was too true to mean actual enjoyment to the spectators. The scene might just as well have been in Johnston county as in Harnett. It was typical of this, the cotton section of North Carolina."

But the appeal is the same beyond the borders of North Carolina. The next morning after our performance before a sophisticated audience in evening dress in Atlanta, a man came to me and said: "I think I owe it to you to tell you of the effect that little play, Fixin's, had on me last night.—I come from New York and I've been seeing the best shows in the theatre there for thirty years. But that little play last night got me—so much that, before I went to bed, I went to the Western Union office and telegraphed some flowers to my wife in New York!

Our simple country comedies have met with equal favor. I think, perhaps, W. O. Saunders, editor of the Elizabeth City Independent, reflects the response of our audiences generally to this kind of play: "The home folks took to the home-made drama as to home-made sausage and corncakes on a frosty morning."

I cannot refrain at this point from quoting an excerpt from the review in the Theatre Magazine of our performances in New York last season. The critic avers that our "band of players, recruited from the hills of North Carolina, are too close to the picture to have an adequate conception of the genuine enjoyment their programs must give to others not of their state. The rare characters and the homely qualities of these plays of the Carolina soil linger in one's memory long after some of the more sophisticated plays of Broadway have been forgotten.

"In fact, each time we witness a program of the Carolina folk-plays we feel for the moment that we too are just 'folks'—along with those other folks on the other side of the footlights, who transport us for a brief but happy period back to their hill country, with its rich traditions, legends, and folklore."

When I think back on the simple beginnings of the Carolina Playmakers here scarcely more than a decade ago—on the little improvised stage in the Chapel Hill high school auditorium where all of our plays were produced for the first seven years, I find it difficult to believe the events that have actually taken place. Now we have a beautiful theatre building of our own on the campus, where before there was not even a platform practicable for stage productions. For the first makeshift Playmakers stage, all of Paul Green's early plays were written. And up to the time of the present writing, our Playmakers have produced sixty-seven plays by forty-six different authors, and three volumes of Carolina Folk-Plays have been published by Henry Holt and Company. The first volume has gone through three editions, the second through two, and recently a third has been published. Traveling in our Playmakers Show-Bus with three sets of our own home-made scenery atop, portable lighting equipment, costumes, and stage properties, we have made twenty-four tours and played to audiences in twelve states, numbering in all more than 160,000 people.

In 1927 Paul Green was awarded the Pulitzer prize for his epic tragedy of the negro, In Abraham's Bosom, and the highest recognition that can come to a playwright in America came to one of our own Playmakers. And today, since the simple beginnings of the Carolina Playmakers here in this quiet village where I am writing, three other native North Carolinians—Lula Volmer, Hatcher Hughes, and Anne Bridgers—have made an important contribution to American folk drama on Broadway.

The editor of the American Review of Reviews has interpreted the work of our Playmakers in North Carolina in its larger significance: "When every community has its own native group of plays and producers we shall have a national American Theatre that will give a richly varied, authentic expression of American life. We shall be aware—which we are only dimly at present—of the actual pulse of the people by the expression in folk-plays of their coordinated minds. It is this common vision, this collective striving that determines nationalism, and remains throughout the ages, the only and only touchstone of the future."

So much for our adventures in playmaking in North Carolina. As a visiting professor in the summer sessions at Columbia University and the Universities of Colorado and of California over a period of years, I have had an unusual opportunity to observe the adventures in play writing of students from many states and I am convinced that each of these United States has its own interesting part to play in the expression of our many-sided and multi-colored American life. Call the roll of the states and vision the potential drama their very names connote: California, Colorado, Nevada, Utah, Montana—Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas, Missouri—Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Carolina, Virginia—Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, New York, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Maine! What magic is here? The glamour of brave tradition the romance of the teeming life of today, the vast drama of a new kingdom of humanity.

member the dusky cheering squad which was a feature of the University's home football games three years ago. Among the group was a waiter and well-known cook from Miss Cates'.

The cafeteria has been carried on since its opening largely with the aid of self-selp student workers. It has always averaged having thirteen students on its payroll, and in the eleven months in which it runs it pays out to them in salaries nearly five thousand dollars.

The cafeteria met a real problem of the University when established. Students were beginning to crowd into the institution at such an unprecedented rate that there was a serious eating problem. The University dining hall was serving on a double shift and turning boys away too. There was only one cafe in town and a few boarding houses, and then Miss Cates stepped in with her big cafeteria and solved the problem.

The appropriation which had been planned to enlarge the University dining hall was not needed now, and has not been since. Miss Cates' place absorbed the surplus, with its three big wings or halls of tables and its ample facilities for serving, and since that time boarding houses and other eating places have increased proportionately with the number of students to keep the student eating problem well in hand.

Y PREPARING FOR BLUE RIDGE MEET

Cabinets Choose Committees To Interest Students in Annual Meeting.

Plans for sending a delegation to the Blue Ridge Conference, which is to be held at Blue Ridge June 14-23, were made last Monday night at the Y cabinet meetings. It was decided that a committee of students be chosen whose duty it would be to talk "Blue Ridge" from now until the time of the conference. This committee is to be composed of Joe Eagles, Clyde Dunn, Mayne Albright, Ike Manning, from the junior-senior cabinet; John Park, Wilbur Kochtitzky, Adrian Daniels, F. M. James, from the sophomore cabinet, and Bob Barnett, Harold Smith, James Kurfees, Charles Rose, from the freshman cabinet.

This conference, which has been held annually for many years, is attended by 500 to 600 students from all over the south. Each year this large number of students gather for a period of nine days not only to associate with fellow students from some of the other colleges, but also to have the pleasure of hearing and coming in contact with some of the most influential men in the country.

Such men as Dr. Sherwood Eddy of New York, Dr. W. W. Alexander of the Southern Interracial Commission, Dr. Chas. W. Gilkey, dean of Chicago University Chapel, and numerous other men of this type will be on the program for this conference.

The daily program consists of morning worship, Bible discussions and campus problems. In the afternoon the delegates are permitted to play baseball, basketball, tennis, or they may go swimming, take hikes, or anything else that they might find in the way of amusement. After supper the program is filled with talks by some of the influential men previously named. This daily program is completed by a forum at which time many topics of interest to the delegates are discussed.

All students interested in going as delegates to this conference are requested to see one of the members of the committee. The cost of the whole nine days is small.

It has been the custom in the past for the University to have one of the largest delegations, and it is the hope of the Y that such will be the case this coming summer.

CONNOR'S RECENT ADDRESS WILL BE PUBLISHED SOON

R. D. W. Connor's address on the subject of "The Recent Progress of North Carolina," given at the recent meeting of the American Historical Association in Durham, will be published in the next issue of the American Historical Review.

Dr. Connor reviews the history of the South in general and North Carolina in particular since 1860 in order to emphasize the progress that has been made in the last 25 years, and to point out the fact that he believes that the section's return to national power will be consummated in the near future.

"The South," he says, "has shaken itself free from its heritages of war and reconstruction. Its confidence restored, its prosperity regained, its social problems on the way to solution, it is ready once more to place its full strength at the service of the union of its fathers."

Smith Entertains

Continuing his policy of encouraging the University athletic teams in every way possible, Manager E. Carrington Smith of the Carolina theatre has announced that he will entertain the members of the basketball team at the first show on Tuesday afternoon of each week during the playing season.

Manager Smith has been generous as a host to various teams and organizations, as well as to each student whose birthday occurs during the school year. As in the past, invitations to attend the show as the guest of the management will be extended throughout the next two quarters to students on their birthdays. The basketball team is the first group to be entertained at the Carolina this year.

Bailey To Read

Howard Bailey will read Franz Molnar's Liliom at the Carolina Playmakers' dramatic reading for January, which will be given in the Playmaker theatre Sunday night at 8:30.

Liliom was one of the favorite plays written by the popular Hungarian playwright. The Theatre Guild first produced it a few hundred years ago. Eva LeGallienne played the leading role, Julie. Joseph Schildkraut played the title role, Liliom.

No Chapel Today

Dean Bradshaw announced yesterday that there would be no chapel today or Friday, but that regular chapel would begin Monday.

He stated early in the week that only three absences would be allowed sophomores this quarter insofar as only ten days were to be given over to chapel for the second year students.

Round-table Discussions To Feature Newspaper Institute

Sixth Annual Meeting of North Carolina Newsmen Begins Here January 15.

Lawrence Will Speak

Editorial, News Features and Business Problems Will Be Principal Topics of Discussion; Ends January 17.

A well-balanced menu is to be offered for the delectation of North Carolina newspaper folk when they come here next week for the annual sessions of the Newspaper Institute.

The topics to be discussed are expected to cover the problems that come up from day to day in almost any newspaper shop, whether in this or that department.

The complete program, announced today for the first time, shows that the principal topics are to fall under the headings of editorial and news features, advertising, circulation, accounting, and business management, with plenty of experts to lead the discussion of each.

But the most impressive thing about the program, perhaps, is that it allows what ought to be ample time for the round-table discussion of these subjects, which so often in the past, on account of lack of time, have been left hanging in the air.

Plenty of Room for Talk

The committee on arrangements has kept constantly in mind the idea that anybody who has any newspaper problem worth discussing shall be given the time to have it talked over pretty thoroughly.

The institute is to open next Wednesday night, January 15, and continue through Friday noon, January 17. The headliner for the opening session will be David Lawrence, publisher of the United States daily and president of the Consolidated Press Association.

LANG OUTLINES PHI SOCIETY'S 1930 POLICIES

New Speaker Inaugurated By Representatives; He asks for Co-operation of Members in Building up Assembly.

The inauguration of John Lang as speaker of the Philanthropic Assembly featured the first meeting of the society for the winter quarter Tuesday night in New East building. Two matters of business were decided and the assembly voted that W. W. Speight, although forced to be absent from all meetings during the fall quarter, was the legal speaker of the assembly for the quarter. The assembly also voted that members would be seated according to the counties they represented. Following the business meeting Speaker Lang delivered his inaugural address.

He declared that the society although declared dead by cynics and pseudo-wise was fundamentally sound. "It stands to reason that our assembly must be accomplishing something when it continues to turn out leaders and experts in every great profession of life," the speaker said. He continued, "Of course these people do not receive all of their training here, but they do receive something here which cannot be obtained anywhere else in their college training, and this is the opportunity and encouragement to face the public collectively or individually upon any occasion."

A more efficient organization is promised by the speaker, who deplored the attitude of those who considered that the society existed merely because it had existed for 135 years. It was his plea that once again the assembly become the clearing house for student discussions.

His second plan for strengthening the organization of the assembly was the renewal of relations with the Dialectic senate. Lang stated that he would begin communications with the president of the Di relative to having the two societies pass upon each other's bills.

The third plan was to gain proper recognition for the opinions and decisions of the assembly. A new office, reporter-general, was created to see that actions of the society be given publicity.

The last plan was to invite criticism of the assembly's position by students. The speaker asked for public criticism.

In concluding he reminded the members of the great men of the state who had contributed to the long history of the society and asked the present members to strive to build up the organization to its former position.

Presbyterians To Entertain

The Freshman Bible Class of the Presbyterian church will have a social Friday night at 8:00 in the church social rooms.

BRADSHAW SAYS PLAN YOUR WORK

New Year's Resolutions Poor Method of Regulation Declares Dean of Students.

Speaking to the second half of the freshman class in chapel yesterday, Dean F. F. Bradshaw outlined certain policies of living which he thinks in the long run prove themselves far more satisfactory than such doubtful practices as making New Year's resolutions.

The dean's talk in short was aimed to encourage definiteness of purpose and of activity. "Keep your eye on the thing you are going to do, and start right now to perform those things necessary to achieving your aim," was his urge as a first step toward accomplishment. Then, according to the speaker, one must avoid falling into the habit of making excuses. The mind anxiously embraces this practice, but excuses are of no real value and eventually prove detrimental to one's determination and decision.

Dean Bradshaw declared that a frequent study of one's duties was of great value. After such an examination the pertinent question to ask is "Am I doing what is required?" Dean Bradshaw recommends such methods as these for added thoroughness and consequent fruitfulness of results.

Year Book Notice

All proofs of pictures made before Christmas vacations must be returned to Moulton's studio this week or the picture for the Yackety Yack will be selected by the photographer. This is necessary in order for the photographer to deliver the pictures to the Yackety Yack office on schedule.

Mr. Moulton will continue taking junior and fraternity pictures.

NEW EXHIBIT CASES PLACED IN LIBRARY

Three exhibit cases built in the University shop building department and designed by Edward Nash, University architect, are new features of the library.

One case contains material from the Hanes collection and most of the books displayed illustrate types of early printing before 1600. Of special interest is a folding plate showing the interior of a Dutch type foundry of the eighteenth century.

The other two cases contain material from North Carolina collections. Among these items is a book from the Cape Fear libray in the original binding. This library was public, existing between 1760 and 1770 at Wilmington. It was supported by a "Society of Gentlemen."

Among the Broadside display is a Proclamation by the governor of the state of North Carolina announcing the signing of the peace treaty which concluded the Revolution in 1783. This was printed in New Bern.

United Church Is Conducting Forum

The Young Peoples' discussion group of the United church is continuing its series of Sunday night open forum discussions on sex problems this quarter. Last Sunday a graduate student from the medical school spoke to the group on the biological aspect of sex life.

An extremely interesting discussion is promised for next Sunday night when Dr. English Bagby, of the University psychology department, will speak on the psychological phases of sex.

The meeting will begin at 7:00 p. m. in the main auditorium of the United church on West Cameron avenue. The officials of the church invite all students to attend.

Graduate Club Notice

There will be a meeting of the graduate club Friday, January 10, at 7:30 in Smith building. Dr. E. R. Groves will talk on "Points of Tension in Modern Marriage."

Basketball Tonight

The first basketball game of the winter quarter will be played tonight with University's co-ed team meeting the Chapel Hill high school team at 8 o'clock in the high school's tin can.

The starting lineups for the two teams were not announced as it is the first game of the season for the University team and it is planned to experiment with the players in order to obtain the best working sextet.

COLLEGE OFFERS RELIGIOUS STUDY

Parson Moss To Conduct Class Meeting Three Times Weekly.

A course in Bible study will be conducted this quarter Tuesdays and Thursdays. Instruction will be given by Rev. W. D. Moss, pastor of the local Presbyterian church, on evenings of those days at the Methodist church from 7 to 8 o'clock.

The course, being given by the school of religion, requires no preparation, no examinations, or registration fee; the attendance upon the class is not compulsory. The enrollment is open to all; no restrictions are made.

When asked to give a general outline of the course, Rev. Moss explained: "The course will take up the story of religion, showing the development from earliest times up to its completion in Christianity." Mr. H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, stated that every student on the campus should make a special effort to attend this course. "The notes gained from this course," continued Mr. Comer, "will give one something to think of for some time to come." Everyone is invited to attend.

Community Chorus Plans Cantata As Spring Musicale

The executive committee of the Chapel Hill community chorus in a meeting last week with H. S. Dyer, declared themselves highly pleased with the chorus's production of the Messiah, given December 16, and proceeded to make plans for their next performance.

February 1 was set as the date for the next chorus rehearsal. All who took part in the Messiah will be notified of this fact by mail. The committee realizing that there are certain singers in the community in addition to those having previously taken part, who are desirous of joining the chorus, wishes to secure their services. To those known by the committee cards will be sent. Others, however, should watch the announcements of rehearsals and should attend, according to the chorus officials. This applies especially to students, who will receive no cards, but who are welcome to attend rehearsals.

The spring festival will be the next performance of the chorus. The committee is forced to wait before planning a definite program, until it knows whether the new music auditorium will be completed by spring. If the new building and organ can be used, the chorus will present a cantata similar to the Messiah, but if not, the Methodist church will be used again, the program probably consisting of two shorter cantatas in which a pipe organ is not required.

Those attending the meeting were: George Lawrence, Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle, Professor C. J. McHale, Billy Hunt, Mrs. A. S. Wheeler and Mr. Dyer.

Army Class To Meet

The Army Troop school will hold its regular meeting tonight at 7:30 o'clock in Davie hall. A program of especial interest to the members has been arranged, according to officials, and all members are urged to be present.

The United States A Pacifist Nation?

Yesterday the House of Representatives began consideration of the supply bill of the war department for 1931, which provides for an increased outlay of $442,000 over the current year. Although an increase of $442,000 in a total expenditure of approximately $455,000,000 does not seem especially remarkable, it assumes real significance when the proposed distribution of the funds is considered.

The bill designates $337,058,000 for military activities, representing an increase of $6,019,000 as compared with 1930. For non-military purposes the bill provides $117,173,000, a decrease of $5,577,000 from the 1930 appropriation. Thus a substantial increase is sought in the amount which the nation pays every year for preparation for warfare. An army of 12,000 officers, 118,750 enlisted men and 6,500 Phillipine scouts would be maintained with the funds sought for military activities.

It is a typically American anachronism that Congress should be discussing a bill providing for increased preparation for warfare simultaneously with the issuance of an appeal for world-wide support of naval disarmament by the nation's chief executive. President Hoover was bidding farewell to the members of the commission which will represent this country at the London naval conference while the House was debating the war department supply bill.

World peace will never come while the foremost nations continue to increase their facilities for war. Americans have taken the lead in agitation for reduction of armaments; yet our Congress is considering the appropriation of additional funds for the maintenance of a larger army. And we expect the rest of the world to regard us as the preservers of world peace!

Relief for The Workers?

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, speaking before the Southern labor conference held in Charlotte a few days ago, made the following declarations: "We believe that if an orderly normal condition is established of co-operation and mutual respect, recognizing the rights of labor and management, there can be brought about a change that will be of benefit to both without strife and strikes. . . . It is our endeavor to make it possible for working people to secure such wages as will make for decency and comfort. We believe in the abolishment of industrial despotism in every sense. . . . When we concede capital the right to organize we demand for workers the same right to organize. . . . We will never reach the millenium when there will be no strikes or strife, but we can establish relationships where strikes will be very rare."

Thus has Mr. Greene set down the objectives of the A. F. of L. in its campaign to organize Southern labor. Certainly these objectives have the appearance, to say the least, of benevolence toward the working class. What does labor need if not intelligent leadership and organization? And is not a readjustment in relationships between labor and capital necessary in any program of reform? It is obvious from recent disturbances in the South that Southern labor, if ever it is going to be in a position in which it can bargain effectively, must be organized. For the purposes of organization, in which we are most interested, has the A. F. and L. ostensibly, then, invaded the South.

Of course the purposes named above are not the only ones which the Federation has in entering the South on a large scale. The Federation will live without the aid of the South, as President Green said in his speech; however, the organization would probably welcome the entrance of Southern workers merely as an addition to national strength. A campaign against communism no doubt will be waged also. Whether we are in sympathy with this last named phase of the program or not, we must consider it as one of the high spots in the Southern campaign.

Here in North Carolina efforts have been made to organize labor. The State Federation of Labor, a branch of the A. F. of L., has been most prominent in this work, but it has not met with a great measure of success. Efforts of similar nature have been made in most all sections of the South, but thus far the South, as far as its laborers are concerned, is essentially an unorganized section.

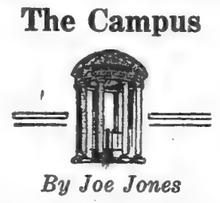
There is much to hamper the A. F. of L. in organizing the South—the first intensive concentrated effort to organize Southern labor. There are the employers and mill-owners, and then there are the workers themselves, not knowing which way to turn. But we must not begin to take the attitude that the workers are handicapped and always will be, that the odds are much too heavy against labor's being organized. Although we do have grave doubts as to the outcome of the campaign to organize Southern labor, realizing at the same time that the remedy for our present industrial situation lies in organizing labor so as to enable that group to stand on firmer ground before its employers, we may at least hope that in this latest development in the labor situation lies a solution to the problem.—B.M.

The Literary Society Problem

Of all the extracurricular organizations connected with the University of North Carolina the two campus literary societies, the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly, are the oldest. Due to the fact that the relative influence and importance of these two organizations has declined appreciably in recent years, their present activities are considered rather listless. In this editorial the writer purposes to embody an explanation of this listless condition and, in addition, a discussion of the role of these societies in the life of the Carolina student body.

Within the memory of several members of our present faculty, students crowded into the two literary society halls to witness heated verbal encounters revelant to the foremost political and social questions of the day. Some recall the days when an intercollegiate debate never failed to fill old Gerrard hall to overflowing. Well may we inquire the reason for the discontinuance of this condition and the gradual substitution of the present listless condition.

In the first place, there were few campus organizations connected with the University fifty years ago. Forensic activities, therefore, had little competition in the race for the student's time. In the second place, football and other competitive games were in the infant stage of development. In the third place, the accomplished speech-maker was the idol of the boy or man of college age. Their attempts to become adept in the art of oratory, therefore, resulted in large attendance of literary society gatherings and intercollegiate debates. In the fourth place, the "modern age of brawn worship had not begun." In the fifth place, the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly have lost their political power on the campus at large. The fact of the matter is that these organizations have elected to gradually concentrate upon the sole function of training students to think and speak clearly in public places; yet comparatively few students are interested in this sort of thing. Moreover, the average age of college students has steadily decreased since the opening of the University. Forensic activities appeal more to older students. The present college generation of youthful students quite naturally becomes interested in the dashing, dodging football player rather than in the master of argument and every phase of verbal encounter. This the writer believes to be the explanation of the alleged listless condition of our two campus literary societies at present.



What, then, is the role of these organizations in the student life of this institution? An analysis of the matter shows that their role has evolved from a number of functions falling roughly into social, executive, and political categories to one specific function which is forensic in kind. Since other campus organizations of more recent origin have deprived the literary societies of their former social, executive, and political functions, it is only logical that their present function should be purely forensic.

The alleged listlessness of our campus literary societies is due, therefore, to the narrow range of appeal which forensics have at present.—J. C. W.

College Life

The Campus

By Joe Jones

During our first Christmas spent in the North we discovered that football isn't the most thrilling intercollegiate sport after all. Instead, it's ski-jumping; ski-jumping as it was done last week on the Intervales Hill at Lake Placid. For December 27 to January 1 is College Week at Lake Placid, and the Intervales jump is the second highest in the world. The jump event, taking place on New Year's day, is the brilliant climax of the greatest program of intercollegiate winter sports in the western hemisphere.

Lake Placid Club sponsors the program, throws open to the contestants its luxurious club houses. Both men and women from many of the northern and Canadian colleges come each year to participate in the events and to enjoy the hospitality of the club.

This year the opening event was a series of hockey games between Yale and Michigan; thrilling enough to a Southerner who had scarcely seen skating before. The Yale boys, heavy-set football types, invariably overcame the tough, wiry men from Michigan. The Yale goal-keeper, a very short fellow, who, with all his protective paraphanalia, appeared grotesquely broader than he was long, was certainly an expert. Only two or three times during the series did he allow the puck to get by him into the net. The Michigan goalie had a habit of using his stick in the fashion of a golf club to knock the puck clear out over the rink fence.

The Monday and Tuesday before New Year's day were taken up with the college men and women's skating, snowshoeing, and skiing races. Crisp snow and good smooth ice made the performance of these events as nearly perfect as possible. Throughout the great week of international intercollegiate sports a small army of Pathe News cameramen kept their machines trained on the kaleidoscopic riot of activities.

Besides the college events there were dog-sled races, skijoring, tobogganing, fancy skating and bob-sledding on the club's new course, which is the only one in the Americas. Bobsledding is a hazardous sport. A crew of not less than two experienced men must man the brakes and various gear in order for the monster sled to take the curves properly. Bobbing has long been a favorite sport in the European winter resorts, but the opening of the club's run in December inaugurated its appearance in this country.

On January 1, the day of the Marshal Foch trophy ski jump for college men, Intervales Hill is encircled by a multitude of spectators. Dressed in the bright colors of the northwoods vacationists they present a brilliant picture. Around them rise the white peaks of the Adirondacks; over them, on rough spruce flagpoles, fly the flags of Norway, Sweden, Great Britain and America. Towering above rises the nearly sheer face of the jump hill.

At the highest point, on the peak of the tall steel tower which surmounts the hill, stands Sorensen of Maine, the first contestant awaiting the signal. The sky is his background, and he is so far away from the crowd below that they cannot tell whether or not he wears a cap. There is a fanfare of trumpets, a scarlet banner is raised, and Sorensen lets go. The crowd is silent as he gathers speed on the icy tower slope. One moment he is on the straightaway and the next he leaves the abrupt lifted takeoff to sail like a bird straight out over the long steep face of the hill itself. As he drops he leans far forward and waves his arms to keep his balance. After thirty-five meters in the air his skiis slap the hard-packed snow, and he glides down the remainder of the incredible slope with the speed of an express train. The crowd is hushed until the buzzing figure reaches the level field, then it cheers wildly as he suddenly and deftly stops himself.

A few minutes after Sorensen comes Blood of New Hampshire, slender and boyish, but with the cold eye and steel nerves which every ski-jumper must possess. In their turns come a dozen other stout-hearted young men, Hansen of Wisconsin, Foster of McGill, Landry of Ottawa, who does forty-two meters for the longest jump of the day, and finally the great Pederson of New Hampshire, winner of the trophy for the last two years.

Only one man falls, and that's enough. Losing his balance in mid-air, he strikes the slope awkwardly, and at a terrific speed rolls to the bottom as his legs are turned and twisted by the clattering ungainly skiis. He lies quite still as attendants rush out to sarry him to the first aid shack.

The judges always watch the Winter Football Practice Will Begin Next Week With Return Of Head Coach Chuck Collins

Annual Monogram Dinner and Issuance of Equipment Will Occur Middle of Week.

Work Begins January 20

No Plans Yet Announced for Winter Work; Expected to Be Same as Last Year.

Chuck Collins, head Tar Heel football coach, is expected to return to the Hill on Sunday and plans will go forward immediately for the Tar Heels' winter football training.

The annual monogram dinner is to be held the middle of next week. Equipment for the winter practice will be issued during the latter part of the same week, and formal practice will begin on January 20.

Coach Collins has not yet disclosed his plans as to the winter work, but it is understood that the plan of daily practice with regular games between four teams from the squad, will be followed. This was the system used last spring, which bore fruit in the Tar Heels' fine performance of 1929.

NEW FORWARDS TO FACE GREENSBORO

1930 Tar Heel Basketball Campaign Begins With Two Games This Week; Davidson Saturday.

The 1930 edition of the Tar Heel basketball team will make its formal bow to the sports world tomorrow night in a game in Greensboro with the Greensboro Y cagers.

The Greensboro Y contest will be in the nature of a first course on a Tar Heel menu that shows a long, hard line of Big Five and Southern Conference contests, to be capped by participation in the annual tournament.

The following night the Tar Heels will meet Davidson on the Wildcats' floor.

Coach Ashmore hopes to present a much stronger team than faced Greensboro before Christmas. The Tar Heels won a decision in that game. But Greensboro was playing after but two nights of practice. The Gate City boys have gotten in valuable work since, and the Tar Heels regard them as a tougher assignment.

Return of Neiman and Edwards has bolstered the Blue and White offense considerably, and it is more than likely that these fast youngsters will start at forward over such men as Slater, Cleland and Hutchinson.

Veterans will start at the other posts, Coach Jim Ashmore said yesterday, with Puny Harper at center and Billy Brown and Artie Marpet at the guard posts.

This is the same combination that Coach Ashmore has been using in most of the hard scrimmages since holiday practice was started just after Christmas, and has shown better than any yet developed.

Harper Injured

A sprained ankle may keep "Puny" Harper, the Tar Heel gigantic center, out of the opening college game with Davidson at Davidson Saturday night.

The injured limb was sustained in practice. It was much better yesterday, but there is a chance that Coach Ashmore may take no chances at running the big, dependable pivot man.

Congressman La Guardia has filed a report showing that he spent nothing in his New York mayoralty campaign. So the report balances.—Detroit News.

Complete Wrestling Schedule Announced

Due to an error in Tuesday's issue of the Tar Heel, the latter half of the varsity wrestling schedule was omitted.

The schedule is exceptionally difficult, as is easily seen. The stiffest tests of the team's ability are the matches with the Navy at Annapolis, with Princeton University at Princeton and the Southern Conference tournament at Lexington, Va. Princeton and the Navy regularly turn out mat teams which rank among the best in the country. Duke has a very excellent mat squad this year.

Coaches Quinlan and Abbot are working hard in an effort to develop men to fill the places of Thompson, Cowper and Moore, lettermen in 1929, who will be away at least part of the season doing engineering co-op work.

The Southern Conference tournament has been officially awarded to V. M. I. and will be held there on March 7 and 8.

The schedule:

Jan. 18—Duke at Chapel Hill.
Jan. 15—Navy at Annapolis.
Feb. 1—V. P. I. at Blacksburg.
Feb. 8—Princeton at Princeton.
Feb. 12—Davidson at Davidson.
Feb. 15—Virginia, Chapel Hill.
Feb. 22—V. M. I. at Lexington.
March 7-8—Southern Conference tournament, Lexington.

University May Have Hard Tennis Courts

Consideration is being given the proposal to build two or more all-weather tennis courts by the University athletic authorities. At the present time the University has the finest tennis equipment in the state and ranks well up in the south in that respect. Should hard courts be built the players would be able to continue work with a greater degree of consistency throughout the year than is now the case.

J. P. Kenfield, tennis coach, went to Nashville, Tenn., during the Christmas holidays to inspect courts made of a composition in which two of the ingredients are tar and sawdust. A concrete court costs around $1,200, but it is said that one of these composition courts can be built for $200 or thereabouts. And some tennis experts think this type gives a better footing —less rigid and therefore more friendly to the feet. The main question is whether or not the composition is durable, and Coach Kenfield is now considering that.

If it is decided to build the all-weather courts, the hard surface will probably be laid upon some of the present courts east of the campus.

Intramural Program To Get Started Soon

The opening of dormitory and fraternity basketball leagues on Monday, January 13, will mark the start of the winter program of the intramural department. The department has requested each dormitory and fraternity to enter one of the leagues as soon as possible, in order that all entries may be in the intramural office by Thursday night.

The department is especially anxious for all men living out in town to participate in the winter program and to form independent teams. These teams will be allowed to enter the dormitory league if their managers guarantee that they will fulfill the schedule requirements.

Three Frosh Stars Return; Prospects For Tennis Better

The return of three men from last year's freshman squad has greatly improved the chances of the University's tennis team. Hinkey Hendlin, freshman No. 1 man; Sonny Graham, No. 2, and Phil Lisken, No. 3, have returned to school and are busily working daily at the tennis courts.

An attractive schedule has been planned; the team making a southern tour winding up with the Southern Conference meet on May 8, 9 and 10 at New Orleans. Games have been arranged with the leading southern schools such as Georgia, Georgia Tech and Alabama. Tentative dates have been arranged with Johns Hopkins, Maryland, University of Richmond, Hampden-Sydney and Sewanee.

The stretch of sunny weather has enabled the squad of about 20 men to have daily workouts, and the team is fast rounding into a well balanced machine which should rival last year's club, which won 15 out of 16 matches, only losing to Princeton which was considered to have the best intercollegiate team in the nation.

Frosh Quintet To Scrimmage Tonight

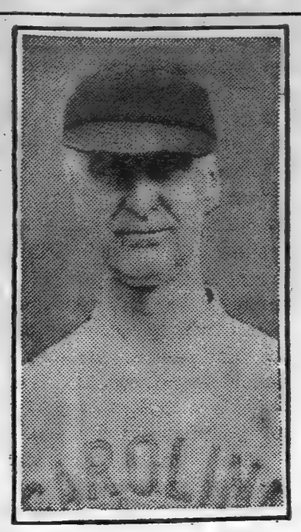
With 75 candidates reporting for practice, Coach Rex Enright is planning to send the Tar Heel freshman basketball squad through its first scrimmage tonight. The yearlings have had three days of practice with the work consisting chiefly of drills in fundamentals of the game.

No regular schedule has been arranged for the Tar Babies but games will be arranged as the season progresses. About ten games will be played with North Carolina teams and the quint will probably journey into Virginia for several contests. The first game will be played in the Tin Can January 14 with Leaksville high school as opponents.

Icy Make-up Tries Charlie Farrell's Endurance in Films

Special effects in motion picture make-ups are not without accompanying discomforts, according to Charles Farrell, who is co-featured with Mary Duncan in Frank Borzage's romantic Fox Films production, "The River," now showing at the Carolina Theatre.

In one of the interior scenes of the picture Farrell is supposed to have just come from a blinding blizzard. His face is partially encrusted with snow that has turned to ice. This desired effect was accomplished by the important art of screen make-up but with plenty of trouble for Farrell.



With the effect obtained, Charlie found that his face was drawn taut, and the hot light made matters more complicated. It was particularly annoying, due to the fact that in ordinary scenes Farrell does not resort to screen make-up at all.

"The River" is from the romantic novel of the same name by Tristram Tupper. Included in the cast besides Miss Duncan and Farrell are Margaret Mann, Ivan Linow and Alfredo Sabato.

Slater Leads Scorers

John Slater, lanky forward, is leading the Tar Heel scorers for the first four practice games. Slater, a forward and reserve from last year's team, has 26 points. Bill Brown, letter guard, is second with 21, trailed by Hutchinson, forward, with 18; Harper, veteran center, with 15, and Marpet, veteran guard, with the same number.

Basketball Mentor

Jim Ashmore, coach of varsity basketball and baseball, has developed state championship quints here for two successive years, but is faced with a stiff problem in whipping a mediocre squad into a team equal to those of former years. He has only three lettermen with which to work this winter, and must fill the two forward positions with rookies.

Football Men Out For Track Squad

Football men will form the bulk of the weight heaving roster on the 1930 track team. Most likely prospects for the shot include Adkins, Brown, Gilbreath, Fysal and Koenig, all grid stars. In the discus will be the same men, and also Thompson. In the javelin will be McAlister, Brown, Remsen, Parsons and Blackwood.

Owing to an error, the name of Beatty Rector was omitted from the executive committee of the High School Debating Union which was published in the issue of January 6.

The debate squad will hold its first regular meeting of the quarter tonight at 7:30 in 201 Murphey hall.

It is necessary that all students who intend to present themselves as candidates for the debate teams of the quarter be present.

Plenty of Vaulters

The 1930 track team promises to boast a wealth of material in the pole vault, despite the loss of Vernon Cowper, who set the University record up to 12 feet 5, several inches above the state mark. Neiman vaulted 11 feet 6 and better last year. Arnold, Dry and Ruble have been vaulting approximately the same in fall practice, and all these boys are improving steadily.

Shaw, director of the North Carolina State College Engineering Experiment Station and "Mechanical Engineering," by a speaker who will be selected by the Raleigh section of American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Nation-Wide Essay Contest Is Won By West Virginia Boy

A college man—Dudley L. Harley, Lehigh, '30—has shown his heels to many thousands of entrants in a nation-wide essay contest for a $10,000 first prize. Harley, whose home is in Martinsburg, W. Va., is a candidate for a Rhodes scholarship from his home state, and expects to use his new wealth in furthering his education and his ambition to be a writer.

The essay which won the contest for the Lehigh undergraduate was composed, written and bound into book form during an enforced extension of his summer vacation, while both wrists were in splints. The wrists were broken in a fall from his horse, Friday, September 13, and the fact that he could not return to school led to his decision to enter the contest. This is not the first contest he has won, however; his education has been furthered by two scholarships won in essay competitions sponsored by the American Chemical Society.

Altogether, 835 prizes, totaling $25,000, were awarded in the contest. Entries were limited to 400 words, and were judged on the basis of knowledge of the subject, personal experiences shown, originality of presentation and clarity.

"The results of the contest were extremely gratifying to us," said C. E. Greenwood, vice-chairman of the executive committee of the council, "because they show conclusively that the nation is awakening to the importance of keeping food properly both from the standpoint of health and as a question of household economics.

Harley's success was not only one of the university-trained. Of the first thirty-five prizes, eighteen were awarded to college graduates, and two on the list of winners are college professors.

Edward Mohler, professor of political science at St. John's college, Toledo, O., and Miss Ethel M. Arnold, assistant professor of art, Kansas State Agricultural college, won $100 each on their essays.

Problems of the weekly editors and publishers are to be given special consideration.

Special attention is to be paid to problems having to do with advertising. Which seems fitting enough in view of the current necessity for putting forth more effort toward bringing in the revenue that comes from advertising.

SOPH COMMITTEE PICKS JOHNSON FOR PRESIDENT

Election of Vice-President To Be Held in Chapel Monday; Dungan on Committee.

The executive committee of the sophomore class at a recent meeting elected Larry Johnson to the presidency of the class to succeed Ben Aycock who did not return to school. Johnson was chosen vice-president early in the year by vote of the class to fill the vacancy caused by the failure of the regularly elected officer to continue in school. The committee called an election to be held in chapel Monday to name a new vice-president.

Aycock in a letter to Dean Bradshaw, stated that he would be unable to return to school. Johnson, acting in his capacity as vice-president, called a meeting of the executive committee for the purpose of determining the manner of filling the vacancy. By vote of the committee, Johnson was elevated to the position of president.

The committee decided to have a business meeting of the class in chapel Monday. In addition to the election, reports will be presented by the class officers. J. Elwin Dungan was appointed by the president of the class to fill a vacancy on the committee. The first class smoker of the quarter will be held in Swain hall on the night of January 21, President Johnson announced.

The class officers are: president, Larry Johnson; vice-president, vacant; secretary, J. E. Miller; treasurer, Royall R. Brown; executive committee, Maurice Eighme (chairman), J. Elwin Dungan, Jack Farris, Harry Finch, Richard Burrell, F. M. James, J. Holmes Davis and Edward Yarborough.

DAVID LAWRENCE ONE OF FOREMOST NEWSPAPER MEN

Principal Speaker at Newspaper Institute Has Lead a Most Colorful Career.

The story of the rise of David Lawrence from a cub reporter to one of the foremost journalists of the nation reveals a real romance of the newspaper world.

The story is particularly interesting to North Carolinians just now, since Mr. Lawrence has accepted an invitation to address Tar Heel editors and publishers at the annual Newspaper Institute. He is to speak at the opening session on the night of January 15.

Mr. Lawrence is now editor and founder of The United States Daily, and writer of a daily dispatch on national affairs. He was born on December 25, 1888, in Philadelphia. He began newspaper work on the Buffalo Express in 1903, joined the Associated Press after his graduation from Princeton in 1910, became special correspondent of the New York Evening Post in 1915.

In 1919 he formed the organization which later became the Consolidated Press Association, which has distributed his dispatch ever since and in 1926 he founded The United States Daily, a newspaper devoted exclusively to official news of the government of the United States.

Grail Dance To Be Given Tomorrow at Bynum Gymnasium

The Order of the Grail has announced that its first dance of the quarter will be held tomorrow night in the Bynum gymnasium. The dance, as usual, will begin at nine o'clock and tickets will go on sale at eight-thirty preceding the dance.

The Carolina Buccaneers have been engaged to render music for this affair. Due to the fact that tickets are placed on sale immediately before the dance, boys who bring dates are allowed to purchase their tickets at the door. Only a limited number of stags are admitted due to the size of the gymnasium.

The ballroom will be attractively decorated and the orchestra placed in a stand on one side of the gym.

The regular rules concerning attendance and conduct at dances held in Chapel Hill will be in effect.

R. M. Grumman, director of the extension division, has been elected to succeed Rev. Eugene Olive as president of the Chapel Hill Kiwanis club for 1930.

Other officers installed were Charles Saunders, district, vice-president, J. Maryon Saunders, district trustee, and W. O. Sparrow, treasurer.

COLTRANE TELLS OF SCHOOL WORK

January Issue of High School Journal Contains Number of Features; Edited by Walker.

The January issue of the High School Journal, which is published monthly during the school year by the University's school of education, made its appearance last Friday, January 3. The Journal is edited by Dean N. W. Walker, with the assistance of the members of the staff of the school of education.

The January issue of the Journal contains several articles of interest. Supt. E. J. Coltrane of the Salisbury city schools, writing upon the subject, "Interpreting the Public Schools: What the High Schools Can Do," discusses the ways and means of bridging the gap between the school and the public. Supt. Coltrane's article is one of several that have been published by the Journal on this topic. Supt. G. B. Phillips, of the Greensboro city schools, writes upon the organization and extension of girls' athletic activities in the high school. Dr. M. R. Trabue discusses the abilities of first-year high school pupils in North Carolina, presenting a comparison with national eighth-grade standards. Dr. A. K. King writes upon the place of history in improving international relations, urging a restatement of the objectives of history and of history-teaching.

Regular columns are edited by various members of the staff of the schools of education, including a Latin column, by Mr. J. M. Gwynn; the Science column, by Dr. C. E. Preston; and the French column, by Dr. Hugo Giduz. Among other departments is "School News and Comments," which contains news and notes on various high schools throughout the state. Several features and developments in North Carolina high schools are discussed in this department, including an account of the John Charles McNeill Library at the Wagram high school.

Knight Shows In Article That South Is Lagging In Education

In one of the principal articles in the current issue of the Outlook and Independent, Professor Edgar W. Knight of the school of education produces evidence from official records to show that the states which formed the Confederacy are far behind in education, when measured by national standards, "although the educational progress of the south, measured by its own past record, has been almost phenomenal in recent years."

The deficiencies are conspicuous, the article shows, in the amount of educational opportunity now provided by the southern states, in the preparation of teachers, in the salaries paid teachers, in the value of school property, in facilities for secondary education, and in other matters.

The southern states are very far behind in libraries. The average per capita circulation of public library books is five times larger in the United States than in the southern states. In college libraries the south does only one-fourth as well as the country as a whole. Connecticut has in its college and universities eight times more books than North Carolina and twenty times more than Arkansas. The University of Illinois expended for books for its library in 1927-28 more money than the combined expenditures for the same purpose by the universities of nine southern states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia; so did the University of Michigan; and Harvard University alone expended for books for its library that year more than was spent for the same purpose by the universities of all the eleven strictly southern states. The libraries of the University of California and the University of Illinois contain 160,000 more volumes than the libraries of all the southern state universities. Harvard has twice as many books as all these eleven universities; and the library of that institution added to its huge collection last year more books than three southern state universities have collected in their libraries since their establishment.

The article points out that the southern states are still "a very fertile field for a zealous but sometimes visionary missionary

HUMAN RELATIONS INSTITUTE TO BE HELD HERE IN 1931

Plans are underway for the quadrennial meeting of the human relations institute here in 1931. The institute was held here in 1927 under the auspices of the University and sponsored by a joint committee picked by the Y. M. C. A. from students and faculty. The committee selects speakers and arranges the program for these institutes.

Some of the students who were here three years ago will probably remember the human relations institute that was held then under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in March, 1927. Since this institute is conducted quadrennially, plans are being made for a 1931 meeting.

The institute consists of a program composed of speakers from all over the country who come here and make addresses on different phases of human relations. The program is divided into three separate divisions. The first part is that of international relations, the second the industrial relations, and the third the interracial relations.

The human relations institute in 1927 lasted for one week, beginning on Sunday, March 20, and closing on Friday, March 25.

Besides delivering addresses on their subject, many of the speakers are invited to conduct seminars during the class period on subjects pertaining to program topics.

In addition to the platform

Debate Council Plans Seven Encounters With Universities And Colleges For This Year

First Debate Is To Be With Emory University This Month.

TO MEET GEORGIA TECH

Radio Debate Over WPTF To Be Held With Virginia Early In April.

The present plans of the debate council for the winter and spring quarters call for intercollegiate debates with approximately seven colleges and universities. Since the same query will be used for several debates, the council plans to use only the following three questions: "Resolved, that the nations of the world should adopt a plan of complete disarmament of all forces, except those which are needed for police purposes," "Resolved, that modern science tends to destroy theistic faith," and "Resolved, that the chain store is detrimental."

The first encounters of the present quarter will occur when the Tar Heel debaters meet Emory and Georgia Tech at Atlanta late in February. The question of modern science and its relation to theistic faith will be debated on these occasions. The forensic rivalry between Carolina and Emory has long been a keen one. Each institution had won the same number of the annual encounters until Parker and Williams won a unanimous decision in the Carolina-Emory debate in 1928. Last year the contest was cancelled by Emory.

Early in April (about April 6) the annual Carolina-Virginia radio debate will be broadcast from Raleigh. The question of the chain store and its relation to modern interests will be used. Last year this radio debate, which was the first in the histories of both institutions, was held in Richmond. The present agreement between the University of North Carolina and the University of Virginia is to the effect that a radio debate between them be held annually—Richmond and some North Carolina town (probably Raleigh) being the scene of the encounter on alternate years.

Later in the month of April there will probably be a dual debate with Boston College: that is, one debate at Chapel Hill and the other at Boston. Tentative arrangements have been made in this connection which give promise of maturing. In the case of these encounters the question of disarmament will be used.

Negotiations are being made for a debate at Chapel Hill with an all-California team, the University of California, the University of Southern California, and Leland Stanford University being represented on the team. Arrangements for this encounter are as yet tentative and do not show great promise of maturing. In the case that this debate is held the question of modern science and its relation to theistic faith will be the topic of controversy.

Northwestern University has agreed to debate Carolina at Chapel Hill in the latter part of April. This encounter seems to be fairly certain at present.

Debates with the following institutions are probable: University of the South, at Chapel Hill; University of Maryland, at College Park; and Harvard University, at Cambridge.

Students in Law School to Take Bar Examination

Out of 142 students in the state who have signified their intention of taking the North Carolina state bar examinations on January 27, 21 are students in the University law school. The greater number of students taking the examinations will be certified to the supreme court by Dean McCormick of the law school. Certification entails at least two years of study in the law school, and completion of certain prescribed courses.

The following are taking the examination: Hal Weaver Blackstock, Henry Bane, Hubert Lynwood Elmore, Alfred Waddell Gholson, Jr., John Frazier Glenn, Jr., Walter Hoyle, James Edwin Johnson, James Birney Linn, John Baker Lewis, Balfour Thorn Lord, Glenwood Crowder Meads, James Edward Magner, Henry Thruman Powell, Jr., Francis Ogden Parker, Parker Roland, Harry Rockwell, Clay Carter Studdert, William David Pope Sharpe, Jr., Neil Sharpe Sowers, Thomas Carlisle Smith, Jr., Young Merritt Smith, Lawrence Henry Wallace.

Ten of these are on the North Carolina Law Review staff. They are: A. W. Gholson, Jr., J. F. Glenn, Jr., Walter Hoyle, J. B. Lewis, H. T. Powell, Jr., Harry Rockwell, N. S. Sowers, T. C. Smith, Jr., Y. M. Smith and L. H. Wallace.

NEW MANAGER FOR THE CAROLINA INN

Plans for modelling the Carolina Inn after the well-known summer resorts of the west are under way following a change in the management of the local hotel. Mrs. Aniie D. Martin and her daughter, Mrs. Anne M. Hunt, have leased the Inn and the cafeteria from George Watts Hill and John Sprunt Hill, owners. I. M. Gattman, present manager, is planning to leave about the middle of this month.

Mrs. Hunt has had wide experience in management of hotels as she was manager of Kenilworth Inn and Victoria Inn in Asheville, and Highlands Lake Inn, Highland. At present she manages Woodfields, East Flat Rock.

Plans of the new managers are to institute southern recipes in both the dining room and cafeteria. Mrs. Martin is said to have established an enviable reputation in resort hotel work in western North Carolina.

LEWIS DORMITORY ELECTS OFFICERS

The members of Lewis ("J") dormitory met in the social room Tuesday night to reorganize the governmental system of the dormitory. The matter of living conditions and conditions for studying were discussed by the group. It was decided to cooperate with the dormitory officers in every way to insure an improvement in the conditions of the dormitory.

The following officers were elected for the remainder of the school year: David W. Bell, Jr., president; C. M. Rives, athletic manager, and F. R. Toms, J. C. Eagles, J. L. Harris, J. W. Kerr, H. Q. L. Little and R. E. Lore, dormitory councilmen.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

We hear of an old lady who refused to meet a man described as a "strip artist," because she objected to painting in the nude.—Punch.

Soviet Russia has abolished Sunday. That's one way to get rid of the traffic problem, at that.—High Point Enterprise.

A benevolent person of our acquaintance, who used to send flannels to the Hottentots, is now mailing books to a friend in Boston in plain wrappers.—Terre Haute Tribune.

Tar Heel Topics

For the benefit of the Weather Man, we wish to state that this is the beginning of the winter quarter instead of the spring quarter.

The Reds have left North Carolina and the Green has come. If the colors of traffic lights mean anything, labor will proceed to go places in this state.

College spirit has about disappeared from the American college campus, according to several recent articles in various publications, but any undergraduate will attest that there is plenty of it—in bottles.

Twenty women's social organizations at Kinston have decided to forego refreshments at their meetings, diverting the money that might be spent on salads and sweets to charity. At last Dame Fashion has become charitable!

A Lehigh University undergraduate broke his wrists, and while they were in splints, wrote an essay which won a $10,000 prize in a nation-wide essay contest. Freshman English instructors might do well to encourage certain of their students to jump off a housetop and land on their hands.

Durham and vicinity have been selected as the place to start the drive to organize hosiery mill employees in the south, according to an announcement by the president of the Hosiery Workers' union. Remembering the Marion attempt, we have decided that our health demands the removal of Durham from our visiting list.

The "Queer" Undergraduate

A college undergraduate is observed by his fellows in the act of reading Schopenhauer, Nieztshce, Kant—and, marvel of marvels, he admits that he is doing it not because some professor is prodding him on with the whiplash of scholastic requirement, but because he is fascinated by the clear logic, the philosophical theories of the men. Immediately he is dubbed a freak, is regarded with suspicion for the rest of his college days.

Another declines to go to the movies with his associates, explaining his refusal on the grounds that "I can't afford it, and even if I could I haven't the time to spare." Instead he expends what is to the average undergraduate a considerable sum for the Fifth Symphony, goes to his fraternity house late at night, when the Rudy Vallee and Helen Kane enthusiasts have departed from the chapter room, and listens to the phonograph rendition of Beethoven's composition for hours. He is "queer," a "goof."

Still another professes an admiration for Shelley and Poe. That alone is not so unusual; many of his fellows ostentatiously proclaim that they have had courses in which the works of these writers were taken up, and that "I don't think they are so bad myself." Very probably these men secretly regard Shelley as a composer of dull, incomprehensible mush and Poe as a mentally deranged, whiskey guzzling dope fiend who wrote sillily insane rimes. But this particular student continues to read Shelley and Poe after he has completed the course covering their works, even purchases volumes of their poetry. He is "a goof."

Most college students expect to receive an education in predigested form. They are mentally lazy, unwilling to dig down into a subject, secure the essentials and think about them until they have made them their own. And they exhibit ill-concealed contempt for the exceptional man who is willing to perform the hard labor and has the capacity for the thinking which is a requisite to the securing of real education. Respect for scholastic achievement is almost unknown on the college campus.

We Need An Auditorium

At present there is nothing which the University of North Carolina needs quite as much as a new, spacious, centrally located auditorium. Although it appears that this need has been recognized for a long time, nothing very definite in the direction of the erection of such a structure seems to adorn the horizon of this vicinity.

Now that Memorial hall has been declared unsafe there is no building on the campus which is adequate to serve even in the capacity of a temporary auditorium. Unsuccessful attempts to heat the Tin Can to the point of ordinary comfort have made it necessary to postpone one of the best of the student entertainment programs which were scheduled for the collegiate year.

Even before Memorial hall was declared unsafe it fell far short of meeting the needs of the student body of the University, to say nothing of the townspeople, visitors, and alumni who are wont to attend the important ceremonies sponsored by this institution. It was built to meet the needs of the Carolina of the days of our grandfathers. Its present appearance, in addition to its other deficiencies, it is all out of keeping with the modern structures on the campus.

Owing to the fact that the University of North Carolina began as a very small college of the Arts and Sciences and then gradually expanded into a modern university including many branches, buildings were added as increases in enrollment dictated. The older buildings, therefore, do not even belong to the same century that the new ones do. The result is a bunch of scattered buildings of different architectures and disorderly arrangement in so far as any definite scheme is concerned. This condition demands that there be a spacious auditorium centrally located with respect to the other buildings of the campus.

Furthermore, the town of Chapel Hill does not maintain a city auditorium, or any place of assemblage which is worthy of note here. The connection which exists between the University and the village of its location is very close, and there is no reason why it should not be. The writer is inclined to think that a large auditorium centrally located with respect to the University campus and the village of Chapel Hill is indispensable to the fostering of the present spirit of intimacy and inter-relationship existing between the students and faculty members of the University and the townspeople.

"Be a Friend in College"

A specious argument in favor of a college course is that college is a good place for making friends. This may or may not be true, depending largely upon the attitudes of winsomeness and repose on the part of all concerned, but the premise often holds a corollary which is far from lovely. Such friends, a man goes on to add, will stand him in good stead in later life; and with this value in mind he goes out to win the friendship of those who later will stand him in good stead. Not a lovely picture this of a man scurrying about the campus to stake out his claims before the best ones are taken. We instinctively feel that something is not fitting in such a picture, and a moment's analysis shows us why. Friendship, like the best values of life, must be sought as an end in itself, as something intrinsically worth while. The minute I realize that a man seeks my friendship for some ulterior end, true friendship becomes an impossibility. For the fullest give and take between us there must be an unshakable confidence that friendship is sought alone for friendship's sake. Can you imagine a worse college than one filled with students who are each struggling to make those friendships which will later prove to be most beneficial in the active life after graduation? To be sure, college friendships often prove to be most helpful. But such beneficence should be expected as a by-product. Don't go to college to make friends; a far truer aim for a college course is to be a friend.—The Intercollegian.

These two contributions to the newspaper-reading public are unique commodities in the world of journalism. They are in no way inter-dependent, but each serves as a perfect complement to the other. They have in common an unswerving nonpartisanship.

The history of these two decades of newspaper achievement, beginning with sub-reporting and culminating in the presidency of two great news institutions, is the history of the career of David Lawrence and of his life itself, so closely are the two interwoven.

When David Lawrence left high school in Buffalo for Princeton University he left the local room of the Buffalo Express for the job of Associated Press correspondent at Princeton. After graduation he stepped into the coveted position of member of the Washington Bureau of the Associated Press. How well he performed his duties is testified by the watch he carries, presented by Melville E. Stone for meritorious service.

Assigned to Big Stories

He was assigned to the big stories—dynamiters in California, revolutionists in Mexico, the State Department and the White House, and then "lead" stories on international affairs of war days — Lawrence marched his beat with the diligence of a sentry on duty, "always on the alert" for that "big story of the day."

As his horizon widened, as his experience embraced Europe as well as North America, and as he plumbed the economic strata that lie beneath the life, political and social, of America, David Lawrence's reputation for depth as well as breadth of view spread among the leaders of American thought and action. His sources multiplied, his duties increased.

But while he was persistently sticking to his task as a writer, he was, like most newspapermen, nursing an ambition to have a newspaper of his own. Characteristic of his life was his dream, a unique publication, a newspaper not for a city, but for a nation. Not a record of passing happenings, but a daily story of the government, a detailed picture of the mighty organization which shapes America's destiny and touches the tap roots of each citizen's well-being.

Realizes His Dream

So in 1926, supported by a little group of public spirited men and women representing every shade of political opinion, he galvanized his dream. The United States Daily appeared and began its growth, until today it brings the diary of the nation into every corner of our own dominions and to all the capitals of the world.

David Lawrence does not contribute to his own paper. Only official news authorized by the government finds expression there. But he is in close touch with its activities. His contacts have widened and his duties increased, but he has never interrupted his writing nor his study of America's daily affairs which his newspaper records and which his dispatch interprets.

Knight Shows That South Is Lagging In Her Education

effort," as shown by the large number of schools maintained in the section by outside religious and philanthropic agencies.

"Many counties, not only in Virginia but in other parts of the south, doubtless have conditions similar to those President Hoover discovered near his camp on the Rapidan river in Madison county, where Ray Burraker took the famous 'possum. . . . If enough men as able and as kindly disposed as the President could be induced to establish summer camps in the south perhaps many of the obligations which southern states have failed to meet fully could be discharged and the underprivileged children could be given the educational opportunity promised by their state constitutions. If the educational requirements of these constitutions were properly observed little need would exist in the south for these numerous St. Peter's-in-the Mountains or St. Mary's-in-the Woods schools," Dr. Knight says.

The political character of educational administration is cited also as a retarding influence. The chief state school officer and country school officers in many of the southern states are selected on a strictly political basis. "Although he occupies potentially a most strategic position for moral and educational leadership, actually the state superintendent of schools is often practically as helpless as the Grand Kleagle of the K. K. K. would be at the Eucharistic Congress.

"The southern states have advanced in education. They certainly needed to do that, but not one of them is yet an educationally advanced state, measured by national standards. These states need to make more progress, and the need is cumulative. The times demand an increased and increasing investment of funds and of trained leadership in education of all, white and black. But the Pollyanna boosters will not help these states to attain to national standards. Already one of them has begun to pay the penalty for extravagant praise and flattery. Last year some of its educational institutions were 'cut off with a shilling' not because of their delinquency but probably because the members of the legislature believed these bedtime stories and that the educational task in the state was finished. The loud beating of the tom-toms about where the south believes it leads may stop its ears to the truth about where it actually lags.

"Disguise the truth as we may," the article concludes, "throw on the twin calamities of the Civil War and the tragic era of reconstruction, on the predominantly rural character of the south, on the presence of the negro, on real or fancied poverty, on the climate, that is, on geography and therefore on God, no matter how we seek to excuse our deficiencies, these remain obvious to even the most casual observer. And whatever the cause of the south's backwardness in education, the affliction itself stifles industry, represses effort, discourages enterprise, weakens the desire for excellence, and makes us satisfied with second-rate achievements."

Research by several college professors has revealed that home-work is extremely bad for school children.

On the first day of the institute, Sunday, March 20, each of the five local pulpits was filled by one of the visiting speakers. Then at each morning chapel during the week one of the specialists made an address. Seminars in classrooms were conducted throughout the day, and each night at 8:30 a mass meeting was held.

Such speakers as Kirby Page, editor of "World Tomorrow"; Arthur Rugh, foreign department Y. M. C. A. in China; Josephus Daniel, journalist and publisher; W. L. Team To Open 1930 Season With Greensboro Y Tonight

Another Hard Scrimmage Held Yesterday In Preparation For Greensboro And Davidson

Quint Hopes To Make It Two in A Row With Y. M. C. A. Team Tonight.

CATS HAVE STRONG TEAM

Neiman and Edwards Expected To Show Up Well at Forward.

The Tar Heel basketball quint yesterday added another hard scrimmage to an already hard two weeks of work and were all set for tonight's first game of the new year.

That game will pit the Tar Heels against the Greensboro Y cagers on their own home floor in Greensboro. Carolina will meet Davidson at Davidson Saturday night.

The two teams have met previously this year. Carolina won the decision by a comfortable margin in a pre-Christmas practice game. But Greensboro played that night with a team that had just two nights of practice together. They have been getting in hard and regular work since and the Tar Heels are expecting a harder task.

Carolina, in turn, will probably show more forward strength, with the addition to the squad of Dave Neiman and John Edwards, both out of college when the first battle was staged. Neiman and Edwards have been leading the forward contenders since their return to the squad, and it looks as if the Tar Heels may show considerably more strength offensively.

These two boys will probably start at forward, with veterans at the other posts—"Puny" Harper at center and Billy Brown and Artie Marpet at guard.

Coach Ashmore will probably use as many reserves as possible to get a further line on his men. Due to see service also are Slater, Cleland and Hutchinson, forwards; Dameron and Longest, centers, and Choate and Alexander, guards.

A squad of twelve players and two trainers, under Coach Ashmore will leave the campus at 2:30 o'clock today for Greensboro where they meet the Greensboro Y tonight. The starting lineup has not been announced but in all probability will consist of Harper, center; Nieman and Alexander, forwards; and Marpet and Brown at guards. The men making the trip are: Neiman, Cleland, Hutchinson, Sher, Harper, Dameron, Longest, Edwards, Brown, Marpet, Alexander and Choate.

Johnsons Return

Dr. and Mrs. Guy B. Johnson returned to Chapel Hill Saturday from Greenville, Texas, where Mrs. Johnson has been visiting relatives for the past few weeks. Dr. Johnson also spent the holidays in Greenville.

Both Dr. Johnson and his wife are connected with the University institute for research in social science.

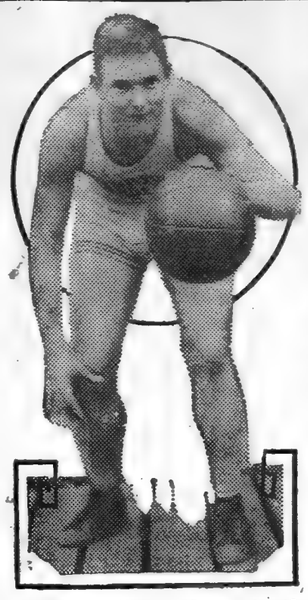
J. D. McNairy lays claim to being one of the Tar Heel's right hand men. But then most of the rest of us are right handed, too.

(Sports Editor)

VARSITY BASKETBALL'S supremacy will be severely tested within the next two weeks with the advent of both winter football and the intramural basketball league. The intramural league will start on the 13th and winter practice for the gridiron warriors will have a formal opening exactly one week later, January 20. In addition to these two new entries on the winter sport program, the University track squad is working hard to get in shape for the indoor meet which will be held soon, and is also trying to whip into shape a mile relay team for the Milrose meet in New York.

THE UNIVERSITY TRACK team had the distinction of receiving an invitation to the nationally and internationally known Milrose indoor meet which is to be held in the near future in New York. This meet is one of the most important indoor events of the year, and the acceptance of the invitations for a mile relay team's entry will be considered seriously by the track officials. Due to the short time allowed it will be extremely difficult to prepare a representative team for this meet, but plans are being considered for an entry. In addition to the mile relay team it is highly probably that Charlie Farmer, sophomore sprint star, will represent the Tar Heels. Farmer's past performances will no doubt place him high among the entries in this meet.

THE RETURN OF promising material to the boxing, tennis and basketball teams substantially boost the Tar Heels' prospects in these sports for 1930. The return of Neiman and Edwards to the varsity basketball team has been the solution of a serious problem which faced the Tar Heel coaches before the Christmas holidays. The return of Vaughan and Davis has lifted quite a shadow from the brow of Coach Rowe. Vaughan's showing last year predicts for him a career of one of the best in his weight in the south this year, while Davis clears up quite a problem in the 165 pound weight. Last year Davis fought in a heavier weight than his usual class, and it is likely that such will be the necessity this year. Sonny Graham, Hinkey Hendlin and Phil Liskin will add materially to the 1930 hopes of the tennis team and it is expected that they will push many of the older men hard for tennis honors at the University.



They are looking for the goat in that Wall street matter; they have the lamb already.

Art Marpet

Artie Marpet, New York boy, is one of Coach Ashmore's three veterans this year. Last year he played dependable ball although a sophomore. He is a good floor man and paired with Bill Brown gives the University varsity five the skeleton of a fine defense.

Bill Brown

Breaking into the starting line-up last year for the first time Bill Brown, veteran guard, has remained there ever since. He played with the freshman quint his freshman year, but it was his junior year before he earned a regular place on the varsity.

At The Carolina

Numbered among the many accomplishments of Norma Terris, beautiful and talented stage star who sings the leading feminine role in "Married in Hollywood," Fox Movietone talking, singing and dancing Vienese love song, is the ability to remember the name of every person to whom she has ever been introduced. She has never taken a memory course, attributing her unusual mental equipment to a gift. It is not an inherited one, as neither her father nor her mother were blessed with extraordinary memories.

Miss Terris finds her accomplishment of much value to her in committing lines for all talking screen productions, just as she did when she was on the New York dramatic stage. She reads her script once and has her lines perfectly learned.

The story, dialog and lyrics were written by Harlan Thompson, with added music by David Stamper. The picture was directed by Marcel Silver, with Mr. Thompson in charge of stage direction.

FIRE DESTROYS PINES TEA ROOM

The Pines, located about three miles from town, was destroyed Wednesday afternoon by a fire believed to have been caused by defective wiring. Soon after the discovery of the fire the flames had spread so rapidly that it was possible for Mrs. M. R. Vickers, operator of the tea room, and her servants to save only part of their clothing. The loss was partly covered by insurance.

The ten-room structure including the large dance pavilion was burned to the ground. The local fire department was summoned but was unable to send trucks to the scene as the tea room is located several miles outside the fire zone.

Only Mrs. Vickers and her servants were in the building at the time of the fire and their efforts to prevent the spread of the flames were of no avail as the fire had already gained considerable headway when it was first discovered.

The operator plans to rebuild the structure immediately.

The Pines was well known to University students as banquets were quite often held there during the year. It has been in operation for about three years and is patronized largely by students.

TRUSTEES DECIDE FATE OF MEMORIAL HALL JANUARY 28

Full Meeting of Board To Be Held in Governor's Office Latter Part of Month To Consider Question of Auditorium For University.

Final action as to whether or not Memorial hall is to be demolished because it is considered dangerous will be determined at a meeting of the full board of trustees to be held January 28 at 11 o'clock in the office of Governor Gardner, chairman, ex-officio.

The executive committee, meeting a few weeks ago, decided to leave final decision to the full board. In the meantime University authorities have the space immediately around the hall inclosed in order to prevent possible injury should the building collapse.

The executive committee will meet again in the governor's office on Tuesday, January 14, at 11 o'clock, according to Henry M. London, secretary.

The closing of Memorial hall has caused a problem for University officials in holding chapel for the freshmen and sophomores. At the present time the freshmen meet every Tuesday and Wednesday, while the second year men meet Mondays in Gerrard hall.

Siberian Academy Presents Fungi To Botany Department

The botany department recently received a large number of fungi from the Siberian Agricultural Academy at Omsk, Russia. The plants were forwarded to the department here by Professor K. E. Murashkinsky, professor of plant pathology in that institution. The fungi were sent in exchange for five numbers of the Mitchell Journal containing articles on fungi by Dr. W. C. Coker, of the botany department.

Professor Murashkinsky, in acknowledging receipt of the Mitchell Journals, says:

"Hereby I flatter myself to utter my utmost gratitude for your kind consideration of granting me your most interesting and valuable work. Having the intention in close proximity to submit you a package with some species of fungous you will, I think, thereby avail yourselves with the opportunity of communicating me your decisive conclusion respecting those specimens which have, hitherto, not yet been determined."

Senior Engineers To Overhaul Plane

The senior mechanical engineering class in engines is overhauling the Liberty airplane engine which was obtained by the department from the government last spring. The class is working on the job only once a week, during the regular engine laboratory, but they plan to have it completely overhauled and ready to run during the latter part of the quarter.

Mr. Bailey, instructor in aeronautics, stated yesterday that even if the engine is in condition to run, it will be impossible to run it at any speed other than idling, because of the fact that the laboratory is not equipped with any apparatus sufficiently large to load an engine of this power.

Series of Informal Dances To Be Given

The Graduate Club is inaugurating a series of dances to be held every Friday night in the Smith building. These dances will be very informal. The first will be held Friday night, January 10, immediately following the speech of Dr. E. R. Groves.

E. R. Groves Attends Sociological Meet

In an account of the recent meeting of the American Sociological Society, appearing in the Daily Tar Heel for the past Tuesday, the name of Professor E. R. Groves as a University delegate was omitted. He was prominently active in the discussions of the society.

Nationally renowned as an authority on family relationships, Professor Groves came to the institute for research in social science from Boston University. At the time when he announced his intention of leaving Boston he was in demand by the University of Illinois, the University of Iowa, and other large western schools.

On one of his many lecture tours, Professor Groves visited the University, and, finding the atmosphere to his liking, was secured for the institute by its director, Dr. Howard W. Odum. Officials of the institute and the members of the sociology faculty feel that they have in him a most valued worker.

At the sessions of the sociological society, Professor Groves was chairman of several groups considering family problems.

He is chairman of a committee on the study of the family in the White Conference on Child Health and Conservation. Other members include Ernest R. Burgess of the University of Chicago, Leonard K. Frank of the Spelman Fund, Miss M. Van Rensselaer of Cornell University, Dr. J. D. Ford of Harvard University, Miss Lita Bane of the Ladies Home Journal, Dr. G. S. Stevenson and Dr. Margaret Justin.

Professor Groves is also chairman of the division on the family of the American Sociological Society and took a prominent part in the recent Washington meetings.

Umstead Is Elected President of Club

John Umstead, alumnus of the University and local manager of the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, was made president of the Julian Price club. This office is considered the highest honor which may be attained by any member of the field force, as the winner "must meet very difficult requirements as regards persistence throughout the year and must show large production for the current year."

Another alumnus of the University, Charles W. Gold, has been made temporary manager of the Washington, D. C., branch of the Jefferson Standard.

Dr. and Mrs. Chase To Be at Home Every Wednesday Afternoon

McCorkles To Give Recital At Southern Pines Next Sunday

Mr. and Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle will give a joint piano and violin recital in Southern Pines next Sunday night.

The concert will be the fifth presented at the Church of Wide Fellowship in the winter resort. Rev. E. W. Serl, chautauqua platform lecturer, is pastor there throughout the winter, and the Sunday evening programs consist of various concert attractions.

Mr. and Mrs. McCorkle will play there twice this year instead of once as in previous years. They have done much concert work away from the University, having appeared in ten programs during the past year. Their plans for this year provide for almost as many, including one at Greensboro in two weeks and an appearance in Danville later.

The University will be represented in several other Southern Pines programs, the Y. M. C. A. having charge of one in February, and the University orchestra being scheduled to play in March.

Judge Biggs Talks To Law Students

Judge J. Crawford Biggs of Raleigh addressed the law school Thursday morning on the subject of "Practice in the Federal Courts." He dealt with the jurisdiction of the federal courts, the procedure in bringing actions at law and suits in equity, and trial of the case in the district courts. Judge Biggs also explained in his address the methods of appeal to both the circuit court of appeals and the United States supreme court.

Judge Biggs has had extensive practice in the United States courts, and was special advisor to the Attorney General of the United States during the administration of President Woodrow Wilson.

ELECTRIC COMPANY OFFERS SOLUTION PARKING PROBLEM

A possible solution to the serious automobile parking problem is the unusual and unique automobile parking machine developed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co.

Parking the car for the theatre or the dance is no longer a serious problem with "parking machines." The machine consists of two endless chains passing over wheels at the top and bottom. Platforms are suspended between these chains, each providing space for one automobile. The housing for the machine is unique, having no floors. The machine is very flexible in its application. It may be built into a theatre, apartment house, department store, garage or wherever quick parking is a problem.

Machines are parked vertically, each platform providing for one car. It will deliver the car required, and only that car, by the insertion of a key, check, or coin in the slot. The delivery of the car is entirely automatic, thereby doing away with the necessity for attendants.

Listed among the advantages of this parking machine are parking in the center of desired locality, keeping downtown streets clear of curb-parked cars reducing the necessity of street widening, and many other applications.

PLAYMAKERS TO OBSERVE YEARLY NIGHT OF FROLIC

All Faculty Cast Will Stage English Christmas Play As Part Of Revels Tonight.

Members of the faculty will play the leading roles in the Twelfth Night Revels of the Carolina Playmakers which will be given as the closing event of the annual dramatic directors conference in the Playmaker theatre here tonight, beginning at 7:30 o'clock.

An all-faculty cast will stage the old English Christmas play, Saint George and the Dragon, as was done last year, with P. C. Farrar, J. O. Bailey, R. R. Potter, M. T. Van Hecke, A. S. Wheeler, G. F. Horner and English Bagby participating. Professor Farrar will direct the performance.

Following the tradition, the kitchen scene from Shakespeare's Twelfth Night will be enacted by members of the faculty and students, including Professors U. T. Holmes, Hubert C. Heffner and W. E. Caldwell. Holmes Bryson of Asheville and Louise Thacker of Greensboro will be the student members of the cast.

The Playmakers Revels is an annual event, based on the old English custom of observing twelve days of fun and frolic immediately following Christmas. The twelfth night, on which there was much hilarity, was the consummation of the holidays.

An addition was made to the program of the Twelfth Night Revels when it was announced last night that the Carolina Fencing club would present a fifteen minute comedy, "The Return of Count Disease," the play being written by Digby and Fred Wardlaw, University students, who take parts in their own drama.

There are nine characters in the playlet, all of whom are practicing fencing on the Uni-

Local Bank Grows

M. C. S. Noble Observes 25th Anniversary As Director.

The stockholders of the Bank of Chapel Hill held their annual meeting last Friday, January 3. It happened that this was the 25th anniversary of the election of M. C. S. Noble to the board of directors, and the gathering felicited him upon his long service and his continuing vigor. He has been president of the bank for 20 years.

In his annual report he reviews the bank's growth since it was organized in April, 1899, with a paid up capital of $2,500. In the following August it had total resources of $10,606, and listed on the balance sheet were the items: profit, $14.12; paid-up capital, $2,437. The first stockholders were C. L. Lindsay, D. McCauley, R. W. Winston, J. S. Carr, and J. C. Biggs.

The total resources are now $1,850,000. The capital is $30,000, the surplus $70,000, and the undivided profits $50,000. The deposits have mounted to $1,500,000.

"An illustration of our growth," says Mr. Noble in his report, "is the fact that we paid our first cashier $30 a month, a salary slightly less than we pay our present janitor for part-time service."

A semi-annual dividend of 4 per cent. was declared in January, 1900 and that rate was maintained for several years, with occasional extra dividends thrown in. The dividend rate is now 10 per cent. semi-annually, and recently an extra dividend of 5 per cent. was declared.

At the meeting last Friday the former directors were all re-elected. They are M. C. S. Noble (president), D. D. Carroll, Clyde Eubanks, J. S. Patterson, I. W. Pritchard, R. L. Strowd, B. B. Lloyd, R. A. Eubanks, M. E. Hogan, and George Howe.

Yackety Yack Notice

There will be an important meeting of the editoral staff of the Yackety Yack at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

STUDENTS TURN FIREMEN SAVING ABERNETHY HOME

Ruffin And Maybank Extinguish Blaze Before Firemen Arrive.

The third fire-alarm of the new year was turned in yesterday morning at 10:30 by Dr. E. A. Abernethy, in whose home occurred a fire of indeterminate origin which resulted in trifling damage.

A passer-by in the hall of the third floor of Dr. Abernethy's home noticed smoke curling out from underneath the doors of one of the rooms. The fire department was called but by the time that Chief Foister and his fire-fighters, fully equipped with axes, hose and other fire-fighting equip[illegible] long, unwieldy ladde[illegible] the building, Charles Ruffin and Thebe Maybank had dashed into the burning room and with heroic spirit and a good chemical fire-extinguisher, thoroughly extinguished the entire conflagration—which consisted of one slightly used wicker-chair.

The crowd that gathered outside the home of the University physician was large, for the fire was conveniently held during the chapel period. But the mob of citizens, much like the Romans who were not given a gory enough spectacle in the circuses, expressed keen disappointment in the petitness of the blaze and walked away dejectedly, sighing for the good old days when fires like those of the Pickard Hotel, Phi Delta Theta, and, more recently, Delta Sigma Phi and Chi Psi occurred more frequently. As one spectator remarked, as he clambered into his new Ford which was to take him back to Carrboro, "Yes sir, these days are mighty sorry ones. The whole campus is changing. Why, I remember the day when the South building was the South building and not a mere misnomer for a building right in the center of the campus. Yes sir, the good old days are gone. What do our fires amount to nowadays, anyway? A chair, or a wooden rick. What we need are fewer students meddling with fires. Why, if those two boys, Ruffin and Maybank, hadn't jumped into that there room and stopped the flame, we would have had a real, right looking fire by the time the good old Chief Never-prompt Foister and his troupe of the "Four Sleeping Firemen" would have come. Things are coming to a point where it don't pay to stir at the sound of the fire-siren anymore. Mark my words, young man, the day isn't far off when Chapel Hill will have to go through months on end without a serious fire. And when that time comes, I'm pulling out for Chicago."

Steele Has Play

Famous Author Will Take Up Residence Here.

Wilbur Daniel Steele, who took a lease on the Greenlaw house recently, has written a play which is now being presented in Atlantic City and will have its New York opening next week. The necessity of attending rehearsals has prevented Mr. Steele from spending much time in his new home here since the family moved in. Mrs. Steele and the boys are established in the house, and Mr. Steele will probably be with them a few days hence. Thurston, the oldest boy, is going to New York to see his father's play.

GRAIL WILL HOLD FIRST DANCE OF QUARTER TONIGHT

The Grail will hold the first dance of this quarter in the Bynum gymnasium tonight with the Carolina Buccaneers playing. The Buccaneers are said to have one of the best arrangers in the south and their musical program will consist of, besides the regular dance orchestration, a singing trio, two good soloists and vocal improvisitations by various members of the orchestra. A special attraction is offered at intermission in a program by Jack Wardlaw and his Banjo Boys.

On account of a deficiency in the receipts for the dances of last quarter, the price of admission to the Grail dances has been raised to one dollar. The dance will begin promptly at nine.

MOCCASIN KILLED ON EAST CAMPUS

A sure sign that spring is here was unclosed yesterday afternoon at four o'clock when a three and a half foot Highland Moccasin was killed at the junction of Senior and President's Walks on East Campus.

The snake was discovered by a small boy whose cries attracted the attention of an old man, whose name could not be ascertained by the Tar Heel reporter.

The man hit the snake with a large rock breaking its back. A Tar Heel reporter carried the reptile to the editorial office where it attracted considerable attention. At six o'clock last night the snake was still writhing and twisting about with no signs of death.

An examination of the mouth of the reptile disclosed the fangs and poison sacs, and the markings of its back proved it to be a branch of the specie of the deadly Moccasin.

STUDENTS TO BE ON THE AIR NEXT FRIDAY EVENING

Wex Malone and Lil Jackson To Give Musical Program At University Radio Hour Over Raleigh Station.

The University radio hour, over station WPTF in Raleigh, will be presented at 7:30 o'clock next Friday evening, featuring Lil Jackson and Wex Malone. They will give a program of popular song hits.

Miss Jackson, a transfer from Ward-Belmont College in Nashville, Tenn., is a junior in the University. Her part on the program will be composed of several vocal numbers.

Wex Malone is prominent on the campus for his activities in musical work, especially for his work for the Wigue and Masque club. He is the musical director of this organization, a student musical and dramatic group. With Block Bryson, Malone was co-author of the musical show presented by the Wigue and Masque last year.

Malone and Bryson also wrote the new football marching song, adopted at the Virginia game last quarter. At present this pair is engaged in writing a new musical comedy for the 1930 production of the dramatic club.

Malone will accompany Miss Jackson in her numbers and will also play several piano solos.

William Beebe, Explorer, To Speak Here January 30

William Beebe, noted explorer and author, will give an illustrated lecture, "Beneath Tropic Seas," in Swain hall, January 30, as the first number on the student entertainment program this quarter.

Mr. Beebe has, it is said, by means of his popular writings on the subject of birds and insects of tropic lands and on the wonders of the ocean depths, made the field as interesting and as familiar as the ordinary life in this part of the world. On his famous trip to the Galapagos Islands three years ago he chose the depths of the ocean as a new field for investigation. Up to that time little had been written about the weird, fantastic creatures that live miles below the surface of the sea, because little was known about them.

With the help of his newly perfected diving apparatus and cast steel camera for making pictures beneath the surface of the sea, Mr. Beebe on the cruise of the Arcturus to Haiti and at Nonsuch Island, off Bermuda, gave a record of underwater life that surpasses any other deep sea explorations yet attempted. The Bell Telephone laboratories had equipped Mr. Beebe's diving helmet with a telephone. With a secretary in a boat at the top end of the telephone line, the scientist would spend hours every day walking about on the bed of the sea, going as deep on one occasion as 60 feet, watching the fish, telephoning his observations to the surface or making notes himself with a lead pencil on a zinc tablet. In his trips to the ocean bottom the explorer found fish that had never before been seen, some of brilliant colors that carried their own electric lighting equipment for use in the vast darkness of the deep sea, and others that burst open upon being brought to the surface.

William Beebe is said to be as fascinating a speaker as he is writer, being a master at drawing pictures of the strange life that he has found on his unique adventures in regions little known to man. Mr. Beebe is an author of note and has written several recent books that are entertaining as well as scientific. Among these are "Galapagos—World's End," "The Arcturus Adventures," "Beneath Tropic Seas," and "Jungle Days."

MacCarthy Honored

Dr. Gerald P. MacCarthy of the department of Geology has recently been elected a fellow of the Geological Society of America. This election gives the Geology department four fellows in the society. They are Dr. Collier Cobb, Dr. W. F. Prouty, Joel H. Swartz and G. P. MacCarthy.

The Chi Omega sorority will move to 227 Franklin street on January 15 into the house belonging to Mrs. Patterson and Mrs. Wilson.

Holland Is Made Lab Assistant

W. T. Holland who has completed the work for the degree of bachelor of science in geology has returned to Chapel Hill for graduate work in geology.

He will also be laboratory assistant in some of the geology courses.

Miller Visits Here

Clarence E. Miller, A. B. and A. M. of the University, was a visitor in Chapel Hill during the holidays. While here Mr. Miller gave Dr. Cobb's geology class some moving pictures of two trips which he made across the continent last summer.

Mr. Miller is now teaching mineralogy at the Chase school of applied science in Cleveland, Ohio.

Hamilton Has an Article on Abigail Adams in Scribner's

J. G. deRoulhac Hamilton, of the history faculty in the University, has an article in the January Scribner's entitled "Abigail Adams: A Joy Forever." It is a sketch of the wife of the second President of the United States. Mr. Hamilton characterizes her as "the most interesting in her life, and the most stimulating in her personality," of all the women who have been the First Lady of the Land.

The sketch is based mainly on information obtained from her letters. The merit of the piece, however, lies not in the information, which is no doubt in reach of many other students of history, but in the interpretation of the character of this intelligent and lively woman, in the choice of incident to lay before the reader, and in the vividness with which the writer fits his subject into the Revolutionary and post-Revolutionary scene. Mr. Hamilton's years of research in the records of that period of American history, and his consequent thorough familiarity with the great figures of the period and their relations with one another, have enabled him to present a picture which would be impossible to a dabbler.

Abigail was "possessed from early youth of much spirit and a vivacity that even the austerity of a Puritan personage never subdued," and some of the credit for her qualities is given to a father who was equipped with "something practically unknown among the Puritan clergy—a sense of humor." John Adams followed what was then looked upon as the "low trade" of a lawyer, and Parson Smith's congregation did not like it, and he acquainted the congregation with his opinion by preaching them a sermon on the text, "For John came neither eating bread nor drinking wine, and yet ye say he hath a devil."

John and Abigail were married in 1764. "She never wavered in her support of him in every crisis"—and those times were highly charged with crises. She was an active supporter of the colonies' revolt, and "there was never a time when she was not ready to make the sacrifice for the cause." . . . "She watched with her children the ruin of Charlestown and the smoke of Bunker Hill." After the war

When a day passes without a building burning in Chapel Hill, that will be news.

The blizzard which was reported as heading for the south from the middle west last Tuesday was evidently just another newspaper man's brainstorm.

Down in "J" they reorganized the governmental system of the dormitory the other night. Judging from the state of things in the quadrangles last quarter there wasn't much government left to reorganize.

A man was killed at Rutherfordton Wednesday while driving his first car. Most people prefer to wait until their second or third, when they have become a trifle more proficient, and killing some one else.

The trustees probably are taking the easiest way out by waiting until January 28 to decide the fate of Memorial hall—the darn thing very likely will have fallen down by then and they won't have to do any deciding.

Prohibition Ready For The Shelf

Recently a long series of incidents illustrative of the dismal failure of prohibition administration was brought to a climax when a crowd of angry Boston citizens ripped several coast guard recruiting posters from their standards and tore them to pieces while officers helplessly looked on. The men had attended a mass meeting in historic Faneuil hall at which the killing of three rum-runners in Rhode Island waters by coast guardsmen was denounced as murder in its worst form, cloaked under the garb of authority.

This week the Vermont Supreme court ruled that a provision in the state prohibition enforcement law which holds that intoxicated persons brought to judgment must tell where they secured the inebriating fluid, is unconstitutional. North Carolina has a similar law, but it has been obsolete for years. It was not officially declared unconstitutional, but it has been relegated, like thousands of other American state and federal laws, into desuetude.

These two occurrences are added to an impressive list of evidences that the American public is thoroughly disgusted with prohibition. The 18th amendment is about ready for the shelf; it has been sufficiently demonstrated that it is woefully ineffective as well as oppressive.

Our machinery for amending the constitution is highly complicated, and it is probable that the prohibition law will not be cast officially upon the legislative junkpile for many years, if ever. But our guess is that it will be shorn gradually of all pretensions to real power by judicial interpretation and popular opinion.

Why the Dormitory Stores Should Be Abolished

Ever since the opening of the dormitory stores in September a great deal of opposition has been voiced by the Chapel Hill merchants. At first the attack was directed against the stores because they cut down the night trade and took a great deal of the business in candies, drinks, and the like off the street. Then an opposition developed on the ground that the stores were in violation of the theory of government; the state should not run stores in competition with local merchants, or aid the college boys in competing with the merchants. Every effort to close the dormitory stores was made by the merchants, but without success.

When the stores started taking up pressing, cleaning, shoe repairing, and the like they did a good deed for the students; agents, who were in the habit of disturbing the rooms during the hours when most people want to study, were excluded. There could be little objection to the selling of candies, chewing gum, and cakes as boys had been peddling them in the dormitories before the stores were established. When drinks were put in, there was a sound objection from the merchants as the boys pay no taxes for this privilege and the merchants do; it is unfair competition in this respect. From drinks, the business spread to other things. One store put in a complete line of toilet articles, razors, soap, shaving cream, and virtually became a department store. Another one even started taking orders for fruits.

As long as the boys confined themselves to legitimate articles of trade there was some justification for the stores. The business they have been doing in their stores is practically the same in type and volume as that carried on last year by various agents in each dormitory. The argument was used that the stores gave a few deserving self-help students a chance to make enough money to stay in school; certainly no objection can be raised to self-help students making an honest living. If the stores had stopped at this, then conditions would have been fairly satisfactory. But conditions have degenerated to such a state that abolition of the stores is demanded by a consideration of existing conditions.

In the first place a large majority of the stores are selling punch boards and other gambling devices; this is being done with the knowledge, but not the consent of the University authorities, and in violation of the state laws. We may suppose the boys have been warned about this practice, but nothing has been done to stop them. Enormous profits can be made off of these punch boards; in many of the stores they furnish the chief source of revenue.

In at least one of the stores liquor has been purchased by one of our acquaintances. Others, even if they do not actually sell liquor, secure it for the boys and act as agents for some bootlegger. Liquor will be purmhased by college boys, but when it is sold through stores operated by the University, then things have gone too far and common decency calls for some immediate and severe action to be taken.

The stores may have the sanction of the state sanitary department, and perhaps general cleanings are conducted in anticipation of the sanitary inspector, but in a number that we have visited, cleanliness seems never to have been considered by the keepers.

Those operating the stores are not self-help students exclusively. Some boys of average financial means are realizing good profits from the stores. A number of the stores have recently been sold by boys to whom the concession was originally granted. Some are operating the stores under the names of other boys.

After a consideration of these aspects of the situation, we believe the stores should be abolished. They have abused the privileges granted them, and many are violating the state laws in the operation of punch boards. Certainly those in authority should see fit to conduct an investigation. If conditions are as bad generally as we have observed them to be in the stores we are acquainted with, then authorities will do away with them; if not, then some change ought to be made and many of the evils in the present conditions remedied.

Education And Success

It is by no means an uncommon thing to hear people claim that colleges and universities are places where young men and women spend four years in leisure and the pursuit of indolent happiness, mostly at the expense of the state and philanthropists. This latter claim they base on the fact that students pay only about one-fourth of the cost of their college or university training. The number of citizens of the state of North Carolina who do not believe that the state is ever repaid in a material way for such expenditures is astonishing.

Persons who fall into the category described above seem not to realize that education and industry are inseparably linked together under present-day conditions. The two go hand in hand. Through close cooperation education and industry can be of great mutual benefit, resulting in an acceleration of profits to those whom they serve. A number of the largest business concerns in the nation today have recently installed personnel departments whose function is to select college men and give them specialized training at the expense of the company. Such is the importance which successful business men attach to college training.

It is interesting to note in this connection that those persons who destructively criticize present-day collegiate policies are almost invariably those who have never attended any institution of collegiate rank and who rely upon rumor for their information. There are still a number of industries which prefer men who have spent their earlier years learning the trade rather than in the pursuit of a college education. Henry Ford, for example, denied his son the privilege of a college education. But has this great automobile manufacturer ever attended a college, or has he personal acquaintance with collegiate education? The attitude of Henry Ford is a typical one. The weight of the opinions of such persons is undoubtedly listed at too high a figure.

The leading industries of the country are coming more and more to seek college men for executive positions. Such an interlinking the writer believes to be of great advantage to the industries, the students, and the educational institutions involved. That education and industry are destined to go hand in hand is one of the signs of the time which cannot be justly overlooked.

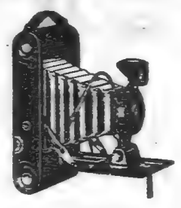
Dr. R. E. Coker, a faculty member of the University of North Carolina Greek letter fraternity to whom the state department of insurance has pointed the finger of suspicion in connection with a fire which during the holidays razed an alleged over-insured building and partially cleared the premises for the new fraternity house to be erected, writes to Commissioner Boney in protest against the publicity given to what amounts to no more than gossip. Dr. Coker offers some testimony in rebuttal; but since there is no real evidence before the court of public opinion, there is no adequate reason for the consideration of his testimony or that of Deputy Commissioner W. A. Scott which first brought the matter to the state's attention.

It might be well enough, however, to submit a few remarks with regard to this deputy commissioner's methods. He has been, to all appearances, an especially effective ferreter-out of misbegotten fires. For at least fifteen years he has been investigating all probable and many improbable attempts to collect insurance ahead of acts of God, rats or defective wiring. Rather generally one of the first steps in an investigation has been an interview given to the newspapers.

The average detective works quietly, not to say stealthily; Captain Scott permits — yea, even invites — palpitant young reporters to paw over his clues almost at will. Sometimes the newspaper discussion serves to bring out more evidence, and doubtless furthers the work of the investigator. Anyhow, the newspaper, having the quoted word of a state official as authority, is relatively safe in voicing suspicion against a private citizen.



As to the guilt or innocence of the fraternity held before the public gaze as a possible incendiary the Daily News has no opinion. It neither accepts nor rejects the contentions of the representative of the insurance department or of the college professor speaking for his younger brethren in the bond.

It is, however, strongly of the mind that over-insurance is a matter which may be safely left to the insurance companies, who, of course, have the right to call in the insurance department for an investigation of fires—that is one thing the insurance people pay taxes for. But these investigations should not be conducted with a blare of trumpets or the rattle of the keys of newspaper typewriters. It might, indeed, be well enough to let a majority of suspicions await the action of solicitor and grand jury.

Otherwise, the simple-minded citizenship may entertain the suspicion that both insurance department and press are being used to build a fire under the patrons of insurance companies.

Wandered we down the streets of our lovely village. New faces met our gaze, newcomers we chanced to see.

Winter, the "working quarter," has swooped down upon us with sudden and ferocious vigor. The Puritan-like severity of its laws and the lamentable conditions of our radiator make us shiver. Nevertheless, let's get down to business and make sure that we get one of two things: either a good boot on our profs, or some idea of the contents of our textbooks. 'Tis pleasant to observe, at least, that the winter quarter is somewhat shorter than the fall quarter.

Some of the professors around here tell us that the "better classes" are dying out. We cannot believe, however, that they have reference to Chapel Hill. The number of professors' wives which we habitually see trundling the new crop of babies up and down in front of the Post Office is a sight which is very arresting to the attention. "Ootsey, tootsey! Toote as oo tan be!" Such remarks we have chanced to hear.

This year the high schools of the state have chosen for their annual forensic tournament this subject: "Resolved, that North Carolina should adopt the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the classification of property for taxation." In all probability the greatest movement in that direction will take place when the high school orators journey to Chapel Hill to participate in the latter stages of the tournament.

Basketball in Southern Conference circles has been rather slow in getting under way, with very few games played this past week. South Carolina, Clemson, N. C. State, Louisiana State, V. M. I., and North Carolina met foes outside the conference, while Duke, in meeting Virginia and Maryland, furnished the only games having any bearing on official standing of the teams.

Duke continued the pre-holiday burst of speed and high scoring by taking the Virginia Cavaliers in tow Tuesday night 65-32. Croson, Blue Devil center, tallied 18 points to bring his total for three games up around 80. In the games with the Greensboro and Raleigh Y. M. C. A.'s Croson averaged over a point every two minutes. The Blue Devils had a harder time disposing of Maryland Thursday, and just nosed out a 28-27 victory. Croson was held to nine points.

Four all-South Carolina quints met Tuesday. Clemson dropped one to Furman, 28-34, while South Carolina walked over P. C. in easy fashion, 44-19. The Gamecocks haven't run against conference opposition yet but have shown considerable strength against other teams.

Wake Forest didn't go so hot on the northern trip, dropping three in a row. The only close game for the Deacons was the Richmond Y game Thursday, which went 28-27 against the Baptists. Wake Forest lost to Georgetown 20-35 and to the Navy 20-39.

All the big five teams saw action this week against outside opponents. Up to today, Wake Forest had played three games this week, Davidson three, State one, Duke two and Carolina one.

Davidson and Carolina meet tonight in the first tilt with any bearing on the state title. So far big five teams have been more than able to hold their own against their antagonists. Davidson, with a defeat at the hands of Furman Thursday, and Wake Forest, with three consecutive set-backs this week, are the only ones who have lost since the holidays.

Davidson Wildcats stepped out in Charlotte Monday to open their 1930 season with a 33-18 trouncing of the Charlotte Y. M. C. A. and then trimmed Woffard 29-15 Wednesday. They weren't so successful with the South Carolina Baptist aggregation, however, and trailed Furman 33-20 at the end of the play Thursday night. The Cats entertain the Tar Heels on their floor tonight in the first intercollegiate contest of the season for each of them, as well as being the first clash of big five teams.

State has been taking it easy this week, engaging the High Point outfit in a mid-week scrap Wednesday and having little difficulty in almost doubling the score.

The early season standing of Duke is more impressive than that of any other big five outfit, but until more games have been played it is hardly fair to formulate comparative ratings. None of the other members of the big five have had real tests of their strength as yet.

Results of games engaged in by conference teams this week up to Friday follow:

TUESDAY

Clemson 28, Furman 34.

South Carolina 44, Presbyterian College 19.

WEDNESDAY

N. C. State 44, High Point 24.

Duke 65, Virginia 32.

THURSDAY

Duke 28, Maryland 27.

V. M. I. 32, Hampden Sidney 16.

L. S. U. 24, Mississippi College 27.

Virginia 19, St. Johns (Annapolis) 35.

Forty Teams Enter Basketball League

Both the dormitory and fraternity leagues of the intramural association will go into action Monday afternoon. Twenty-five teams, are entered in the fraternity league and fifteen teams, including four independent outfits, make up the dormitory group. It is possible that this number may be added to before the race gets underway.

The following teams have been entered in the basketball league to be conducted by the intramural department during the winter quarter:

Dormitory league—Old West, New Dorms, Grimes, Steele, F (Aycock), Ruffin, Manly, Old East, J (Lewis), Mangum, Carr, Stadium, Question Marks, Law school (1), Law school (2).

Fraternity league—Zeta Psi, D. K. E., Sigma Phi Epsilon, Phi Sigma Kappa, A. T. O., Delta Sigma Phi, Theta Kappa Nu, Chi Psi, Zeta Beta Tau, Theta Chi, Tau Epsilon Phi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Kappa Alpha, Kappa Sigma, Phi Alpha, Phi Gamma Delta, Beta Theta Pi, Phi Kappa Sigma, S. A. E., Chi Phi, Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Nu, Sigma Chi, Pi Kappa Phi, Delta Tau Delta.

Two dormitories and several fraternities have not been heard from to date. If they wish to enter teams in the intramural league, they may do so by calling Bo Shepherd at 4141 before one o'clock Saturday. Likewise, if any independent organizations wish to enter teams, they may do so by reporting to Mr. Shepherd. There are already four independent teams entered in the dormitory league: Stadium, Question Marks, and two teams from the Law school.

Both leagues—dormitory and fraternity—will start preparation for the basketball season Monday afternoon, January 13. Schedules for the first week will be published in tomorrow's Tar Heel.

Legion Sponsors Speaking Contest

The second annual state-wide oratorical contest under the direction of the American Legion will be sponsored in the schools of Orange county by the local post of the Legion, E. R. Rankin, chairman selected by the Chapel Hill post to arrange for the county elimination series, has announced.

Originated as a part of the Americanization program of the Raleigh post of the Legion, the oratorical contest was extended last year to include contestants from all the high schools and colleges in the state, the high school and college competitions being arranged separately. The purpose of the idea as begun by the Raleigh group was to encourage patriotic ideas among students, and in accordance with this intention the subjects for all speeches relate to patriotic themes.

This year the committee, headed by Cale K. Burgess of Raleigh, selected "Our Flag" as the title. According to the plans of the contest, each school will have secured its representative by January 17, before the country elimination contests on January 20.

In addition to the prizes offered in the final contest, the Chapel Hill post is to give a prize of $10 to the winner in the county competition, with $5 going to the second best speaker from the Orange county schools.

TAR HEEL QUINT STARTS COLLEGE SEASON TONIGHT

Lack of Forwards Only Handicap For Local Team.

North Carolina's sport fandom tonight will focus anxious eyes on the North Carolina and Davidson quints.

The Tar Heel-Wildcat cage contest will mark the big five debut of both teams, and will mark the firing of the first shot in the 1930 state championship race. It will also be the first college game for the Tar Heels and should give a good line on the proposition whether the Tar Heels of '30 can carry on the great North Carolina record of four southern titles and seven state titles in eight years.

With four letter forwards graduated last year, Tar Heel followers are wondering if Coach Jim Ashmore can develop forwards to go with his veteran guards and center and turn out another of the traditional Tar Heel quints.

Davidson likewise promises to have one of the headline teams of the state, and this first game should be interesting.

The Youngerites opened impressively against Catawba, won a lopsided 33-18 count over Charlotte "Y," and looked equally good against Woffard on Wednesday. The Tar Heels won three of four pre-Christmas games with "Y" quintets and started the 1930 ball to rolling against Greensboro "Y" last night.

Puny Harper will start at center for the Tar Heels with Billy Brown and Artie Marpet at guards, and the forward pair to be selected from the quintet of Dave Neiman, John Edwards, Jenks Hutchinson, John Slater and Tom Cleland.

The Davidson starting lineup will probably show Captain Johnston and Pritchett, forwards; Rusk, center; and Goodson and Proctor, guards.

Henky Henlin plays the Count. The other characters are: Digby Wardlaw as Athos, Fred Warulaw as Portos, A. Nazareno as The Arab, Harry Galland as First Guard, Herbert Estep as Second Guard, Elmer Hall as Aramis, D. W. Davis as Third Guard, and W. R. Linker as Fourth Guard.

The action of the play is placed in London in the old duelling, swash-buckling days when men were men. Count Diseased, the best fencer in all England, insults Athos who is drinking at an inn with his three friends. They fight alone at first, but later the fight is taken up by the friends of Athos and the Guards, friends of the Count.

The play gives an excellent opportunity for the public to see the Carolina fencers in action with the foils, besides seeing them in action with the grease paint.

Sherlock Holmes is in Chapel Hill now!

The famous detective, impersonated in reel life by Clive Brook, versatile screen player, arrived in Chapel Hill this morning from New York to take his place on the screen at the Carolina theatre today.

Brook, who recently played one of the quartet of featured roles in "Charming Sinners," now has the role of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's detective. The story deals with the return of the master man-hunter, following his retirement.

Hamilton Has An Article On Abigail Adams In Scribner's

she went to Europe with her husband, and the most piquant passages in the story relate to her experiences and her observations in Paris and London. In Paris she knew Jefferson, Franklin, and John Paul Jones, besides the notables of the Bourbon court; and when Adams was minister to England she was in daily association with the leaders in British politics, literature, and art, and through it all "she was as simply poised and easy as if she had grown up in her surroundings or as if she were back at the foot of Penn's Hill in Braintree."

During Adams' vice-presidency and most of his presidency he dwelled in Philadelphia, at that time the seat of government. He had been defeated for a second term when they moved to Washington to a White House that was "barely habitable, with not a single room finished... the plastering still wet.... no fence, no yard, or other convenience." The First Lady was content enough to be First Lady no longer and to move back to Quincy, "I shall be happier there," she wrote. "Neither my habits nor my education or inclinations have led me to an expensive style of living, so that I have little to mourn over." At Quincy she lived eighteen years longer. She became a defender of Jefferson and Madison and a supporter of the war of 1812. She resented bitterly the attitude of the New England Federalists in that crisis, was outraged at the burning of Washington, and was overjoyed at the victory of New Orleans. As the years passed, "like her husband she found her asperities softened, and she developed a new philosophy of living in which she found great contentment."

Course In Folklore Given This Quarter

A general course in folklore has been established in the comparative literature department of the University. It is to be given by Mr. Boggs of the romance department this quarter. The various types of folk literature to be defined are the folktale, ballad, legend, myth, riddle, etc. Theories of origins will be discussed. Individual studies of a comparative nature will be made, following different themes in their vagaries through various countries. It is planned to give scientific background to explore further Carolina folklore.

Howard Talks On Flood Control To Engineers

At the last meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers held Thursday evening an illustrated lecture on "Flood Control in the Miami Conservancy District" was delivered by C. C. Howard, senior civil engineer, and a three-reel picture, "This Is the Age of Riveted Steel," was presented.

The lecture by Mr. Howard was the first of a series of three that are to be presented during the winter quarter. The lecture Thursday was about the flood prevention work done on the Miami river in Ohio, and was prepared by the national office of the A. S. C. E.

High School Court Tournament Begins

Opening play in the class A high school basketball championship series of the eastern section of the state was begun Thursday night when Durham defeated Rocky Mount 35-12. The basketball series is one of the contests sponsored by the high school athletic association and the University extension division.

The 14 schools to engage in class A competition comprise a group of the largest institutions in the state, the final standing of each school in the east and west to be determined on a percentage basis. A contest between High Point and Gastonia last night opened the series among the members of the western group.

It is probable that at the conclusion of the season a game for the state championship will be played between the winning teams in the two sections.

A series of contests among the smaller schools which are ineligible to enter the class A league is scheduled to start in February.

Professor Driven To Humiliation And Prayer By Work Of Students

Students at the North Carolina State College in Raleigh have found a means to drive their Electrical Engineering professor to prayers and meditations. Their method should prove interesting to those who feel that something should be done about the traditional skepticism that is a characteristic of engineering professors.

A news item, sent all over the nation by the United Press, carried the story of why Professor William H. Brown, Jr., of N. C. State College passed his time in "humiliation and prayer." After explaining that Professor Brown's class made an average of but 12½ per cent in an examination in electrical engineering, the story proceeds to say, that when the class appeared the next day, they found the following notice upon the door:

"The papers from the class are the poorest I ever got in twenty years of teaching . . . It would be wise not to bother me for the rest of the week, which I must pass in humiliation and prayer.

INDUSTRY ADOPTS PHOTO-DETECTOR

Spectacular uses of the photo-electric cell, the so-called "electric eye," and other vacuum tube devices have proven their practicability in industry. This cell and similar devices act with superhuman accuracy and dependability in such varied functions as detecting and instantaneously extinguishing fires, counting people or passing objects of any size, automatically sorting materials according to color or imperfections, or providing safety against explosions in gas and oil furnaces.

If a lighted match is thrown into a tank of gasoline or kerosene the first cloud of smoke from the tank instantly operates the "photo-electric smoke detector." This detector automatically releases carbon-dioxide from a cylinder and extinguishes the fire before one ordinarily could realize what had happened.

Persons coming into a lecture hall may be counted automatically as they cross a beam of light which extends across the entrance. Apparatus of this type may be used for toll bridges, vehicular tunnels, or turn stiles, and for the counting of items in mass production, or detecting paper breaks in mills where machinery must be stopped instantly to prevent accidents.

The arduous tasks of sorting, inspecting for defects, and analization of the colors of manufactured products which have hitherto been dependent upon the easily wearied human eye may now be done by mechanical process. Similar devices are also applicable as protection against theft, since they will act instantly when anyone approaches them. The value of the cell is increased by the fact that it acts so readily in emergency, of fire or burglary, for example.

The application of these sensitive devices for automatic control is still in its infancy. Remarkable things have been achieved in the last few years, but the future holds many more. Many processes and methods now used in factories, mines, and mills will be revolutionized, and human beings will be released from arduous tasks that should rightfully be performed by robots in this age of mechanization.

For the actual invention of the grid glow tube, used in this work, D. D. Knowles of the Westinghouse research laboratories was awarded the John Scott medal of 1927.

H. F. Comer To Conduct Survey At V. P. I. Soon

H. F. Comer, general secretary of the local Y, will go to V. P. I. sometime during the latter part of this month to help make a survey of the student life at that institution. Mr. Comer will be one of a committee composed of Kendell Weisiger, personnel director of the Southern Bell telephone company, and Dr. Goodwin Watson, professor of psychology at Columbia University.

The committee will make a survey involving a complete analysis of the whole Y. M. C. A. and student activity life of V. P. I. A survey such as this is sponsored occasionally by the authorities of the college. The purpose of this survey is to make a check on the student activity and Y life of that college in order that it may keep pace with some of the other large institutions of the country.

Dr. Watson will head this committee and will advise from the psychological viewpoint, while Mr. Weisiger, an alumnus of V. P. I., will give advice on the personnel side.

Murchison Writes On Cotton For Magazine

The January issue of the Virginia Quarterly Review, published at the University of Virginia, contains an article by Dr. Claudius Murchison of the University commerce department entitled "King Cotton Is Sick." Dr. Murchison's article is the result of an invitation from the editor of the Review to analyze the difficulties of the present situation in the textile industry from the standpoint of mill owners. In it he sets forth the various conflicting elements in the industry, the results of their conflicts, and his conception of the proper remedy for them. His article is also reprinted in this week's issue of Commerce and Finance, an economic and commercial magazine of national reputation.

During the past summer Dr. Murchison made a field survey both in New England and in the south for the Social Science Research Council and the Institute for Research in the Social Sciences of this university. He is now writing a monograph which will soon be published.

Dashiel Is Director

Dr. J. F. Dashiell has been notified by the psychological association that he has been made a director of that organization. Only one other man besides Dr. Dashiell was elected to directorship.

Dramatic Directors To Assemble Here Today For Annual Conference

The general topic of this morning's session will be "Dramatics and the Educational Program," including such sub-topics as "Getting Dramatics in the Regular Curriculum" "Original Pageantry," "Dramatic Art Work of the North Carolina Educational Association" and "Interesting the Community in Dramatics."

Two plays will be given this afternoon. The first will be a drama written and produced by the dramatic department of Lenoir Rhyne College, of which Miss Pearl Setzer is director. The other will be a rehearsal staged by the Carolina Playmakers with Hubert Heffner directing. The purpose of these two performances is to give directors who are planning on entering plays in the annual state tournament some idea of how their productions should be staged.

The play will be criticized by the standards of judgment for the tournament,—that is, different judges will criticize the production from the standpoints of acting, choice of play, and stage craft. Judges for acting will be Mrs. Louise S. Perry of Swannanoa high, Miss Ella Henninger of Greensboro College and Elmer Hall of Chapel Hill high. For choice of play, Prescott Farrar of Chapel Hill and C. Robinson of Goldsboro high. For stagecraft, E. R. Harrington and Miss Edith Russell of the Theatre Workshop of Asheville. The plays will be staged at 2:30 and the rehearsal immediately afterwards.

The Westinghouse equipped oil-electric locomotives of the Canadian National are the most powerful in the world.

The steam locomotive has a new rival

ATTENTION in railway circles focuses this year on a spectacular undertaking by the Canadian National Railways — the electrification of certain trains on non-electrified lines.

One great oil-electric locomotive is already in service. The largest and most powerful of its type in the world, this giant electric locomotive that carries its own generating plant develops 2660 horsepower, uses only .43 lb. of fuel per horsepower-hour developed at full load.

Many interesting features are incorporated in its design. The speed and voltage of the engine-generators are automatically controlled by the power demands.

The engine exhaust is directed through automatically regulated economizers that heat the coaches and serve as well as mufflers. Control is placed at both ends, to enable running in either direction. Only in a difference in gearing need the passenger type units differ from those adapted to freight service.

In the development of this locomotive Westinghouse engineers co-operated with the Railway's own engineers and leading locomotive manufacturers and frame builders. Every year hundreds of important jobs in which electricity is involved are delegated to Westinghouse, the clearing house for electrical development.

ACTIVITIES OF ESPERANTO CLUB BEGIN TUESDAY

International Language Group Receives Text Books And Bi-Monthly Magazines As Part Of Studies.

As several new students entered the Esperanto class with the beginning of the New Year and more are expected to join, it has been decided to start the activities of the "Club" Tuesday, January 14th, at five P. M., with a review of the elements of Esperanto in order to introduce the newcomers to this international language. The grammars and dictionaries ordered in December have arrived. Most of them have been disposed of, but about fifteen are left for others interested in the language. The price for both together is fifty cents. The bi-monthly magazines have been ordered and the December issue has arrived. Copies will be distributed Tuesday afternoon at 119 Saunders hall, where, from now on, the regular meetings will be held. Those interested in Esperanto, especially those intending to become regular members of the class, are urged to attend the introductory meeting next Tuesday, since a later entry would not be advisable. The only expense for the members is the cost of the books used, amounting to one dollar.

Literature Club To Meet January 21st

The regular meeting of the literary department of the Community Club will not be held, as announced in the Chapel Hill Weekly, on Tuesday, January 14th. It will be held, instead, on Tuesday January 21st in the social room of the Methodist church at 7:30 p. m.

At that time Mrs. E. C. P. Metzenthin will discuss the October book-of-the-month, J. B. Priestly's The Good Companion.

Reviewers Praise Recent University Press Books

Appearing in the New York Times Book Review for January 12, a prominently displayed criticism heralds the success of The Virginia Plutarch. This volume of biographies, the work of Dr. Philip Alexander Bruce, is the most recent release of the University Press.

Dr. Bruce, a recognized authority on American history, particularly of the colonial period, has undertaken to produce in his book "not a series of detached character studies, but rather a continuous narrative of deed running from the beginning of the colonial age to our own times."

Speaking of this effort William MacDonald, the Times Reviewer, says: "Any book, especially if it is written by a scholar of such standing as Dr. Bruce enjoys, is pretty certain to raise the old question of the respective spheres of biography and history . . . A good deal depends . . . upon whose lives are sketched and what aspects of their careers are dwelt upon."

In explanation of the first of these conditions—"whose lives are sketched"—the critic enumerates 33 biographies beginning "with the 'Emperor' Powhatan . . . and ending with Dr. Walter Reed of yellow fever fame. Only one woman is included—the 'Princess' Pocahontas—but the preface reminds us that Mary Ball, Martha Washington and Dolly Madison should not be forgotten notwithstanding that 'their distinction was primarily derived from their connection with a celebrated son or husband.' "

As its name implies "The Virginia Plutarch deals with a group of Virginia patriots and eminent characters from the Old Dominion. 'Mother of Presidents." However, Mr. MacDonald questions some of the selections. He continues: "Are all of Dr. Bruce's selections Virginians? Technically, perhaps, they are, but in some in-

BAILEY TO READ LILIOM TONIGHT

Franz Molnar's Liliom by Howard Bailey will be the Carolina Playmaker reading for January, to be given tonight in the Playmaker theatre at 8:30.

First produced by the Theatre Guild a few years ago, Liliom is one of the favorite plays by the Hungarian playwright. Eva LeGallienne, founder of the well-known reperatory group, originally played the leading role of Julie. The title character, Liliom, was taken by Joseph Schildkraut, an American character artist.

During his undergraduate career Mr. Bailey was prominent in playmaking activities. Since his graduation last spring, he has been connected with the Playmakers in an official capacity.

RECORDER HEARS 260 CASES IN 6-MONTH PERIOD

Hinshaw Says That Drunkenness On Decrease Since Thanksgiving; 72 Tried Since June.

Although the 1929 record of the Chapel Hill Recorders' Court, made public yesterday by Judge C. P. Hinshaw, discloses that the period from June 1st saw 72 cases of drunkenness on the docket, there have been but three since Thanksgiving.

"We are proud of the decrease in drunkenness," says Judge C. P. Hinshaw, "for we have brought it about as the result of some effort. We have suspended sentences hanging over the heads of the worst cases, and we have reformed even 'Pink' Guthrie to the extent that he has not been drunk for weeks. When a man has a 30-day road sentence awaiting his further transgessions, he thinks twice before repeating his offense. As a general thing, the third offense brings the sentence."

Included in the total of 260 cases for the year are 72 for drunkenness; 30, assault with deadly weapon; 28, possession of liquor; 26, traffic violation; 23, bad checks; 19, driving while drunk; 14, gambling (no students were charged with gambling during the year); 10, reckless driving; 14, simple assault

Playmakers Unmask Drama During Yearly Bacchanalia

The old familiar emblem of the Carolina Playmakers—the mark that has been leering at the audiences in the theatre for the past twelve seasons—burst out into loud guffaws of laughter last night as it witnessed the fourth annual Twelfth Night Revel.

Mr. Farrar duly impressed the audience with his stentorian "I am the King of England." Virtue and Youth were beautifully personified in the glittering person of Mr. Posey, who by devilish strategy pierced the tough skin of the Old Dragon—none other than Mr. English Bagby wearing the

CABINETS MEET MONDAY EVENING

Second Regular Gathering Of Y Governing Bodies To Be Held January 13.

The sophomore, junior-senior and freshman cabinets will meet Monday night at their usual time, 7:15, at the Y. This is the second time that the cabinets have met this quarter.

Professor R. M. Brown of the sociology department will be the main speaker on the sophomore program. He will address the cabinet on some subject pertaining to "Crime," or "Prison Reforms." It has been the custom of the cabinet to have two speakers per month; Professor Brown is the first speaker for the winter quarter program.

The junior-senior cabinet's program will be concerned chiefly with a discussion of the business for the quarter. President Williams urges that all members be present.

A discussion of topics of interest to the cabinet members will probably be the only thing that will feature the freshman cabinet program. Many discussions have been on the cabinet program in the past quarter, and it is expected that many members will be at the meeting for the purpose of taking part in this discussion.

Sophomore Notice

The election of the vice-president of the sophomore class will be held at the regular sophomore chapel Monday, Larry Johnson, president of the class, announces. This election will be held to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of Johnson, former vice-president, to the presidency. Ben Aycock, regularly elected president, failed to return to school.

Problems Of Little Theatre Subject of Discussions at Annual Dramatic Conference

Local Playmakers Hosts To Statewide Organization; Directors Hear Talks By Koch.

PLAYS PRESENTED

The Carolina Dramatic Association held its annual conference yesterday in the Playmaker theatre. The morning session was devoted to talks and open forum discussions. A number of plays were presented in the afternoon. The problems of the amateur theatre in North Carolina were the subject of the talks. Thirty representatives attended the meeting.

The conference, which has become an annual event, was held under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers and the bureau of community drama of the University extension division.

Professor Frederick H. Koch, director of the Playmakers, sounded the keynote of the conference in his welcoming remarks. "The local theatre movement has become the most important thing in the American theatre," he stated, "and its problems can best be solved in an open conference like this."

The morning session was in the nature of a round table discussion at which such problems as "Getting Dramatics in the Regular Curriculum," "Original Pageantry," and "Interesting the Community" were taken up. Robert Wunsch of the Asheville senior high school presided.

Miss Grace Everest of Fayetteville high school presented the reaction of the students to dramatics and stressed the importance of letting all departments of the school participate in the productions.

Miss Vivian Burton of Smithfield high school stated that one of the most important things in presenting original pageantry was adapting the different roles to the nature of the students.

Mrs. Louise S. Perry of Swannanoa high school in reviewing some of the accomplishments of the North Carolina dramatic movement, said that preparations for the addition of a dramatic arts course to the high school curriculum was already under way, the course of study having gone to the press.

The afternoon program consisted of two plays. The first, "Politics Pays," an original mountain comedy by Theodosia Watson, was presented by the Lenoir-Rhyne Playmakers of Hickory with Miss Pearl Setzer directing. The other, a play in rehearsal, was staged by the Carolina Playmakers, with Hubert Heffner directing. The purpose of the two performances

"Baby Radicals"

The editorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel is called "a group of young boys without business experience but with a prejudice against industry inspired by the teachings of radical professors" by the Southern Textile Bulletin, weekly magazine devoted to the interest of cotton mill owners in the South. The cause of the attack upon the Tar Heel and unnamed members of the University's faculty was an editorial in the issue of December 14 in which the writer commented on the textile situation in the south.

The article further states that "some cracked-brained professor told them that labor unions would be a fine thing for Southern Mills" and mentions "a group of radical professors at the University of North Carolina . . . ."

On the editorial page of today's issue appears the editor's answer to the Textile Bulletin editorial.

He went to New York at the request of the Carnegie Corporation to attend the meeting of a committee of citizens and educators for a conference with Owen D. Returning to Washington he and President Glenn Frank of the University of Wisconsin were guests of President Hoover at luncheon at the White House on Wednesday.

Students Chew Gum Fifteen Hours To Avoid Probation

Of the numerous records claimed by Carolina men the latest to be announced is in the simple art of gum chewing. The group involved in this record-making event, composed of George Brown, Nat Ames, Bill Libertein, Nat Coates, Irwin Wanderman and Joe Dintsman, claims noteworthy distinction on the basis of having properly masticated some seventy-five packs of the chicle product in fifteen hours.

Unlike those of flag-pole and raw-egg artists, this feat, strangely enough, was altogether unpremeditated. The occasion would be required for the tank to dry and then be mended—and the morrow was registration day, while Chapel Hill was nearly 400 miles distant!

Then Mr. Brown rose to the occasion with characteristic presence of mind and suggested that Wrigley had solved the problem some years ago. In the puzzlement of his fellows he hastened away to purchase a package of the product advertised by the familiar elfin figure. Lustily it was chewed and applied to the hole in the tank. And lo! the leak was stopped. So the trip was

"Crack-Brained Professors" And "Baby Radicals"

In the December 26 issue of the Southern Textile Bulletin, an organ devoted to the interests of mill owners, the Daily Tar Heel receives some interesting publicity in an editorial entitled "The Baby Radicals." The Bulletin continues a series of attacks upon certain University of North Carolina professors by attributing to the influence of these men a condition of the Tar Heel editorial mind which it regards as deplorable, to say the least. Indeed, the Bulletin editorial implies that if we have a mind it is sadly "twisted."

Quoting from the Bulletin "Paul Blanchard, the Socialist, said in one of his articles: 'We must peg into the minds of the young while they are still plastic. One agency in America that is trying to get the students interested in Socialism is the colleges. They strive to bring in the most provocative speakers obtainable.'

"When he made this statement he certainly had in mind a group of radical professors at the University of North Carolina, and other Carolina colleges, for the most radical and provocative speakers are certainly brought to them and every effort made to 'peg into their minds while plastic.' The success with which the 'Pegging' has been done is shown by a long editorial in the December 14 issue of the Daily Tar Heel entitled 'A Few Discrepancies in Mr. Gossett's Textile Situation Views.'

"A group of young boys, without business experience but with a prejudice against industry inspired by the teachings of radical professors proceed to tell Mr. Gossett just what is wrong with the textile industry. Some crack-brained professor told them that labor unions would be a fine thing for Southern mills and he pegged into some 'plastic minds,' in fact some very plastic minds. In view of the statements made in the attempted reply to Mr. Gossett the use of the word 'plastic' is very charitable.

"The article itself is of no moment or force but it is a clear cut illustration of the way in which college professors are misleading the young men placed in their charge and are turning them into enemies of industry. An experienced cotton manufacturer who has always shown an interest in the welfare of his employees made an address in which he frankly gave a statement of the textile situation in North Carolina. A group of students without experience but with a fund of prejudice and misinformation as the result of "pegging into plastic minds" wrote a silly reply containing very few statements which they could substantiate.

"Every year thousands of young men who would, otherwise, develop into successful business men and manufacturers come under the influence of radical professors in our colleges and universities and have their minds so twisted that their careers are ruined."

We assure the Bulletin editorial writer that we appreciate tremendously his "very charitable use of the word "plastic." But even very young minds in all their plasticity cannot fail to recognize, without being subjected to "pegging," the extreme prejudice underlying the opinions of such journals as the Bulletin. Depending upon the good will of the mill owners for its very existence, the Bulletin must necessarily devote all of its energies to furtherance of their interests.

The Tar Heel editorial took issue with Mr. Gossett's assertion that reports of brutally low wage scales and terrible living conditions in cotton mill villages of the South are nothing more than the propaganda of outside agitators. It attacked the operation of the "stretch-out" system in several mills, where the ignorance of the operators has been responsible for failure to effect the efficiencies inherent in the system and has thus thrown heavy additional duties upon the workers, without wage increases. Mr. Gossett alluded to the efforts of labor in this state to organize as the work of "foreign and unsympathetic organizers" entirely; the Tar Heel editorial mentioned the Marion case, in which a group of employees petitioned the American Federation of Labor for admittance to the union.

Far from "telling Mr. Gossett just what is wrong with the textile industry," the Tar Heel editorial declared that he "admirably outlined the position of the more liberal and intelligent of the mill owners," and pointed out that "with evident truthfulness Mr. Gossett stated that higher wages can come only from larger profits. His remedies for the desperate situation of the cotton manufacturers are excellent, but in dealing with the labor problem he exhibits the rather natural bias of a mill owner.

Labor in the textile industry may be receiving its just share of the profits, but it is certainly not in a position to demand this share if it is not now receiving it. The mill owners should work out among themselves the solution to the problem of overproduction, but they should also allow the workers an opportunity to secure their rightful portion of the fruits of their labor. Through unionization alone can the interests of the workers be safeguarded adequately, and we believe that once labor is in a position to be assured its just portion of the profits in the textile industry, it will cooperate fully with the manufacturers in attempts to secure these profits."

The statements contained in the Tar Heel editorial are easily substantiated; to those possessing the slightest degree of familiarity with the textile situation their truth is obvious. It is significant that the Bulletin editorial does not mention specifically a single instance of incorrect statement in the Tar Heel editorial; it resorts to vague generalities and ridicule, the favorite methods of criticism with unintelligent and unprincipled mud-slingers. Rather than writing as "an enemy of industry under the influence of a prejudice inspired by the teachings of radical professors" we attempted merely to point out without hostility a few obvious inaccuracies in Mr. Gossett's statements through the utilization of the slight knowledge of the textile situation we have gained through conversations with workers and mill owners themselves and through newspaper accounts.

A University professor evinces strictly humanitarian interest in the welfare of a group of Americans living under deplorable economic conditions; he is branded a "crack-brained radical" by journals such as the Bulletin, devoted to the selfish promotion of the interests of those responsible for such conditions. Utilizing every form of scurrilous and cowardly attack, persons of the calibre of David Clark, the Bulletin's editorial writer, let no ethical considerations interfere with their determination to discredit those who would improve the conditions under which the workers live. College professors who exhibit liberal tendencies are represented as "twisting the minds" of their students, ruining their careers.

The methods employed by the Southern Textile Bulletin in its attempts to prevent the formation of strong public opinion in sympathy with the cause of labor in its struggles for organization in the textile industry are utterly reprehensible. Of these methods the series of cowardly attacks upon certain University of North Carolina professors is representative.

The Bull Session

One of the most widely featured phases of college life is the bull session. Of course there are bridge sessions, poker sessions, — even occasionally study sessions, but each of these has only a certain group as adherents. The bull session is common to all; a man may abhor bridge, he may have scruples against poker, he may be too indolent for study, but the all compelling lure of a bull session invariably possesses an insidiously fatal appeal. Before the temptation even the most rigid diciplinarian will relax; even the greasiest grind will sometimes succomb and take part in that often absurd, usually vulgar, seldom intelligent, and never brilliant impromptu group discussion known in expressive campus slang as the bull session.

These discussions are never planned; they spring up at a moments notice; offering no warning, they flower luxuriantly,—but their duration is short lived and their existence transitory. At the end the participants have made no progress; no one has put over his arguments successfully, and no one has received his opinion on the subject debated. There has been didacticism, dogmatism, sneers, jeers, and a great amount of "hot air." In other words everyone has "passed the bull' back and forth as a kind of uncouth conversationalist ball with which he has aired his opinions on the subject. But none of these opinions seem to circulate successfully; they come back to the individual expounder who, firmly believing his own dogmatic idea, is convinced that the others of the group are stubborn asses.

Not all bull sessions are heated debates; often they are more or less impersonal — or personal —discussions on any such abstract subject as religion, immorality, girls (which topic is talked over vigorously form both an abstract and a concrete point of view, sex, psychoanalysis, — any number of questions often quite profound and for this reason illogical when introduced in a bull session.

It does no good to moralize on the bull session; it is one of the most natural outgrowths of campus life — especially in the dormitories where the boys, not being banded together as in a fraternity form their own groups, with numerous bull sessions as the inevitable result. Although one of these discussions often ends in horseplay, with resultant damage to the university's furniture, and although they afford an excellent means of wasting time, they are harmless when compared with the more vicious phases of collegiate life.

The bull session will probably go on forever as a weak perpetuation of the lost art of conversation. It affords an outlet for nature's desire to air its opinions, to argue, and merely to "bull" on any subject under the sun as a pleasant means of delaying the unpleasant prospect of getting down to work, and its popularity is assured as long as man is gregarious.

—R.H.

Student Intelligence

It is unquestionably true that the average intelligence of the students of this or any other standard university is higher than that of the rank and file of the American people. The writer of this editorial chose to discuss the matter of student intelligence after a rather lengthy conversation with a prominent faculty member whose attention has been called to the strangeness of the application of student intelligence to entertainments sponsored by the University, as well as to the programs of the Carolina theatre.

The mind of the average student seems to be manifestly carnal in kind. Conclusive evidence of this is the fact that several students hissed and whistled when the Isadora Duncan dancers appeared here last quarter. Numerous students failed utterly to appreciate the rhythmic motion of the performers because of an undue interest in what may be called their underpinning. This same carnal factor bore fruit recently when "The River" was presented at the Carolina theatre. One faculty member, whose name is here withheld for sane reasons, has aptly said "Carolina students would laugh and whistle if a mere table having four legs were placed on the stage of performance."

Such doings on the part of students are not only an insult to their intelligence, but also a drawback to the University. Dancers, singers, lecturers, etc., who are brought here by the Student Entertainment Committee and suffer the humiliation of having students whistle and squeal at them go away from this campus with an impression which is detrimental to the interests of the institution when narrated in oher places. The evil of this kind of thing is that the aforesaid bad impression is due to the thoughtless deeds of a few, but casts a reflection upon the entire student body which is an insult to student inteliigence.

The writer feels that unnecessary manifestations of carnal principles and throughlessness might well be discontinued. Certainly, they are disgusting to those who attend picture shows and student entertainment programs for reasons other than to scrutinize the underpinnings of the daughters of Eve.—J. C. W.

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

There are rumors rife on the campus that things are stirring among swordsmen. Fencing is a new sport at Carolina, about which little is known. It is also one of the most satisfying of contests, for it is as interesting to the spectator on the sidelines, and as exciting, as football or any other more modern sport.

For color and action, fencing is unsurpassed. A regular contest finds the spectators as tense and watchful as either of the swordsmen parrying and thrusting on the strip of mat. Every year the peak of interest in inter-collegiate fencing is reached when the finals are run off at the Hotel Astor in New York. On a long raised platform, under bright lights, the contestants are called together by the referee, and advance to the center. They are dressed in white trousers and white canvas jackets, buttoned closely at the neck for protection. The sword hand wears a glove, and a closely meshed wire mask and a light foil complete the equipment.

At a sword from the official arbiter, the fencers gracefully salute each other, touch swords, step back a pace, and are on guard in a crouching position. Then the action starts. A quick lunge, a lightning-like parry and return thrust, and almost before one is well aware of what has happened, a touch and consequently a point has been made. Up and down the narrow strip they fight, steel blade ringing upon steel blade, flashing, advancing, retreating. It takes an expert to judge when a fair touch has been made, an expert with quick eyes. The lunge is one of the prettiest motions in all sportdom to watch, the sword arm extended in front, the left hand and leg in a straight line to the rear. Each parry, thrust, riposte, and position has its name, every movement must be rapidly and unerringly made. It is no child's play, this matter of fencing.

There are five fencing clubs in New York, and numerous others throughout the country. At West Point it is part of the curriculum. In numerous colleges it is part of the regular schedule of athletics. It is by no means a dead sport. Fencers do not go stale, or reach their limit of usefulness at the age of thirty. At the Inter-collegiates in New York you will find the crowd of collegiate on-lookers well mixed with gray-haired amateur devotees.

And so it seems that the fencing season is about to begin. Members of the team, we read, put on a fencing scene in the Twelfth Night Revels of the Playmakers, a novice tournament will be held here soon, and the varsity team gets into action in a few weeks. The D'Artagnan's of the campus should soon be giving us a few new thrills. Plans are afoot also for a co-ed fencing club. This is news. Hatpins and high heels will give way to real weapons, and we foresee the day when the conventional duels for the honor of the lady fair will give way to contests for the admiring glance of the much soughi-after male. The world do change!

Although business at the local postoffice is $2500 less than that of 1928, according to a report completed yesterday by Postmaster R. D. Herndon, the total for last year was $47,465.34.

During the December quarter of 1929 receipts were $13,511.96 as against $14,360.47 for the same period the previous year. Postoffice employees, however, assert that work was heavier, owing to the large number of pieces.

"Readers of this report," said Herndon, "must not think the drop has been due to poor business and lack of prosperity here. Paul J. Weaver, who published the Music Supervisors' Journal, and G. F. Taylor, publisher of religious literature, are no longer mailing from this postoffice, and this fully accounts for the loss of business. Weaver, especially, was a heavy mailer, accounting for about 135,000 first-class, two-cent letters per year."

Library Receives Gift From Mahler

Thorugh the courtesy of a friend of the University, Mr. Fred G. Mahler of Raleigh, the library has been given a three months subscription to the Boston Transcript.

This newspaper is one of the leading New England journals, devoting much space to news of Eastern colleges. The Wednesday and Saturday issues offer special pages of current book reviews, articles on the theatre, art, rare books, etc.

If the paper proves to be of sufficient interest to the users of the library it will, no doubt, be added to the library's regular subscription list.

Coming Week Offers Many Attractions In Athletics

All Winter Sports Team Will See Action Next Week; Trackmen Working Hard.

INTRAMURAL GAMES

Boxers And Wrestlers Begin Season Saturday Night; Two Court Games Here.

All winter sport teams will get into action this week.

The basketeers will continue their state and southern campaign with games against Guilford and Washington and Lee.

The boxers and wrestlers will both get their first taste of competition, the mitmen opening with Washington and Lee at Lexington and the matmen taking on Duke as their first opponent in the Tin Can.

Two of the meets are scheduled for the Tin Can here. The Washington and Lee quint will invade the Tin Can Thursday night with what is reported to be their strongest team in years, in an attempt to reverse scores of other years. Saturday night will find the Tar Heel wrestlers hosts to Duke's matmen; while the boxers will journey to Lexington to take on the W. and L. mitmen.

The basketball game with Guilford will be played there on Tuesday night, while the boxing meet with Washington and Lee will come on Saturday night at the Generals' stronghold.

All events except the game with Guilford will count in the Southern Conference standings.

The Tar Baby cagers will also see their first action, in a game scheduled with Leaksville "Y" at Leaksville for Tuesday night.

The winter schedule for intramural athletics will also begin this week with the opening of the basketball league. To date 41 teams have entered the league and 12 of these will see action Monday afternoon.

In addition to these attractions the track team is busy preparing for the Milrose meet to be held in New York on February 8. With the return of Coach Collins today it is expected that the winter football practice will formally begin next Monday or Tuesday week.

Tar Heelettes

The Tar Heeletts, led by Ida Currie, dropped a hard-fought game to the local high school girls by 26-25 Thursday. This was the season opener for the co-eds, and considering their scant practice, they made a good showing. Prominent among the individual stars were Clyde Johnson and Louise Thacker, forwards, and Kitty Wells, guard.

The Tar Heeletts make their next start away from home when they take on the Greensboro high sextet Tuesday.

Recorder Hears 260 Cases In Six Months

cases tried are convicted, since fully 80 per cent plead guilty upon being brought to trial. Sessions of the court are regularly held at 10 o'clock Monday mornings and are often attended by students when cases of unusual interest have been docketed.

The local court was established in June by an act of the state legislature. Inasmuch as 60 per cent of the cases handled by the present Recorders' Court could not be handled in the past by the local magistrates, it was necessary for the principals often to spend a week in Hillsboro at great expense. Cost of maintaining prisoners in jail was high, whereas with the present system, persons guilty of misdemeanors are tried, sentenced and working on the roads within a week. Felonies, after a hearing showing sufficient cause, are bound over to the superior court at Hillsboro.

C. P. Hinshaw is the presiding judge, B. D. Sawyer is prosecuting attorney and J. A. Osbourne, clerk.

Athletes Stay Busy

For Tar Heel athletes, there is almost no such thing as an off-season. The basketball, boxing and wrestling teams are steaming away full tilt on hard schedules each. The basketball, track, fencing, tennis and golf teams are all getting in early work. And Chuck Collins, head football coach is due back the first of next week to get the winter football work going.

NOVICE FENCING TOURNAMENT TO BE HELD FRIDAY

Competition Open To All Students Without Previous Experience With Foils.

A novice fencing tournament open to all regular students in the University who have had no previous competitive experience, or who have never taken lessons in fencing, will be held in the Tin Can Friday afternoon, January 17, at 4:30. Varsity fencers and members of the squad will not be allowed to compete. The winner will receive a set of French foils.

The contest is being run under the direction of H. H. Hendlin, to whom notice of entry in the tournament should be given any evening between 9 and 11 at 313 Old East, up to midnight January 16. Every entrant has an even chance, since the tournament is expressly designed for men who have had no previous experience and have never fenced before.

The novice meet is being held to arouse interest in fencing as a sport. Fencing was established at the University last year. South Carolina, holders of the Southern Intercollegiate Conference title, was the first team challenged, and was defeated 7-2 by the University team. North Carolina at present holds the title formerly held by the Fighting Gamecocks.

H. H. Hendlin, director of the novice tournament, holds the national Clemens gold trophy, won in open competition against all fencers except those who participated in international competition. Hendlin will be one of the instructors when regular practice for the team and squad gets under way in two weeks. Alfredo Nazareno, Herbert Estep, Fred Wardlaw and Digby Wardlaw, all of whom were members of last year's team, will be in competition this year. At the outset of the second year the prospects are bright for the Carolina swordsmen.

Playmakers Unmask Drama During Their Yearly Bacchanalia

tailed report of the entertainment by Jack Wardlaw and Mr. Whittaker, who performed unheard-of feats—rather fingers—upon their banjos. Nor can the "Play Upon S-Words" be described, except that one excited member of the audience chewed his father's necktie while watching the dashing sword-play of the brothers Wardlaw and Mr. Nazareno.

At this time, the play was "stopped" by Mr. George McKie, who, with a cane and swagger air, echoed and re-echoed the airs of the nineties. And the house echoed and re-echoed with applause.

Then came two skits, "The Playmakers on the Air" and "Alice Among the Playmakers" or "In the Footsteps of the Folk." The first presented a faithful rendition of what takes place when the Playmakers become air-minded and the second—the title fully describes it.

Thus the program of the stage ended and the third portion of the evening commenced. Dancing to the tunes of Willie Strowd's Negro orchestra, and bolstered by cakes and ale, to the tune of six gallons, the audience proceeded to take active part in the fourth, and said to be best, celebration of the Twelfth Night Revel.

TAR HEELS SCORE 88-25 WIN OVER GREENSBORO Y

Carolina Courtmen Have Little Trouble Amassing Huge Score In First Game After Holidays.

Led by Dave Neiman with 23 points, the Tar Heels entered a scoring orgy to defeat the Greensboro Y quint Friday night 88-25. Carolina started off with a whirlwind attack, and by the end of the first half had stepped out in front of Uncle Bob Doak's association outfit with a lead of 46 to 7.

After running up a substantial lead early in the game the Tar Heels reversed their usual fast passing and pivoting attack and centered their attention on shooting. Short, accurate shots, backed by clever guarding, kept the Carolina five well out of danger of being overtaken.

Individual stardom in the game is hard to pick out, since practically the entire Carolina squad saw action and most of them were successful in ringing up several tallies. Neiman, Hutchinson, Alexander, Brown, and others were able to make connection with the basket with fair regularity.

This was the second time the Tar Heels have defeated the Greensboro Y this season, having administered a decisive defeat before the holidays.

The lineups:

Y. M. C. A. (25)		Carolina (88)
Houck (11)	R. F.	Cleland (6)
Turner (2)	L. F.	Neiman (23)
Moore (4)	C.	Dameron
Harrison (3)	R. G.	Brown (9)
Routh	L. G.	Marpet (5)

Substitutions: "Y"—Johnson (1), Fish (2), Moffet (2); U. N. C.—Choate (6), Alexander (10), Edwards (6), Sher (8), Hutchinson (15).

Individual Stars Will Accompany Relay Team To Big New York Indoor Meet.

RECOGNITION FOR FETZER

Fine Record of The Tar Heels In State and South Gains Unusual Honor.

The University track team has been signally honored with an invitation to send its mile relay team and perhaps several individual entrants to the twenty-third annual Milrose games at Madison Square Garden, New York, February 8.

The invitation came from Manager John G. Anderson and was acknowledgeed for the University by R. A. Fetzer, director of athletics and head track coach. The University athletic council, Coach Fetzer stated, expressed much appreciation of the honor and had passed favorable upon the invitation.

The mile relay team definitely will be sent, according to Coach Fetzer. Entries may be placed in a few of the other events also, but this must be conditioned on the way the trackmen round into shape during the short four weeks before the annual classic.

Captain Dave Nims and Dick Garrett, letter quarter-milers; Ken Gay, letter sprinter; Minor Barkley, letter miler and cross-country captain last fall, and Charlie Farmer, Rip Slusser, Wallace Case and Lionel Weil, from last year's championship freshman relay team, will probably be outstanding contenders to carry Tar Heel colors in the select event.

The Milrose games annually prove one of the biggest events of the indoor track season. Outstanding trackmen are invited from representative institutions in the different sections, so that the games are national in character.

To be picked, for a record of eight state titles and one Southern Conference title in eight years, and for a long list of fine performers, as representative of the Southern Conference, is regarded as a high tribute to North Carolina track teams and to Coach Fetzer.

Galen Elliott, the Tar Heels' former Southern Conference record miler, was honored with invitations to a number of such events and performed creditably in those in which he could run. He ran second to Hahn in the Meadowbrook games in 1928, and was third in the famous mile of the New York Athletic Club games of the same year. The University relay team of Elliott, Pritchett, Barkley and Fisher also carried off the four-mile honors in the Penn Relays in 1928.

BIBLE COURSE TO BEGIN TUESDAY

The Bible course, to be conducted by Rev. W. D. Moss, will hold its first meeting at the Methodist church Tuesday night from 7 to 8 o'clock. This course will meet every Tuesday and Thursday night for the remainder of the quarter. As previously stated, the course requires no examination, no preparation, no registration and attendance is not compulsory.

When asked to give an idea as to what the course will take up, Parson Moss stated that "the course aims to unfold the various steps religion has taken as it has made its way in the world. Like everything else religion has been a growth.

"The eastern peoples made their contributions to religion, and for this reason they need to be studied preparatory to a study of the Hebrew Bible.

"Christianity is the flowering fragrance of religion, but it is important to study the stages that preceded it and let into it.

"In short the course will take up the rise and development of the Christian religion." Rev. Moss continued by saying that suggestions of books to be read would be made during the course of study.

At the Inn

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Valentine of Chappaque, N. Y., have been spending the past week at the Carolina Inn. The Valentines are parents J. M. Valentine of the zoology department.

Miss Sarah Heycock of St. Petersburg, Fla., and Miss Marian McFetridge of Eustace, Fla., who have been living at the Carolina Inn, moved yesterday to Spencer hall. Miss Heycock has been a student at Stetson University, and Miss McFetridge at Goucher.

Miss Priscilla Chase of Raleigh has been a guest for several days at the Carolina Inn.

Farmer Sprint Prospect

Charlie Farmer, sophomore track prospect, as a freshman turned in unusually stellar performances of 10 seconds on the 100-yard dash, 21.4 seconds on the 220-yard dash, and 51.1 on the 440. He is counted as having prospects of making one of the greatest sprinters the south has ever had.

Students Chew Gum Fifteen Hours Avoid Being On Probation

ber of polite suggestions that "the man next me chew this pack." After a few hours minor rebellion ensued. While some refused to chew more, saner minds argued, "We must get to school on time, or it will mean probation and fine." So jaws lax from chewing were set with determination, and the fight continued throughout the night and into the next day.

But every hard race has a tough finish. About six miles out of Chapel Hill the car was nearly stopped by gum that had been sucked into the carburetor. However, with Nat Coates riding on the fender where he might constantly strike the clogged apparatus with a hammer, the painful progress was continued. This strange cargo lurched into town and halted uncertainly on the campus at just fifteen minutes after four, giving our friends 45 minutes in which to register.

All these men are proud to claim what they believe is a gum-chewing record, but they have other feelings also. It is whispered that Nat Ames carries a black eye for offering Bill Liberstein gum.

The United States senate has been spoken of as on old man's club. Mr. Vare knows how it feels.

School Of Education Pleased By Averages Made In Fall Quarter

According to an announcement by C. R. McIntosh, executive secretary of the school of education, the compilation of scholastic averages show that grades of the freshman and sophomore classes in that school for the fall quarter are on a parity with the grades of these classes last year. The grades of the junior class for the fall quarter, according to Mr. McIntosh, are unusually gratifying, having been better than those of any junior class in the school of education during the past several years.

An interesting fact disclosed in connection with the compilation of these averages is that, of the 16 seniors in a class of 90 who were taking four courses, only two made below C on any one course. This fact may serve, perhaps, to indicate that, in the school of education, at least, those students who are willing to assume the burden of four courses per quarter are willing to do the necessary amount of work.

Reviewers Praise Books Recently Published By The University Press

stances with a Virginia attachment that is incidental or remote."

After mentioning several cases in illustration of this point, the review states to the credit of the author that he "recognizes the inherent difficulties of selection, and frankly tells the reason in some cases, for his choice.

"If some of these discriminations appear a bit arbitrary or far-fetched . . . it may nevertheless be conceded that an author who essays such a task as Dr. Bruce has undertaken has a right to his own standards of inclusion or exclusion, and that if he chooses to see greatness in one direction rather than in another the reader might as well go along with him and share his sympathies as cordially as possible. Not even Plutarch himself confined his famouse "Lives" to men whom all judges would esteem great . . . "

In the concluding paragraphs of his review Mr. MacDonald says ,in praise for the book and its writer that, "taking the work as a whole, Dr. Bruce's book does afford indirectly one indication at least of the reason for Virginia's affluence of distinguished names. Virginia reproduced certain characteristics social and political habits of the England from whence it sprang. Its dominating social class was a landholding aristocracy, not a trading democracy mixed with small farmers and lorded over in intellectual and religious matters by a dissenting clergy . . . Hence it was that politics, being the special occupation of gentlemen, took on a tone wholly different from that which appears in the colonies to the North."

And of the author himself: "Dr. Bruce writes judiciously, and seldom allows himself to intimate either praise or blame."

Another book published by the University Press, "The American Scholar" and written by Norman Foerster of the faculty here, furnished several points for contention in a discussion of modern methods of instruction and scholarship at the Modern Language Association of America meeting in Cleveland during the Christmas holidays.

The following are interesting excerpts from a review of this book, written by Harry Hayden Clark of the University of Wisconsin, in The Saturday Review of Literature for December 28:

"The American Scholar . . . will mark the dawn of a new and more fruitful epoch in the study and teaching of literature . . . The man who has revolutionized the study of American letters has here turned to an appraisal of the methods of literary scholars in general, an appraisal distinguished by his usual discrimination, justice and wisdom.

"Many of the contemporary evils in scholarship are charged to an imitation of German methods, "already old-fashioned and even anachronistic." The author advocates "abandoning the German doctorate and emulating the French."

"M. Foerster combat le bon combat, et l'on ne pourrait souhaiter meilleur champion a une grande et aussi juste cause." —Says the distinguished Professor Cestre of the Sorbonne.

"The American Scholar makes its author the standard bearer of all who devoutly believe that the higher aesthetic bearer of all who devoutly believe that the higher aesthestic and ethical destinies of America lie in the hands of our educators."

ADVERTISE-- for TURNOVER

If the great manufacturing houses would ignore "hard times" talk, maintain their payrolls, judiciously cut down production and increase sales effort, "hard times" would be mitigated to no small extent. - - - - - - - - -

Psychology is one of the greatest factors in what we elect to call "hard times." A few firms begin to feel the tightness of money, the "street corner prophets" begin to talk to it, and the infectious, contagious doctrine spreads like a forest fire, contaminating all with a spirit of super-conservatism that makes business worse and worse. - - - - - - - - - - -

Heads up, and faces ahead. Business is bad because we make it so. Talk good times, make and spend, but don't preach hard times continually. Cut down production as much as necessary for the time being, but double sales effort. Now is the time when sales effort is needed, when advertising is needed. Expect Good Attendance For Newspaper Institute

Annual Meeting To Open Wednesday Afternoon With More Than 100 Delegates Expected.

LAWRENCE TO BE SPEAKER

Chase To Deliver Address Of Welcome With W. Carey Dowd, President of State Association, Responding.

More than one hundred North Carolina newspaper workers—including publishers, editors, advertising and circulation men, reporters, and any others who may choose to come—are expected to gather here Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week for the annual sessions of the Newspaper Institute.

The institute is being held under the auspices of the North Carolina Press Association and the University. All newspaper workers, regardless of membership in the state press association or other affiliation, are invited to attend.

The program, planned by a joint committee from the Press association and the University, is regarded as exceptionally strong and one that should appeal alike to the daily and weekly newspaper folk.

A well-balanced assortment of topics ranging all the way from editorial and news features, advertising, circulation, accounting and business management, are scheduled for discussion. And a hand-picked group of men who have achieved success in these particular fields will head the discussions.

The institute will open Wednesday. Headquarters will be at the Carolina Inn, and registration will open there at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. The opening session will be held that night at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall. President Harry W. Chase of the University will deliver the address of welcome, and President W. Carey Dowd, Jr., of the North Carolina Press Association will make the response. Then will follow the principal address of the evening, by David Lawrence, publisher of the United States Daily and president of the Consolidated Press Association. That will wind up the program for that night.

The sessions will continue through Friday at noon.

Cotton Oil Man Here To Interview Seniors

The manager of the Southern Cotton Oil Company, Mr. Bell, visited the University Friday. The purpose of his visit was to find men interested in his organization.

While here Mr. Bell interviewed seniors from the chemical, civil, electrical and mechanical engineering departments. In December seniors in chemical engineering were also interviewed by E. C. Ainslie.

Education School Changes Rules For Student Teachers

According to a regulation recently adopted by the administration board of the school of education, admission to the course in practice teaching will hereafter be restricted to honor students only. An average grade of B in the teaching field, or the applicant's academic major, is the standard which student teachers must now attain.

Dr. E. R. Mosher, director of the teacher-training work, states that there are several reasons for the passage of this regulation. He says that in any school where practice teaching is permitted, the interests of the pupils taught should always be regarded as paramount. No teacher can teach effectively what he himself does not know. Hence, in justice to the boys and girls of the local high school, students of indifferent scholarship should be debarred from these courses.

Other reasons for this action include a desire on the part of the school of education to raise the standard set for prospective teaching above the level now prevailing; limited practice teaching facilities; and regulations of the State Department of Public Instruction regarding teachers' certificates, Dr. Mosher states. According to these regulations, which are to go into effect on July 1, 1931, teaching is to be made a requirement for the highest grade certificate issued on graduation from any senior college undertaking teacher training work in North Carolina.

Dashiell's Book Is Widely Used

Dr. J. F. Dashiell's book entitled Fundamentals of Objective Psychology, which is being used here in psychology I and II, is receiving wide adoption throughout the country. Although it appeared late for adoptions in the fall of 1928, already there are over 75 universities and colleges that are using it. They include Harvard, Columbia, Dartmouth, Amherst, Pittsburgh, Ohio State, Indiana, Northwestern, Wisconsin, New York University, George Washington, University of Wyoming, University of California, and such southern schools as Vanderbilt, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, Davidson and the University of Tennessee.

A questionaire sent out by the University of Kentucky to 49 leading psychologists to determine their preference as to textbooks showed that for freshmen and sophomores they placed Woodworth's first and Dashiell's second, and for juniors and seniors they placed Dashiell's first and Woodworth's second. LOCAL RED CROSS TO EXPAND SOON

Classes In Life Saving, Rural Nursing, And Police Instruction Contemplated.

Classes in first aid and life saving, so popular at North Carolina last year, will be resumed in the near future, according to Miss Elise Mulliken, state field representative for the American Red Cross, who has been at the Carolina Inn the past few days.

Policemen, traffic men, and other guardians of the public safety in North Carolina have reported the great good which they derived from the two weeks' instruction given here last year, according to Miss Mulliken. No less than 46 Carolina students have become expert in life saving methods.

The work here will be under the direction of Morgan F. Vining, instruction probably being in the hand of Raymond Eaton, who is paid by the American Red Cross to teach life saving methods. None of the expense will be borne by the University.

As a result of a successful membership roll call conducted by the American Red Cross in Chapel Hill recently, Miss Mulliken promises to have eventually a Red Cross nurse to assist poor families in the district. In this work the Red Cross will be aided by the American association for the prevention of tuberculosis and other interested agencies.

The work of a Red Cross county nurse is interesting. Families too ignorant or too poor to care for themselves properly are aided and advised by the nurse. Clinic are frequently, where as many as fifty operations are performed in a single day, at no cost to persons unable to pay.

Dormitory Store System Discussed By University Executive Officers

Committee Appointed To Report On Activities Of Stores For Fall Quarter.

DORMITORY PRESIDENTS AND MANAGERS TO MEET

Editorial In Daily Tar Heel Caused Meeting In President's Office Monday Morning; Punch Boards Removed.

(By J. D. McNairy)

Yesterday morning President Chase held a conference in his office with C. T. Woollen, business manager of the University; R. B. House, executive secretary; F. F. Bradshaw, dean of students; P. L. Burch, superintendent of buildings, Jimmie Williams, assistant to the dean, and H. D. Williams of the building department, at which the question of dormitory stores, brought to the front by an editorial in Saturday's Tar Heel attacking the stores, was discussed. A representative from the Tar Heel editorial staff was also present.

In order that certain misconceptions regarding the stores may be cleared up, Mr. Burch and Jimmie Williams were directed to draw up a report of the activities of the stores for the fall quarter and to send the report to the Tar Heel and the local newspapers. In order that the limit of the stores' activity may be more clearly defined, it was decided to call a meeting of the store managers and dormitory presidents and draw up some regulations as to what types of goods may be sold in the stores.

There was general agreement among the group that the conditions stated in the Tar Heel's editorial were true before Christmas, but it was pointed out that conditions have been very greatly improved. All punch boards and games of chance have been removed from the stores; if any are now operated, then the store managers are running them at the risk of losing their jobs. Certain changes have been made in the personnel of the store managers; six were not reappointed for the winter quarter due to unsatisfactory service during the fall. The sanitary inspector has been directed to be more rigorous in his inspections of the stores.

Due to the fact that much speculation exists as to the exact amount of business done by the stores during the fall a financial statement was directed to be published. Contrary to the belief of many merchants that during the fall quarter $19,000 was turned over by the stores, the actual figures showed a business of little over $6,000. Of this one third was the commission on cleaning, pressing, and shoe repairing, which would ordinarily have been paid out by Chapel Hill firms; thus only $4,500 worth of goods were sold.

PHI ASSEMBLY TO DISCUSS SIMMONS

The weekly meeting of the Philanthropic Assembly will be held tonight at 7:15 in New East. Speaker John Lang will make a number of appointments and will complete the naming of committees for the winter quarter. The speaker will seat the members of the Assembly according to the counties which they represent.

The assembly will consider resolutions in regard to renewing the former practice of joint consideration of bills with the Dialectic Senate. A joint meeting of the two societies in February, with the Phi acting as host, will be discussed and a plan to secure a nationally known speaker to lecture to the students under the auspices of the two societies will be brought before the assembly.

The following resolutions will be discussed at the meeting: "Resolved, The State Executive Committee of the Democratic party would be justified in reading Senator Simmons out of the Democratic party," and "Resolved, That radio station KWKH, of Shreveport, Louisiana, which has been broadcasting against chain stores, should be deprived of its operating license."

Trust Officials To Speak To Law School

M. H. Willis and C. A. Lovejoy, vice-president and assistant-treasurer, respectively, of the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company of Winston-Salem, will lead a discussion on Thursday, January 16, in Manning hall, on "Trust Investments." This discussion, which supplements the work of Professor M. T. Van Hecke's course in trusts, will deal with the financial rather than the legal aspects of investments for trustees. Particular attention will be paid to investment trust certificates, equipment trust certificates, land trust certificates, and participating mortgages, as well as to land mortgages, industrial and public utility bonds, and common stocks.

The meeting will open at 2 o'clock in the first-year class room. Anyone having any interest in the subject is invited to attend.

Sigma Xi Meeting

The local chapter of the society of the Sigma Xi fraternity for the furthering of scientific research held its monthly supper in the social rooms of the Methodist church last Tuesday evening. The program was in charge of the department of psychology and included the statement of researches being carried on by psychologists, mostly of this institution. About

Slusser Elected

In the sophomore class election held in chapel Monday morning, F. W. Slusser was elected vice-president of the class. Slusser, a rising football and track star, was elected by a small margin over Hamilton Hobgood, the only other nominee.

Besides the election of a vice-president the reading of the treasurer's report was made. President Larry Johnson presided.

Women's Association Meet In Charlotte

The North Carolina division of the American Association of University Women will hold its third annual meeting in Charlotte on Friday and Saturday, February 7 and 8. At the dinner on Friday night, Dr. B. B. Kendrick, professor of history in the North Carolina College for Women will be the speaker, and Mrs. Harvey W. Harmer, director of the South Atlantic section of the association, will speak at the luncheon on Saturday.

The banquet on Friday night, which will be preceded by a drive around Charlotte and a tea at the home of Mrs. O. F. Clarkson will mark the formal opening of the two days conference which will close with the luncheon meeting on Saturday. The program is being completed and will be announced shortly.

Sunday Afternoon Tea

The regular Sunday afternoon tea held in the Episcopal church parish house was well attended. Donald Wood, at the piano, accompanied Mrs. George Lawrence, who gave a vocal solo, and Miss Walker, who showed dexterity on a musical saw. Moore Bryson was a feature of the afternoon because of his delightful mountain songs which he played upon his harmonica.

At the tea table were Mrs. A. S. Lawrence and Mrs. Charles Woollen. Mrs. John Anderson served as hostess.

Car Catches Fire

An automobile, driven by two young women from Durham, whose names were not learned, caught fire at 9:10 Sunday morning while parked in front of Patterson's drug store. Defective wiring was the cause. The blaze was extinguished by the Chapel Hill fire department after little damage had been done by the flames.

"Somebody Ought To Do Something About It"

Every few days complaints are voiced in campus conversations and through the editorial and Readers' Opinions columns of the Tar Heel against undesirable conditions in existence on the campus. Stealing is said to be widely prevalent, the dormitories are represented as strongholds of rowdyism, cheating on examinations is alleged to be the rule rather than the exception, and gambling dens are reported to be flourishing throughout the campus. Audiences at the local theatre and at entertainment programs on the campus are described as utterly devoid of artistic appreciation, addicted to manifestations of carnality and vulgarity. Student reading outside of that required on courses is declared to be limited almost entirely to periodicals catering to devotees of the obscene; even those few who read literature are said to confine their interests to pornography.

Although there is a modicum of truth in these complaints, they are vastly over-exaggerated. A few instances of poker playing of the habitual and obnoxious type were revealed recently, unwarrantably boisterous conduct is occasional in the dormitories, and thefts are not unusual. But the interested observer is impressed by the number of students who have genuine literary tastes. Although there are instances of boorishness at public performances in Chapel Hill, they are almost invariably confined to a small group. Cheating is by no means unknown, but it is not nearly so common as one might infer from campus gossip. The epidemic of petty thievery which occurred before the holidays could probably be traced to a half-dozen or so individuals.

All of us are aware that the student body includes quite a few undesirables. We are inclined, however, to overestimate their numbers and unduly emphasize their misdemeanors. Quite frequently an insignificant minority are hailed as representative of the majority. Two or three individuals may create disturbances in a dormitory which render studious pursuits almost impossible. Yet many of the other occupants of the dormitory will conclude that a large portion of its residents are rowdies and reprobates.

We vociferously lament the existence of undesirable conditions—"somebody ought to do something about it," we wail. But when it is suggested that we do something about it ourselves we hurriedly change the subject.

Often an individual moves out of a dormitory because he "can't stand the noise." He writes a letter to the Tar Heel bewailing the lack of quiet in the dormitory, but even though he is perfectly aware of the identity of the disturbing element he seldom considers revealing their names to the proper authorities.

The "somebody ought to do something about it" attitude is characteristic of most men, but it is rarely productive of real results. Acknowledgment of existing evils, willingness to face the facts, are necessary prerequisites to any attempt at improvement, but they must be accompanied by positive action. Names of offenders must be revealed to authorities if their efforts to improve conditions are to be effective.

Systematizing The Day

This queer type of animal, the collegian, about which so much has been said and written, is, according to general observations and most authorities, a lover of freedom and liberty. Whether liberty is a real passion in his make-up, or merely a fad among his comrades, we won't attempt to say. It is nevertheless present, and it exerts no small influence in shaping collegiate attitudes.

Imbued with such a passion for liberty, he despises regularity and system. He tries to arrange his schedule so that he may sleep late in the mornings, and when he does have early classes, sleeping through them is not an uncommon occurrence. He delights in courses which do not require of him specific work each day. He likes to do, and usually does, things which he wants to do: recreation and pleasure seldom interfere with his work; he studies when he feels like doing so, which means at short intervals; and if he does not want to do certain things which are required of him, he is certainly not coerced. He eats at irregular hours. His actions and manner of living being such, his academic work suffers and his personal development is retarded.

What is lacking is a proper division of time. Nobody can accomplish a certain amount of work each day if he cannot divide his time and put amusement, recreations, and bull sessions in their proper spheres. We have in mind a graduate of last year's law school. Besides making perhaps the most brilliant scholastic record in his class, he worked in a dean's office before and after class hours, and he continued his undergraduate athletic activities. Those who knew him best said that the secret of his success lay in his system of planning each day: meals, sleep, study, work, and recreation—all at a specific time every day in the week.

Of course system and regularity, if we should spell them with capital letters, are monotonous and colorless. But a little more system in the day's proceedings and a little more regularity in doing things would do no ill to the local collegian, as far as we can see. He must have some method in going about things if he is to make his four years here count for much, and certainly no time is more opportune for adopting new methods of procedure than the present, the beginning of a new quarter. —B. Readers' Opinions

THE OTHER CHEEK IS TURNED

Editor of the Tar Heel:

I have heard a great deal about the slicker robberies, but this is the first time that I have heard of anyone stealing the coat to a suit and leaving the pants and vest behind. Sunday morning sometime between eight and twelve o'clock some moronic and malicious person entered my room in the Kluttz building and took the coat to a practically new suit, leaving the pants and vest.

As I do not imagine that the coat will do the person any good, and I know the pants and vest are of no value to me, if the person in question will call by my room in the Kluttz building I will be more than glad to let him have the remainder of the suit.

I am in my room from seven on in the evening.

URGES MORE FRATERNITIES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

The writer is a new student at Carolina, and has been rather disappointed. He comes from some distance with perhaps a wrong idea of some of the college institutions.

One of these is the fraternity system. He can see great good in it, the association of a group of men with common interests and ideals, mutual help, and friendship.

The writer has not received an invitation to join a fraternity. He does not feel an inferiority complex as a result, as some are said to feel. But this is because he feels that he is as good a man as the average fraternity man, and realizes there is but one reason why he is not benefitting by the advantages of a fraternity, viz., there are three times as many men as the fraternities have room for. Some must be "outside."

It does not seem to be the fraternity idea to build up a feeling that a student is "all right" if he's in, and otherwise if he is not. The remedy would seem to lie in the creation of more fraternities.

The writer would be glad to know why this is not done. Perhaps other "Tar Heel" readers could inform him.

Thanking you, I am,
Frank Adamson

THE DORMITORY STORES PRESIDENT RESPONDS

After reading the editorial in the Saturday issue of the Tar Heel under the heading "Why the Dormitory Stores Should be Abolished," we feel that a few corrections should be made to a few things brought up in that article. As everyone knows the dormitory store is an experiment that was put into effect last fall by the University authorities for the purpose of eliminating the room-to-room canvassing that heretofore has had no restrictions. It was thought that this plan would greatly decrease the wholesale thievery which has been gradually gaining momentum in the past few years. According to all reports from dormitory residents everybody is pleased with the new plan.

The merchants of Chapel Hill have many objections to the stores in the dormitories. Some have gone so far as to say that each store makes a daily profit of $15 per day. Others say that nothing is being made by the agents, but that it is merely a waste of time to the operators. Neither of these statements is true. We make a profit in proportion to the other self-help work available. We do not make such a profit to justify the fight being made by the merchants. Most of the money that is taken by the dormitory agents is put back into circulation here in Chapel Hill either directly or indirectly.

We must grant that several statements made by the Tar Heel writer accurately described the situation as it existed before the opening of this quarter. Most of the stores did handle punch boards then, but by University regulation it has been abolished. Before the end of the fall term there were rumors on the campus of whiskey being sold in one or possibly two of the dormitory stores. This condition has been removed and we trust it will never again appear in a dormitory store.

Sanitary conditions must be kept in accordance with the state laws. These stores have been inspected at intervals during the year and the inspector has made his reports to the buildings department.

The statement was also made by the writer last Saturday that a number of men were operating the stores who were really not self-help men, and that a number of stores had been sold to other boys by the men who were originally appointed by the authorities. We wish to ask the Tar Heel to cooperate with us and prove that such conditions really exist, and also aid us in eliminating any other evil that has grown out of the running of the stores which we have overlooked and which has come under the observation of any other person. We realize that the dormitory stores are not functioning perfectly as yet, but because of a few errors must they be condemned and abolished without a fair trial? They work for the best interests of the student. They were founded on that principle, and as long as they exist they will be run according to this principle.

J. H. SHEFFIELD,
President of Dormitory Stores.

A DORMITORY STORE-KEEPER ANSWERS

Editor of the Tar Heel:

In order that correct information may be given the readers of the Tar Heel, several erroneous ideas contained in Saturday's issue about the dormitory stores should be corrected.

The impression left by the writer of the article on dormitory stores was undoubtedly that such stores, operated under the supervision of the University, are virtually gambling dens and boot-leg joints. Due to the fact that the stores for the fall quarter were experiments many things were allowed to go that time would correct. Doubtless, the writer of Saturday's article was not aware of the changes that have been made.

University officials put the ban on all gambling devices long ago. If any exist in any store I do not know of it, and I am closely associated with the stores. Should any agent keep one, he holds his job at a peril.

The agents of one dormitory are reputed to have either directly or indirectly dealt in liquor. Their agencies have been revoked.

From observation, one can see that the stores are kept neat and clean. They are periodically inspected by a government health officer.

It is true that the stores are not paying taxes, but a great deal, not all, of the taxable merchandise is bought from a retailer who had already paid the tax on the goods.

Arguments that the dormitory stores are keenly competing with the merchants of Chapel Hill are not convincing. Probably the merchants are experiencing a bad business year; but what business men are not? Almost nothing, except drinks, are being handled in the stores that was not handled by canvassers heretofore. How many boys will walk down the street for a drink at night? The small profit made by the dormitory store agents is evidence that no large amount of business is taken from down-town merchants. In fact, as was said in Saturday's article, "some boys have given over their stores to others" (though I have no information that this statement is true). If the agent was making any profit he would not sell his concession. The fact that "most of the revenue in many stores is made from the punch boards" goes to show that little business is taken from Chapel Hill merchants.

In the past the University has had a serious problem in trying to deal with stealing. Dozens of strangers coming through the dormitories every day made the detection of the thief next to impossible. As many agents calling in each room made uninterrupted study impossible, it was necessary that a new method of merchandising in the dormitories be made. Under the present system no agents are allowed to canvass the dormitories (newspaper representatives excepted). By handling pressing and shoe mending, plus a few refreshments and every day necessities, many needy students are able to earn a part of their expenses. The services above mentioned are rendered the occupants as lessees and the University as lessor.

Lack of experience on the part of the University and its store agents in an endeavor of this kind leaves many problems yet to be solved. But experiments here to date, and of other universities in the past, warrant a prophecy that the dormitory store plan will prove a great benefit to the University and its students.

(Women have, in general, no love of art; they have no proper knowledge of any; and they have no genius.—Rousseau: "Lettre a d'Alembert".)

It is not unusual to hear a man say that he does not understand women, but it is strange that he should be prompted to utter such a statement when the shallowness of the female is so completely obvious. Schopenhauer says: "You need only look at the way in which she is formed to see that woman is not meant to undergo great labour, whether of the mind or of the body." And yet with quaint old American absurdity we have labelled the present day that of prohibition and the emancipation of woman, which two factors go hand-in-hand in that we have passed laws by means of which we propose the attainment of both, while knowing that we can no more prohibit woman from remaining contentedly in the sloughs of mental indolence and physical luxury than we can the good old American from pulling corks out of bottles.

Our educators with a pedantic fervor invoke the gods to aid woman in attaining intellectual freedom—and no less than a god can do it. We propose to educate them for business when the only business for which they are fit is love-making and deceit, each of which is a complement of the other.

Perhaps the statement that women are deceitful will be challenged. Will not the challenge be rewarded with a score of rapier points flashing? Are not women deceitful when they pretend in that habitually sophisticated manner of theirs that they admire the arts? Woman attends the theatre equipped with an amazing supply of scandal which, at the rise of the curtain, she proceeds to dispense among all available acquaintances in a voice just loud enough to drown out that of the performer. At an excellent recital she affects boredom: at a poor one her cherubimic smiles drift before the gaze of an attractive gentleman across the aisle. She reads Byron, Shelley, and Keats because she hears that this trio is assigned to the libraries of the cultured. She listens with closed eyes and complacent brow to music when she cannot distinguish between a Bach sonata and a Schubert symphony.

You may ask why women often make excellent teachers. Let me assure you that it is not because of any mental superiority, but because of the fact that women, fitted for bringing up children, are accustomed to accept, as a natural part of their duty, nursing and teaching. Women make great actresses only when they act naturally: acting is inherent in them.

We often wonder why it is that women can get away with murder. It is because they are born actresses, with faces of angels and the deceitfulness of —well, quite a bit of deceitfulness.

Is it not to man's credit that he is beginning at last to reject that attitude of gallantry inherited from the romantic (and dark) ages and to accept woman as she is—a creature inferior to the male of like species?

Tar Heels Open Against Guilford Quakers Tonight

New Combination At Forwards May Be Used By Ashmore.

PLAY IN TIN CAN

The Tar Heel cagers have had scant chance for drill before meeting Guilford in the Tin Can tonight at 8:30. Little is known of the comparative strength of the Quaker quintmen, but it is known that Washington and Lee has one of the outstanding teams of the south this year, and the Generals are scheduled to invade the Tin Can here just two nights later.

Coach Jim Ashmore intimated that another forward shift might be in order before these two engagements. If it comes, it will probably mean that the lanky John Edwards will step into the place of either Tom Cleland or Dave Neiman, who have started the last two games.

Davidson had a fine, smooth-working team, but still the Tar Heels fell far short of what they should have done offensively, if they had continued to run true to the form shown the previous night in turning back Greensboro "Y" 88 to 25.

The Neiman-Cleland forward combination made its debut that night, and impressive enough. Both boys were following and handling the ball in great style, with Neiman breaking away for 23 points. At Davidson Neiman got but one and Cleland never broke the scoring ice.

Both boys are fast but comparatively short. Edwards is a big boy, converted from center, and if he can master forward play, might be a big asset. There was no complaint as to the work of Harper, big center and high scorer against Davidson, and of Marpet and Brown, who played their usual fine game on defense. It was the old story of four forwards graduated, leaving only rookies to fill the gaps.

TEAM PREPARES FOR W. & L. GAME

Generals Have Veteran Outfit In Togs Back This Year: Williams Is Big Star.

The Tar Heel basketeers will face one of their stiffest games of the season when Washington and Lee's Generals invade the Tin Can here Thursday night. The Generals boast the same team of veterans that piled up an impressive tournament record last year, and this season are going stronger than ever.

If comparative scores mean anything, their strength is shown by the fact that they defeated St. John's 51 to 16, while St. John's in turn defeated Virginia 35 to 19.

Though the showing of the Generals in the southern tournament last year was not so good, their pre-tourney record was among the most impressive in the south. They were defeated in only one game last year, while they counted among their victims the strong West Virginia team, which had defeated Pitt's fine quint.

Practically the same string of veterans is back this year, with the team being built around Williams, star football end and one of the south's few four-letter men.

Coach Jim Ashmore, Carolina mentor, is having a great deal of trouble getting a smooth working combination. Thus far, the guards and centers have done good work, but the forwards, all rookies, have been far from consistent.

A hummer's wings moves faster than an airplane's propeller.

Golf Rules

The course committee of the Country Golf Club again calls attention to the local ruling that any non-member wishing to play on the course must first purchase a ticket, which may be secured at either the Book Exchange or Students Supply Store.

Because the course is a short one and to encourage rapid movement and minimize delay as much as possible, all players are requested to move in "twosomes." This is not a local rule, however, but only a request, so that every one playing the course may experience more enjoyment hitherto.

WRESTLERS OPEN AGAINST MIDDIES

Shift Of Meet With Duke To March 3 Leaves Tar Heel Grapplers Without Contest Until January 25.

The Carolina-Duke wrestling meet, carded for the Tin Can here Saturday night, has been shifted up to March 3. The change was made at the request of the Duke officials, and was announced yesterday by Charles T. Woollen, graduate manager of athletics. This means that the Tar Heel grapplers will have another week of practice before raising the curtain on their season.

The Navy meet, at Annapolis, January 25, will be the curtain raiser instead of the Duke meet. The shift in schedule works an obvious imposition on Coach Chuck Quinlan's matmen. Moore and Cowper, in the middle weights, two of five lettermen back this year, would be eligible to wrestle Duke this Saturday, but will be away from college on co-op engineering work at the later date for which the meet is now carded.

Coach Quinlan is grooming replacements for the veterans as fast as possible, but the task of developing men to fill lettermen's posts is a hard one. Just now J. A. Park, J. B. Spell and W. L. Higdon look the best of the contenders for Moore's 155-pound post, and Sam Spitzer and Bob Kushner for Cowper's 165-pound post.

The other three lettermen in camp are Fred Stallings, 115-pounder; Captain Wayne Woodard, 125-pounder, and Ferguson, 175-pounder.

Due to the change in the wrestling schedule, there will be no meet between the Carolina and Virginia matmen on Saturday, January 18, as previously announced. Virginia meets Washington and Lee on that date, leaving it open for Carolina unless an engagement can be secured with the Concord Y. M. C. A. In case there should be no meet, Carolina's first contest would be with Navy at Annapolis.

This year's squad is rather small with a noticeable lack of reserve material. The team is further weakened by the ineligibility of several lettermen. Coach Quinlan urges new men to come out and fill these vacancies.

Notice

Miss Sidney Curry, manager of the co-ed basketball team asks that any students or town people with cars, who are interested in co-ed athletics, and who would like to motor the co-ed team to Greensboro for their game tonight, to call her at 4201.

(By Browning Roach)

The second week of the basketball season ended Saturday with Duke and Alabama tied for first place with two wins and no defeats. Tennessee, Georgia and Kentucky, with one victory each, also boast perfect conference records and trail close in the wake of the pace-setters. All but eight teams have seen conference play to date and most of these will get into action in the 14 games carded for this week. In addition, 18 contests are on the books with non-conference teams.

The Duke Blue Devils, in their triumph over the Cavaliers at Charlottesville Wednesday night ran up the largest score of the week. Fast passing and accurate shooting enabled the Devils to register 65 points while the Virginia five tallied 32. In total conference scoring the Clemson Tigers lead with 105 points. On the other hand, the Tiger opponents, Kentucky, Tennessee, Auburn and Georgia Tech, ran up 121 points to make Clemson the most scored-on aggregation in the conference. Tulane, also, has been rather negligent in the defensive side of the game, having had 111 points scored against it while marking up 83 points for itself.

The Wildcats of Kentucky have shown up best on defensive, allowing only 15 points by Clemson in the only game in which they have engaged.

Even this early in the season it becomes apparent that no individual outfit is going to have anything like supremacy on the court. This has been evidenced by some of the close scores that have been turned in. Duke, after overwhelming the Cavaliers Wednesday, barely managed to nose the Maryland Old Liners 28 to 27 Thursday. Auburn in winning one and losing one, exactly equaled their opponents' score of 61. Georgia overcame the Florida lead and in an extra period scraped out a 35-34 victory over the 'Gators. Georgia Tech lost to the Clemson Tigers 25-24 as Clarence "Doodles" Thomas sank a field goal from the center in the last few seconds of play. Tulane eased out a 27-25 win over Mississippi college in the first of a two game series last week and then dropped the second by a still closer score of 27-26.

The Carolina Tar Heels open conference play with the Generals of Washington and Lee in Chapel Hill Thursday. The Mississippi Aggies have yet to meet a conference antagonist, but showed considerable form in disposing of the Meridian, Miss. Y. M. C. A. Saturday night. North Carolina State, with victories over Lenoir Rhyne and High Point college in the bag, goes into conference play against V. P. I. Friday, takes on Washington and Lee Saturday.

Big five play got under way Saturday when the Davidson Wildcats forced the Tar Heels to bow before them. Big Five games for this week are: Wake Forest vs. State, tonight; Wake Forest vs. Duke Saturday. The next big five game on the card for the Tar Heels will be the Wake Forest game here the 25th.

All conference teams except Alabama saw action the past week, with 28 games in all. On the whole, the conference outfits emerged victorious over outside opponents. Kentucky broke even in a two-game series with Creighton college of Nebraska. V. P. I., Tulane, Vir-

EXPECT 150 MEN OUT FOR WINTER FOOTBALL HERE

Coach Collins Will Divide Material Into Five Or Six Groups.

Head Coach Chuck Collins returns today from his pilgrimage through the North to make ready for the annual session of winter football which begins this week.

Coach Collins, who had a brilliant season during the past year, will be assisted by Coaches Cerney, Fetzer and Enright. Judging from the number of men who reported for varsity football in September together with the freshman material, there will be approximately 150 men out for practice. These will be divided into five or six teams according to strength, each being named for some team that will oppose Carolina in the fall.

Two games will be played each week, and in this way the coaches will be able to replace such men as Farris, Eskew, Ward, Holt, Adkins and others, who graduate this year. This list is not long, but the strength it contains is large. In other words, after a careful inventory of the Tar Heel stock, it was learned that the Tar Heels have a deficiency in four linemen and two backfield men. There promises to be much scrapping for each of these berths from the appearance of the frosh strength and the reserve power of the 1929 edition of the Tar Heels.

If scholastic work permits, Farris, Ward, Adkins and the others may participate in the games; they will at least be on hand to aid the coaches.

Material will be distributed the latter half of the week.

I Defeats New Dorms

In the game between Grimes and "G," "G" failed to show up and Grimes won by forfeit.

In the New Dorms vs. "I," the boys from "I" proved to be a fast bunch, and they looked as if they had had plenty of previous practice when they defeated New Dorms yesterday by a score of 21 to 19. Captain Leokowitz was a heavy scorer at center, with three field goals to his credit. Turchiavelli was the highest scorer, outdoing Leikowitz by one goal on a foul. The New Dorms seemed to be a little slow in starting, but towards the end they speeded up and almost tied the score.

Steele defeated Best House 26 to 20. Smith, left guard for Steele, played a fast, clean game, piling up four goals. Purser, center, was not far behind with three of his own. All the Steele team were scorers at least twice. Best House fought hard, Davis and Harper being their leaders, but failed to overtake the winners.

Frosh Five Plays Leaksville Tonight

The freshman basketball team will open the season tonight with the Leaksville "Y" team at the Tin Can at 7 o'clock. The game will be a preliminary to the Carolina-Guilford game.

This year there will be no cut in the squad as a result of a University policy of having as many men as possible take part in athletics.

Numbered among the squad are several high school and prep school luminaries: Chandler, a Durham boy, was a star on last year's Oak Ridge Military Academy team as was Henry; Dunn, forward, saw service with Oak Park; Hines, center, played with the Charlotte high school team, while Lineberger starred for Woodberry Forest. The reserves who will probably see service are Moore, Riggs, Markham and Ferebee, forwards; Davis, Connor, Walch and Newcombe, guards.

The squad is fast rounding into shape and with a little more practice should reach mid-season form.

The next game scheduled for the Tar Babies will be with the fast Oak Ridge team at the Tin Can Thursday night.

Heelettes Travel

The Tar Heelettes will play Greensboro High School tonight at 8 o'clock at the high school gymnasium in Greensboro.

This is the second game of the year for the Tar Heelettes, having lost to the Chapel Hill Lassies Thursday night 26-25.

The co-eds will leave tomorrow afternoon for Greensboro, and return to the Hill after the game.

The Greensboro lineup has not been ascertained, but the Heelettes lineup will be practically the same as in last Thursday's game, with the exception of Kitty Wells, star guard and mainstay of the co-ed defense who was injured in the last game and most likely will not be able to play.

Jo Hill, stellar guard, will be back at her position tonight. Louise Thacker, forward for the Heelettes, played with Greensboro High School several years before she entered the University.

Dekes Win 32-10

The Dekes showed great form in defeating the Delta Tau Delta five 32 to 10 in the season's opener in intramural basketball competition. The Dekes took the lead at the beginning of the game, and were never headed. At the half the score stood 14 to 0. In the last half the D. K. E. five, led by Tom Craig, piled up the score on the weaker aggregation.

The outstanding star of the game was Tom Craig, tall Deke guard, whose total of fifteen points was the highest amount of counters scored by any member of either team. Craig played all over the court, and shot many long shots as well as numerous crip shots. Meade Willis also played a good game for the Dekes, scoring a total of eight points. Bud Weis, fast forward of the Delta Tau Delta five, played well, and was high scorer for his team with a total of six points.

Baby Grapplers Give Promise Of Excellent Team

Under the watchful tutelage of Coach Chuck Quinlan, and with a hard period of daily practice behind them, that began several weeks before Christmas, the Tar Baby grapplers are fast rounding into shape and giving promise of another strong outfit. The squad has been cut to 15, but all these are promising candidates. Many men reported without previous experience, but the hard training grind is erasing that deficiency.

No places are definitely clinched. Indeed, the frosh will follow the varsity plan of having tryouts before each meet to determine who will compete in the different weights. Several men, however, have already assumed the position of outstanding contenders.

Among these are W. E. Lewis, 115 pounds; C. J. Deitz, 125 pounds; E. N. Seligson, 135 pounds; H. A. Leary, 145 pounds; C. L. Bradley, 160 pounds, and P. C. Idol, 170 pounds. The unlimited weight also shows a big gap, but Coach Quinlan has three new men out for that post from the freshman football team and hopes to find his heavy from the trio of Margolis, Philpott and Williams.

Other men who have excellent chances of coming out on top in their respective weights are T. E. Bunn, 135 pounds; C. F. Lawson, 125 pounds; W. F. Stone, 145 pounds; O. G. Williams, 135 pounds; C. C. Winstead, 140 pounds, and T. C. Hassell, 145 pounds.

The freshmen will face practically the same schedule as their varsity brothers, meeting the freshman teams on the same day as the Tar Heels take on the varsity outfits. This means that they will have an attractive schedule, probably showing several trips, against such teams as Washington and Lee, V. P. I., V. M. I., Duke, Virginia, N. C. State, Columbia and Penn State.

Y Plans Celebration

The three Y cabinets are now making plans for a special celebration of Lee's and Jackson's birthday, which will come on Sunday, January 19. The local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy will have a part in the programs.

Yale Organization Will Debate South American Countries

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 13.—The Centro Espanol de Yale has just received notice from the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace that it has made an allotment of funds to the organization to aid in meeting the expenses of a trip to South America by a team which will debate there in Spanish. This organization is composed of students in Yale University interested in speaking and hearing Spanish for the purpose of improving their ability to understand the culture and conditions of the "other Americans" in order to help foster friendly international relations. The team, which will debate with South American universities, will leave the United States about June 20, will spend about twelve weeks in South America, and will return to this country in time for the opening of the college year.

Phi Sigma Kappa Wins

The Phi Sigma Kappa basketball team opened its season in the intramural basketball league with a handy 17-13 win over the Sigma Chi five. They got off to a rather slow start, and the Phi Sigma Kappa aggregation amassed a total of 10 points before the Sigma Chi's went into action. In the last two quarters of the game the Sigma Chi team put up a good fight, but were unable to overcome the lead of the other five.

Jackson played well for the winners and was high point scorer with a total of six points. Fitch also played well for the winners, and Sickler and Shuford were outstanding for the losers.

Mitmen Open With Washington and Lee

Return to college of Evan Vaughan, star bantam, and Obie Davis, hard-hitting 160-pounder who also boxes the light heavy, gives the Tar Heel boxers veterans in six of seven posts, with which to defend their Southern Conference title this year. The Tar Heels will open a hard season with a meet with the Washington and Lee mitmen at Lexington Saturday night.

Priscilla Chase Leaves

Miss Priscilla Chase, who has been working here with the United Church for the past two or three weeks, left Sunday night for Washington, D. C. After attending a convention there Miss Chase will continue to Chicago. As secretary of the Congregational church in the Carolinas, Miss Chase had been working here helping to complete the union of the Christian and Congregational churches.

Relay Team To Run At Milrose Games

The Tar Heel freshman championship relay team of last year, composed of Charlie Farmer, Rip Slusser, Wallace Case and Lionel Weil, is back intact this year, and is being counted on for valuable varsity service. All of the quartet are outstanding contenders for the honor of running on the mile relay team the Tar Heels have been invited to send to the classic Milrose Games at Madison Square Garden.

High School Basketball

There will be a basketball game between the Chapel Hill high school and Pittsboro high school at 8 o'clock tonight at the high school Tin Can. This is the second game the local boys have played this season. The first game, which was also with Pittsboro, went to Chapel Hill high school 32-30 after three extra periods of play. Coach Jones announces that the local team is in good shape after strenuous practice since the holidays.

Barkley On Mile Relay

Minor Barkley, the one Tar Heel trackman still in college from the four-mile relay team that won the Penn Relays in 1928, is an outstanding contender to run on the mile relay team the Tar Heels have been invited to send to the classic Milrose Games at Madison Square Garden February 8. Barkley is ordinarily a miler, but is also a creditable performer in any race from 440-yards up, and indeed, was versatile enough to captain the cross country team last year.

ginia, L. S. U., V. M. I., and Carolina were the only ones to go down before non-conference teams. Duke sank the Navy in impressive style, 49-27; South Carolina suppressed the College of Charleston by a five-point margin; Tennessee whipped Maryville 36 to 25; Vandy had little trouble with Western Kentucky Normal; Mississippi Aggies trampled the Meridian "Y" quint 42 to 17. Washington and Lee flashed form in downing the St. Johns (Md) team 51 to 16. St. Johns was fresh from victories over V. M. I. and Virginia and was rated to give the Generals real opposition.

The Washington and Lee Generals invade the Old North State this week, taking on Duke Wednesday, Carolina Thursday, and State Saturday. The last game is in Virginia, however. The Generals return to Lexington after the Carolina tilt and State takes on V. P. I. Friday night.

Williams-Harper Battle

A battle royal between two giant centers promises to be one of the high lights of the Carolina-Washington and Lee cage battle in the Tin Can Thursday night.

The Generals will present one of the strongest teams in the South, molded around the bulky personality of one Williams, big rangy star football end, a fine basketball player, and one of the few four-lettermen in the South.

Carolina will present as Mr. Williams' opposition "Puny" Harper, 6 feet 6, Southern champion discus heaver, and the only three-letterman on the University campus.

Williams is the pivot of the Generals' offense, and Harper the center of Carolina's defense. The individual clash between the two fine centers promises a real treat for cage fans.

Dormitory Store System Discussed By Executive Officers Of University

store mangers; a close supervision of the stores by University officials, a clearer definition of the limits between which the stores may operate.

Mr. Bradshaw suggested that store managers should be chosen on the basis of their efficiency rather than their need as self-help students. Mr. Burch is working out the details of a plan for closer supervision of the stores. The store managers with the dormitory government, the dean's office, and the buildings department will define the type of goods that may be sold by the stores; it was pointed out that the stores have already reached the peak of their expansion, and will not, as some merchants think, continue to expand indefinitely.

Mr. Woollen pointed out that the dormitory stores were founded as service agencies, rather than stores, and exist solely for the benefit of the students. They are to be considered as service agencies primarily. Originally they were planned as central agencies that would do away with all canvassing of the dormitories and would handle such goods and do such work as the members of the dormitory demanded.

The effect the stores are having upon business conditions in Chapel Hill was discussed. Business depression here cannot be blamed upon the stores, for they take away a very small revenue, but must be blamed upon absence of any building by the University. Every year since 1920 approximately a half million dollars has been paid out for labor in the building program. Following this expanded business the merchants of the village have overstocked themselves and cannot sell their goods to the students. The general financial conditions of the state has a strong bearing upon the local situation. Boys in school here are not spending as much money as they generally do because their fathers are not able to supply it, it was said.

Lawrence Is Principal Speaker Opening Session Of N.C. Press Association

Will Deliver Address Tonight In Gerrard Hall at Eight O'clock.

"THE TREND OF THE TIMES" IS SUBJECT

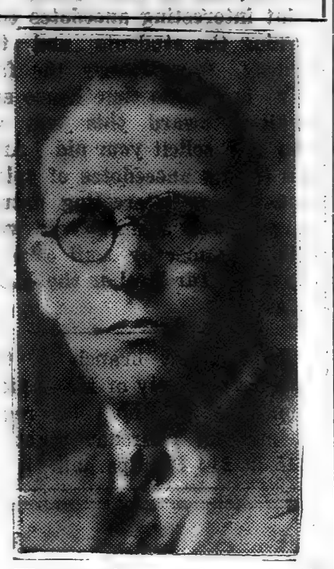
Talk Will Be Preceded By Welcome Address By Dr. Chase And Response By W. Carey Dowd, Jr., President of North Carolina Press Association

David Lawrence, publisher of the United States Daily and president of the Consolidated Press Association, will deliver the feature address at the opening session of the sixth annual newspaper institute at 8 o'clock tonight in Gerrard hall. Registration for the institute will be opened this afternoon at the Carolina Inn.

Tonight the first meeting will be held with an address of welcome by President H. W. Chase of the University, a response by W. Carey Dowd, Jr., president of the North Carolina Press Association and Mr. Lawrence's address.

The institute is meeting under the auspices of the North Carolina Press Association and the University, and more than a hundred newspapermen from all over this state are expected to attend.

According to Josh Horne, member of the committee on arrangements, "Publishers in our state are going to be told in unmistaken terms why our business isn't as prosperous as those in neighboring states, why we haven't as much money in the bank and as much of this world's goods—why our personal pay envelope misses the total dollars of a publisher of like size and labors somewhere else." Mr. Horne further states that not only are the newspapermen going to be told what is wrong but they are going to be shown how to improve.



Mr. Lawrence arrives in Raleigh this morning where he will speak to a joint luncheon given by the civic clubs of Raleigh at 2:30 today. His speech will be broadcast over the National Broadcasting chain through station WPTF of the Durham Life Insurance Company of Raleigh. A committee from Chapel Hill will meet him in Raleigh, and he will be entertained by Dr. Chase. Following the address here tonight Mr. Lawrence will leave for Greensboro entraining from there for Washington.

"The Trend of the Times" will be the subject of Mr. Lawrence's address. The speaker is one of the foremost journalists of the nation. At the age of 15 he began newspaper work on the Buffalo Express, and upon his entrance of Princeton University he became Associated Press writer for the institution. Graduating in 1910 he continued his work with the Associated Press until 1915 when he became special correspondent of the New York Evening Post.

In 1919 he formed the organization which was later to become the Consolidated Press Association. He writes daily press dispatches which are distributed by means of the Consolidated Press service. In 1926 he organized the United States Daily, a paper devoted

SWEET TO GIVE TWO ADDRESSES ON NEXT SUNDAY

Speaker Student of Kellogg Pact; Well Informed on Recent Disarmament Problems.

Ex-Governor W. E. Sweet of Colorado will speak here January 19 under the auspices of the local Y. He will speak at both the morning and evening services at the Methodist church.

According to H. F. Comer, general secretary of the Y, "Governor Sweet is a very thorough student of the Kellogg Peace Pact and his Sunday morning address at the Methodist church on 'The New Patriotism' will be based largely on the implications of the Kellogg Pact. No subject should be more interesting to members of a university community at this particular time, just as our nation's special delegation, chaperoned by Will Rogers, is reporting in London for the Disarmament Conference.

"The Governor's Sunday evening address will be on a subject which in some respects is even closer home to the interest and welfare of North Carolina. His subject will be 'A Valid Christianity Today.' Governor Sweet's own statement, in a letter, with reference to his treatment of this subject is, 'I have some very clear notions about social and economic questions. Under the title, "A Valid Christianity for Today," I shall speak with wide freedom on the implications of the gospel as applied to industry. My address will run strictly counter to many accepted ideas of the church people in your state, but if industrial ills are ever cured, they must be cured by those who hold strictly to the principles of the Christian Gospel and who want to see them rigidly applied."

EXAMINATIONS FOR LAW SCHOOL BEGIN TUESDAY

The University law school will begin its examinations for the first semester Tuesday, January 21. They will continue through January 25.

No Decision

The executive committee of the University's board of trustees convened yesterday in the office of Governor Gardner at Raleigh.

Governor Gardner, ex-officio chairman, called the committee together as a preliminary to the meeting of the entire board of trustees in Chapel Hill, scheduled for the 28th of this month. Several financial items were settled in order to eliminate some of the details to be brought before the board at the coming meeting.

As is currently known, the fate Memorial hall will be decided on the 28th. Therefore this meeting of the board of directors is drawing widespread interest both among students and the alumni. The question to be settled is whether Memorial hall will be torn down and plans made for the construction of a new auditorium, or whether it will be reinforced and kept in service for another decade.

The hall was condemned as unsafe by experts late last fall. Ever since then the University has been deprived of a place large enough to contain the freshman class in chapel and suitable for the presentation of entertainments.

SENATE INDUCTS NEW OFFICIALS

Senator Rector Favors Reform In Parliamentary Procedure In Dialectic Body.

The winter quarter session of the 131st Dialectic Senate convened last night in its hall on the top floor of New West Building. The meeting, held as an executive session, was devoted largely to the installation of new officers and the inaugural address of the in-coming president. The new officers inducted into office were: President, Garland McPherson; Clerk, C. A. Shreve; Sergeant-at-arms, E. R. Hamer; and Critic, J. C. Williams.

Williams, in a valedictory address relinquishing the office of president, urged the senators to consider their organization an active and influential organ on the campus. Senator McPherson, after receiving the oath and cane of office, delivered his inaugural address as president. Re-emphasizing the remarks of his predecessor, he further urged independent thinking on the part of individual senators and the Senate as a body. Though in favor of attention to the art of persuasion, President McPherson laid emphasis upon the less serious aspects of the Senate's activities.

At the conclusion of the President's address the following new members were admitted to the Senate: John Dickinson, Lawrence Miller, and W. C. McCorkle.

Senator Rector obtained the floor and declared himself in favor of reforms and improvements in the appearance and procedure of the Senate. President McPherson announced that Mr. Howard Y. Williams, who is affiliated with the League of Women Voters, will speak on the campus, and that it had been suggested that the two literary societies join in presenting a debate on the subject of a third party in our government, between Mr. Williams and Mr.

Students Earned Average Of $62.72 By Operating Stores In Dormitories Report Shows

90 Per Cent Of Goods Sold Is Bought From Local Merchants; Stores Serve As Central Point For Handling All Agencies.

Student managers of the dormitory stores earned an average of $62.72 each for their fall quarter's work, according to the report submitted by P. L. Burch, superintendent of the buildings department, and James A. Williams, director of the dormitory clubs. This report was directed to be drawn up at a meeting of University officials Monday morning with Dr. Chase at which the question of the dormitory stores was discussed. The meeting came at a result of an editorial in Saturday's Tar Heel attacking the stores and demanding their abolition.

The report reviews the work of the stores during the fall quarter and emphasizes the fact that they were founded not as competitive organizations to take business from Chapel Hill merchants, but to serve the students living in the dormitories, and to serve as a central point for the handling of all agencies, thus barring solicitors and agents of all kinds from the dormitories.

$7,000 Business Done

The total business done by the stores, according to the report, was $7,009.65. Of this amount one-third was commissions on cleaning, pressing, and shoe repairing. It is pointed out also that the revenue derived from these stores is turned back into the business channels of Chapel Hill. As the store managers buy 90 per cent of their goods from local merchants, the amount of business that the dormiory stores take from the merchants is indeed small.

Full Report

In order to aid in clearing up a somewhat general misunderstanding concerning the dormitory agencies, the following information was issued yesterday by the committee.

The dormitory agency is the solution of a dormitory problem that has troubled University officials and the Carolina dormitory club for several years. In order to promote better study conditions through the elimination of the former continuous disturbance caused by peddlers, solicitors, and other forms of mercantile gentlemen, and to lessen the possibility of losses by stealing, the Carolina dormitory club recommended to the University that one room be set aside in each dormitory for a Service Room. This room was to handle all pressing, shoe repairing, and handle all merchandise demanded by members of the dormitories. Certain exceptions were made as to the material to be handled, in order to protect the sanitary conditions of the dormitories. The Service Rooms were to be operated by self-help students, selected on account of their need for the work and on basis of their worthiness.

The dormitory agents this past fall were selected originally as telephone monitors. When the agency plan was passed by the University, these men were given first choice for the agencies, as it would have been rather harsh to appoint them and then remove them without some consideration. Of this number, 26 in all, three have been dropped through inability to return to school, one has re-

Dormitories Will Have Discussions

Each Dormitory to Discuss Religious Problems Each Tuesday Night.

According to plans made last Monday night at the junior-senior cabinet meeting of the Y, each dormitory on the campus will conduct a weekly discussion group on subjects relating to "Religion." It was planned that on a set night each week each dormitory would meet in a specified room for the purpose of discussing this subject. Each meeting for the first three weeks of the month will be led by some appointed student. On the fourth week there will be a mass meeting in Gerrard hall, led by some member of the faculty. At this meeting some of the subjects which were brought up in the dormitory discussions will be thoroughly discussed. These discussions will continue for this quarter, then at the end of the quarter a report will probably be published, stating the main points which were brought out about religion. Ed Hamer is in charge of the discussion groups.

GARDEN CLUB TO MEET

Chris Hibbard of Durham will conduct the members of the Chapel Hill Garden Club through his greenhouses this afternoon. All members interested in making the tour may do so by meeting at Davie hall at 3 o'clock. Transportatoin will not be furnished.

OLDSMOBILE CAR STOLEN MONDAY

Car Had Made Trip From New York By Having Gas Tank Repaired With Gum.

A remarkably unusual sequence of events was climaxed by the theft of an automobile belonging to George Brown, between the hours of 6 and 7 Monday evening.

This is the automobile in which, as was related in a news story appearing in the Sunday issue of the Tar Heel, Brown and a group of friends were able to make a difficult trip from New York only by constantly repairing the gas tank with chewing gum. In view of the condition of the car the owner is unable to understand how the robbery was accomplished with such apparent ease and success. Although both the Chapel Hill and Durham police have been notified, no clues have yet been obtained regarding the disappearance.

The car was parked at the time of the theft on the street between Emerson and freshman fields where the grade would aid in starting. It is a gray Oldsmobile sedan of the 1925 model and carries a North Carolina license, number 276,969. Brown admitted that the only real value of the machine lay in a comparatively new set of tires. He declared, however, that he valued

Woodhouse, vocational director and research director of the institute of Women's Relations at North Carolina College in Greensboro, will speak at the regular quarterly meeting of the Woman's Association on Friday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in Spencer building. She will speak on the subject, "After College—What?" She will also plan individual vocational conferences with any interested co-eds.

Before Mrs. Woodhouse took charge of the vocational department at N. C. C. W., she was head of the Bureau of Home Economics in the United States Department of Agriculure in Washington. Previous to that time she taught economics and sociology at Smith. In association with Mrs. Ruth Yeomans, she has recently published a bibliography of women's professional relations.

Mrs. Woodhouse is being brought here by the Woman's Association to help the co-eds in choosing their vocations. Kitty Wells, president of the association, urges all co-eds and any other persons interested to attend the meeting.

Community Club Will Meet Today

Program of English Folk Music to Be Given at Meet in Person Hall.

The music department of the community club will hold its regular meeting this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in room 9 of the music building.

The program, announced by Mrs. T. S. McCorkle, chairman, will be one of English folk music under the direction of Miss Josephine Sharkey. Miss Sharkey and Mrs. Trott will give a group of soprano solos; Mrs. G. A. Harrer, contralto, will likewise sing, and Mrs. P. H. Winston will interpret a group of folk dances on the piano.

Miss Sharkey has made a wide and detailed study of English folk song and dance. Only last summer she returned to England to do additional work in this field with Cecil Sharpe, noted teacher of the folk dance and folk song.

New Type Welder

Students of the University, especially those interested in engineering work, are invited by I. M. Tull, proprietor of the Club Service motor company, to visit his garage and watch the operation of a new type electric welder he has installed.

The new machine is a radical forward step in welding, in that it is operated under heavy amperage from an alternating current by the induction method.

Cast iron, difficult to weld by old electrical processes, is easily welded by the new.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF SENIOR CLASS TO MEET

According to Fleming Wily, chairman, there will be an important meeting of the executive committee of the senior class at 9:30 o'clock tonight on the second floor of the Y. M. C. A.

Tar Heel Topics

The law enforcement commission reports that strength is needed to enforce the dry law. Our opinion is that a half dozen armies couldn't do the trick.

"American delegates will be quartered in England Friday"—headline in the Greensboro News. We had no idea the anti-American sentiment in England had progressed that far.

Students at Shaw University for negroes at Raleigh have gone on strike because "indecent" movies were barred from the campus, and athletic contests cancelled. If the movies and football games were taken away from the Hill the students wouldn't strike; they'd declare war.

Judging from the amount of cars rented here last night, the Tar Heel business manager should send a bill to the local U-Drive-IT for the next appeal printed at the instance of the co-ed basketball team manager for students with cars to transport the feminine cage artists to their out of town games.

The Newspaper Folk Invade Chapel Hill

The annual Newspaper Institute, which opens at the Carolina Inn this afternoon, will have especial significance. Several score North Carolina newspaper folk will gather for a three-day discussion of the problems confronting the press of the state, and an undercurrent of intense feeling will probably pervade their sessions.

Not only will the presence of such speakers as David Lawrence, publisher of the United States Daily and president of the Consolidated Press Association, lend extraordinary interest to the Institute, but the diametrically opposed attitudes of several of the editors and publishers toward the industrial crisis through which the state has been passing for the past few months will probably result in keen clashes of opinion.

The Institute will mark the first major convocation of the state's newspaper men since the Marion and Gastonia affairs, the Wiggins slaying and the opening of the American Federation of Labor's campaign for organization of southern textile workers. Through their publications the men who will attend the Institute have exhibited wide differences of opinion concerning these momentous occurrences, and their diverse attitudes are almost certain to be productive of verbal conflicts.

Newspaper work affords contacts with the bare realities, with life in its most drab aspects, as well as an occasional insight into all that is admirable in human nature. Those who engage in it usually represent an incongruous combination of the cynical and the idealistic; most of them have become adept at stripping a problem of its misleading implications and penetrating to its essentials. Therein probably lies an explanation of the ease with which newspaper editors treat a wide variety of subjects, often with remarkable success.

The sessions of the Institute will probably produce verbal pyrotechnics, profanity and not a little perspiration on the part of the participants. Much of the discussion, of course, will center about technical aspects of newspapering, but direct and candid analysis of problems of state and national importance will not be infrequent.

Required Mathematics

One of the biggest stumbling blocks in the more or less hectic first year of the undergraduate is mathematics which the administration, in mapping out the curriculums for the various schools, has seen fit to saddle upon everyone regardless of tastes, capabilities, or future ambitions. No matter how difficult a struggle the freshman has had with this so-called practical subject in high school the powers-that-be know no mercy; the embryo A. B. is not considered educated until he has been subjected to this annoyance for at least two quarters. So one and all, to consider themselves proper candidates in the pursuit of culture, must pursue the elusive "x," no matter how fruitlessly, and must wrinkle their brows month after month over the esoteric intricacies of trigonometry and analytic geometry.

It is quite clear that the courses laid out for the first two years of the undergraduate are planned to supply him with a well-rounded background of general knowledge. He dabbles in a little of everything: English rhetoric, two foreign languages, some form of science, literature, history, and mathematics. Waiving all question of the practical value of this plan in regard to the average freshman, who usually has no idea or definite plan about the future, there remains the first or second year man who has already decided on his major or even on his plans to be pursued after college, and yet does not wish to enroll in one of the schools of concentrated and specialized study. For this type of individual, unless he has an especial interest in the subject, mathematics can be of very little use; it is required and therefore must be passed to make way for subjects of more value and more interest.

Formerly it was thought necessary to inculcate, no matter how much drilling it required, a background of English, the classical languages, and mathematics in the brain of all who sought to become educated. This was a kind of finishing veneer to the more elementary readin', writin', and arithmetic of the grammar schools. But now modern education, as modern life, has become specialized so that a degree in almost any subject can be obtained. But the "cultural" subjects, the fields of general knowledge and enlightenment, have been laft in the anachronistic rut of being joined with the apparent companion subject, mathematics, and it seems that the administration is going to continue to harrass those who have not the slightest desires to become engineers or scientists or any of those workers for the preparation of whom mathematics really is a companion subject.—R. Business Depression In Chapel Hill

Indications are that business in general is in a pretty bad way in the village; one hears rumors every day to the effect that this or that firm is in bankruptcy and that the receivers have taken it over for operation. While we cannot credit every idle rumor that comes our way, we know from reliable sources that many of the Chapel Hill firms are in financial difficulties and some are faced with the prospect of bankruptcy in the near future unless business shows a decided pickup.

To understand the present economic situation, one must go back to 1920 when the University started its building program. At that time the student body was only about half of what it is now, and the business concerns were fewer. Since 1920 the payroll of the University for its building alone has been well over a half million each year. Many outsiders were demanded for labor on the buildings. In order to meet the demands, the merchants of the village expanded, and expanded without any thought of the future when the University might cut down its building program.

As a result, Chapel Hill is overstocked with goods. The artificial population is gone, and the demands of the present residents are not great enough to keep the stores busy. In some respects prices are higher here than in the larger cities, and consequently the students and townspeople buy many articles in Durham, Raleigh, Greensboro, and other nearby cities, thus cutting off a certain volume of business.

An important factor affecting student expenditure is the installation of a vitaphone in the Carolina theatre, and the raising of the admission charge from thirty to forty cents. As the vitaphone is more popular than the silent picture, more students attend each day. An increase of ten cents per admission means that for the entire year many thousands of dollars go to the theatre that would otherwise be spent by the students in other places.

Chapel Hill is intimately tied up with business conditions throughout the state, and the general depression being felt in the large cities and in the eastern section of the state especially is reflected here. One cannot blame any one factor or any person. Had the state continued the building program, then conditions would have been better. But had the merchants used foresight and not over expanded, then conditions would not be quite as bad as they are.

The Chapel Hill Police have arrested and will try a University student on charges of trafficing in that well known Orange County product. The Theatre Guild first produced it a few hundred years ago. Eva Le Gallienne played the leading role." The Cooleemee Journal carries an advertisement of the Mineola Tribe Number 30, I. U. R. Two Students Have Won Both Bingham And Wright Medals

For a number of years two memorial medals have been offered to students of the University for excellence in debate. The Bingham medal was awarded for the first time in 1899, being given by the late Colonel Bingham. The Mary D. Wright medal, which was begun by the late P. E. Wright and is now continued by the present P. E. Wright, was awarded for the first time a few years later.

Since the first time that they were awarded there has been considerable competition for these prizes. The Bingham medal goes to the best speaker of the annual commencement debate, while the Mary D. Wright medal goes to the better speaker of the winning team in the annual Di-Phi debate, which is held in December.

A survey of the records of these contests over a period of the last twelve years shows that only two men have won both medals, although a number have won one of them. M. M. Young of the class of 1926 and J. C. Williams of the present senior class have annexed both awards.

Tar Heels Double Score On Guilford Five 48-24

University Quint Has Little Trouble Defeating Quakers In Slow Contest.

STOUT IS HIGH SCORER

Guilford Star Gets 9 Points To Lead Heap; Harper And Hutchinson Lead Carolina Outfit; Ashmore Uses Many Substitutes.

Staging a rally in the latter stages of the game, the Tar Heel cagers last night defeated the Guilford College quintet 48-24. Stout, fast Guilford forward, was high scorer of the game with nine points to his credit. Harper and Hutchinson of Caroline tied for second place scoring honors with seven points each, while Dameron and Brown followed with six each.

The first half of the game was a rather dull affair with very little spectacular play and too frequent fouling by both teams. At the end of the half the Tar Heels held only a slight margin of nine points, the score being 21 to 12. Neiman and Edwards, Coach Ashmore's two rookie forwards, had difficulty in finding their shooting eye in this half.

In the second half the Tar Heels found themselves, and the scoring was more rapid than previously. This half, also, was marred by numerous fouls. During the latter part of the half until the end of the game, Ashmore sent in a steady flow of reserves.

For the Tar Heels the clever floor work and guarding of the veterans, Marpet and Brown, were outstanding. Harper and Hutchinson were also bulwarks of strength both on defense and offense.

The fast floor work and shooting of Stout, Alley and Chisholm marked the strong offensive play of the Quaker team.

The lineup and individual scores follow:

Carolina (48)		Guilford (24)
Neiman (4)	F.	Stout (9)
Edwards	F.	Alley (5)
Harper (7)	C.	Jameison (3)
Marpet (5)	G.	Yelverton (2)
Brown (6)	G.	Chisholm (4)

Substitutions: for Carolina, Slater (2), Dameron (6), Hutchinson (7), Crouch, Choate (5), Sher (3), Longest (1), Moore, Alexander, Farleigh, Cleland; for Guilford, Meadows, Cobb and Carsen.

Aycock Triumphs

Law School No. 2 was smothered yesterday by Aycock to the tune of 46 to 10. The Aycock team, led by their tall thin center, Flowers, romped away with all the honors. Flowers was the star of the hour, running up the amazing score of 23 points for Aycock. His shots were accurately placed, and he never made wild shots. His teammates ably supported him, and the teamwork shown was excellent. Hooks was another noticeable player, running up 9 points. Law School No. 2 were rather overshadowed, their only leader being right forward Sawers.

TAR BABIES WIN FIRST QUINT TILT

Many Combinations Aid In Rolling Up 73 - 16 Score Against Leaksville Y.

The Tar Baby basketeers successfully opened their 1930 campaign by crushing the Leaksville Y team by the overwhelming score of 73-16 in the Tin Can last night. The game, which was a preliminary to the Carolina-Guilford game, was devoid of thrills but the result pleased the Tar Heel supporters who jammed the Tin Can to its capacity.

In winning the game, Coach Enright used his entire squad of nineteen players, each combination working as well as the starting team.

The Tar Babies started off with a rush and were never headed, looping ten field goals before the visitors could garner a single tally. The half ended 35-9 in favor of Carolina. The freshmen kept up their high-power scoring attack in the second half and with the score 42-12 scored 26 points in rapid succession before Leaksville could find the basket for a single point.

There was no individual star, all the men playing well, but Beale, with 12 points, was high scorer. He was closely followed by Dunn with 9 tallies. For Leaksville, Freeman and Clark were the outstanding performers.

The lineup:

Carolina (73)		Leaksville (16)
Chandler (8)	r. f.	T. Clark
Dunn (9)	l. f.	O. Clark (5)
Hines (2)	c.	Freeman (5)
Henry (6)	r. g.	Reynolds
Lineberger (7)	l. g.	Hall

Substitutions: (Carolina) Hamlet (8), Grant (7), Newcombe, Peres, Royster (2), Walch (2), Beale (12, Ferebee, Moore, Barnett (2), Riggs (6), Connor (2), Davis, Markham; (Leaksville) Crouch (2), Carter, Gallimore (4), Warren, Burnett.

9 - 8 Score

Theta Kappa Nu fraternity defeated Chi Phi fraternity 9 to 8 in a closely contested game in the Tin Can yesterday afternoon. The outcome of the game was in doubt until the closing whistle. Chi Phi amassed a five-point lead at the opening of the second half, but Walck, a Kappa Nu in the closing minutes of the game, shot a foul and a field goal in succession to cut this lead down to one point. Jimmy Maus looped a goal in the last minute of play to put Theta Kappa Nu ahead. The game was characterized by close guarding by both teams, Crane for Theta Kappa Nu being the outstanding guard on the floor. Sutton, Branch and Slusser showed up well for Chi Phi.

Lineup:

Theta Kap. Nu (9)		Chi Phi (8)
Wyrick (2)	r. f.	Branch (2)
Maus (2)	l. f.	Sherfessee
Midget	c.	Sutton (4)
Crane	r. g.	Morris

Substitutions:

Theta Kappa Nu: Hunter, Southerly, Walch (3); Chi Phi: Scheidt.

FENCING DISEASE INVADES CAMPUS

Sport Is Being Seriously Introduced Into The South; Prominent In Northern Colleges Already.

A new fever is abroad on the campus and many students are succumbing to it. It is very contagious and once one touches a certain thing he has this consuming fever. That certain thing is a blade.

On entering a room in Old East a queer scene meets ones eyes. A small freshman, with a look of intent seriousness, is earnestly trying to duplicate the easy and graceful antics of his master. "On guard — Lunge — Parry Riporte — Remise —. Time and time again the prespiring yet elated aspirant persists. Blades clash and shine in the light. Arms go ont and in. And finally a movement is mastered.

Queer to relate, the freshmen are not the only ones who are hit by this disease, but serene juniors and solemn seniors fall prey to it.

The history of fencing wends its way from the days when knighthood was the vogue through valliant cavaliers and on to the courteous and dignified statesmen.

Fencing in European universities is not only the major sport but in some cases part of the regular curriculum. Bismark, the great German statesman, fought three duels required for graduation from Hiedleburg and then added 94 more duels on his own initiative.

The European boy from infancy plays with foils and while stroking the flashing blades, sees himself someday the valliant defendant of the honor of his chosen lady. The average American boy fondles boxing gloves or a football and sees himself in his fanciest dreams a Red Grange or a Jack Dempsey.

The larger American universities such as Harvard, Yale, Columbia and Princeton have long regarded fencing as a major sport. The most widely known man on the Columbia campus is not the charging football captain, but the graceful captain of fencing.

Many Northerners, at this institution for the first time, are astonished at the lack of fencing and regard it as a serious deficiency in the athletic department.

The University as in other beneficial activities is taking upon itself the leadership and is seriously introducing the sport in the South. It is expected that in the near future it will be adopted as an intra-mural sport. Plans are now on foot to start a girls' fencing team, and most important of all a varsity fencing team and club is already started.

H. H. Hendlin who has acted as coach for the past year and a half has offered his services to the University and is willing to instruct anyone sufficiently interested in the sport.

Fencing is being introduced here by The Beginners' Fencing Tournament in which a handsome pair of French foils will be awarded to the winner. This is being run off under the direction of Hendlin and is the first thing of its type in the South.

Entries are being received by the coach in 313 Old East between the hours of nine and eleven P. M.

Athletic Council Considering Plans For Building Gymnasium

Tentative Plans Call For Seating Capacity Of 4000 For New Structure.

NEW TRACK IS PLANNED

Would Be Erected Between Present Intramural Field And Tin Can.

Tentative plans for a new gymnasium, practice football and track field are under consideration of the athletic council at present, it was learned yesterday.

Dr. A. W. Hobbs of the mathematics department, who is chairman and faculty representative of the athletic council, submitted rough sketches to the coaches and other members of the council yesterday. These plans call for a new gymnasium together with a basketball court. This will contain a seating capacity of approximately 4000 people who witness the cage games. Wrestling and boxing and other indoor sports will also take place in the gym, which will be located between the intramural field and the Tin Can. Directly behind the proposed gym plans are being made for a practice football and track field.

The building of a new track and practice football field will take the track away from Emerson field, where it is at present, and will make more room for the varsity baseball team. The building of a diamond on each corner of Emerson field has also been thought of. This would prove an aid for infield practice, but only one game could be played on the field at one time.

The practice football field will improve the appearance of Kenan stadium. The football team has been practicing in the stadium, thereby hindering the growth of the grass. The new practice field will do away with that. The moving of the track field will help the baseball club. Many players have fallen down or misjudged fly balls or ground balls because of the track and jumping pits at Emerson field.

These plans, although tentative, are under careful consideration. They will meet the needs of the future, and will make the athletic department compact.

Trackmen Prepare For Milrose Meet

Indoor Meet Is Scheduled for Madison Square Garden on February 8.

Candidates for the varsity track team are working hard for the Milrose games at Madison Square Garden on February 8, and the first Southern Conference indoor games to be held here at the Tin Can on March 8. The event to which the men are pointing in the Milrose games is the mile relay. The most outstanding candidates for this team are Captain Nims, Garrett, Barkley and Gay, all letter men in track, and Farmer, Case and Weil of last year's freshman team.

A number of other men are working out for this event, but at this stage of the season are more or less unknown quantities. At least 30 members of the squad have been working out daily since practice started, and it is expected that those who have not yet begun practice will do so before the end of the week.

Practically the entire squad will be entered in the indoor meet, which consists of three divisions: the Southern Conference division, freshman division, and scholastic division, the latter including high schools and prep schools.

The events in the conference division are: 60-yard dash, 60-yard low hurdles, 60-yard high hurdles, 440-yard run, 880-yard run, mile run, two-mile run, mile relay, pole vault, high jump, broad jump, and shot put. The freshman events are: 60-yard dash, 60-yard low hurdles, 60-yard high hurdles, ¾-mile run, and mile relay. The scholastic events are: 60-yard dash, 60-yard low hurdles, 1000 yard run, mile relay, shot put, and high jump.

Winter Practice Begins Next Week

Winter football was at a standstill yesterday. Coach Collins, who will not be here at the Hill permanently until Thursday, has not disclosed all of his plans.

It is thought that the procedure will be the same as last year, with the picking of the teams coming the first of next week. Teams will be formed around such men as Captain-elect Strud Nash, Johnny Branch, Jimmy Magner, Rip Slusser and others of the "hundred backs," together with such linemen as Fenner, Hudson, Lipscomb and others.

Puny Harper and Bill Koenig will not appear in the winter session as well as several others who are taking part in other sports at present. Puny, the Pittsboro flash, is going like a house afire down at the Tin Can, while Big Bill Koenig is knocking 'em right and left for the boxing team.

Fencing Practice Begins

The University fencing team has started practice with especially fine prospects for a good season. Five of last year's team are back this year, and there are several new candidates for the open position. A great deal of enthusiasm is being shown by all, and it is hoped that fencing will be made a permanent sport at the University.

Although no matches with other colleges have as yet been scheduled, an attempt is being made to card several matches with outside opponents.

The five men returning from last year's team are Henlen, Fred and Digby Wardlaw, Nazareno and Estep. The outstanding contender for the vacant position position at present is Whedbee.

Brothers Star

Led by John Peacock, the Phi Delta Theta Intramural basketball team walked away from the scrappy Delta Sigma Phi five 33-20. From the opening whistle the game was a lively tussle between John and Tom Peacock, high scoring Phi Delt forwards and Raymer, the fast goal tosser of the Delta Sigma Phi team, with the tricky brothers winning out.

The outstanding star of the game was John Peacock, who was high scorer of the day with 20 points to his credit. Raymer and Reynolds showed up well for the losers, as did Merritt, who played an excellent floor game.

BANQUET TO BE GIVEN MONOGRAM CLUB TOMORROW

Members Freshman Football Team Invited; Governor Gardner To Speak.

BROGDEN ON PROGRAM

Invitations were received yesterday by members of the monogram club and numeral men of the freshman football squad for an informal dinner tomorrow night in honor of the coaching staff and the varsity football team. The banquet will be held in the ballroom of the Carolina Inn at 6 o'clock.

Completed plans for the speaking program include a tentative arrangement for Governor Max Gardner to head the list of speakers. Judge W. J. Brogden, who entertained the athletes last year with his witty remarks, will divide the program with Governor Gardner.

The purpose of the get-together aside from honoring the men connected with the successful football season, will be to "stimulate a larger athletic interest and to create a sense of personal responsibility for our athletic program."

Sharpe Leads Lawyers

The Law School basketball team No. 1 defeated Ruffin dormitory 21 to 10 in a game played in the Tin Can yesterday afternoon. The game was much closer than the score indicates, although the Law School had a decided edge on Ruffin. Sharpe, for the Law School, proved to be a veritable sharpshooter, scoring 14 of his team's points. Aycock and Johnson played good games for Ruffin.

The lineup:

VOLUME INSTEAD OF PROFITS IS POLICY MANAGER

Mrs. W. E. Troutman Has Succeeded Where Others Failed In Management Of Welcome In Cafeteria.

Where others failed and failed and failed, Mrs. W. E. Trotman made good.

That, perhaps, is the signal thing about the successful operation of the Welcome In Cafeteria, rounding out its third year as a unit of the Carolina eating system, with an interesting history behind it.

First opened in 1922, six different persons consecutively essayed to operate the place, and six in a row failed. With students from 1922 to 1927, the failure of the "cafeteria next the post office" became proverbial. Indeed, it came twice a year sometimes.

The cafeteria today serves between two and three hundred persons each meal and is one of the most popular of Carolina's eating places.

In the first place, she operates in connection with her cafeteria a 129-acre farm, just 20 minutes from Chapel Hill, on which she raises all her fresh vegetables, much of her meats and her chickens and eggs.

And in the second place, she insists that nothing but home-cooked food be served in her cafeteria. Ordinary mass production methods have been foregone. Everything is made within the cafeteria, under Mrs. Trotman's expert supervision, by home methods. And that includes all the pastry too, most of which, oddly enough, is made by a boy, trained by Mrs. Trotman for two years.

And in the third place, Mrs. Trotman always works self-help students wherever possible. There are 23 on the payroll now. There have always been from 21 to 32 whom Mrs. Trotman has helped to make their ways through school.

Prior to coming to Chapel Hill, for two years, she successfully operated a large boarding house adjacent to Duke University.

She is the wife of a Methodist minister, a member of the Conference for 22 years, and has lived and is widely known all over the state. Indeed, many of the boys who are now her patrons she knew as youngsters in knee pants in the different towns in which Mr. Trotman's work carried them.

Mr. Trotman is now retired and manages the farm, with his wife taking care of the management of the cafeteria.

Sigma Nu's Win

The aggressive Sigma Nu basketball outfit walked over the A. T. O. five 27-13 in a game that was filled with numerous fouls and even more wild shots. The Sigma Nu's took the lead from the start, and were never headed, the score standing 15-3 in their favor at the half.

Larry Johnson played an outstanding game for the winners, and was high man in the game with a total of 12 points, while the play of Erickson and Jones for the losers played well.

CABINETS HEAR TWO SPEAKERS

R. M. Brown Talks on Causes of Crime Wave; Rozzelle Speaks To Freshman Group.

Two speakers featured the programs for the Y cabinets last Monday night. Professor R. M. Brown of the sociology department spoke before the sophomore cabinet, while Rev. C. E. Rozzelle, pastor of the local Methodist church, addressed the freshman cabinet.

Professor Brown, speaking to the sophomore cabinet, gave an illustrated talk on "Crime of Today as Compared With Years Ago." He began his address by saying that we are at present in the way of an unprecedented crime wave. "This wave is said to be caused by two things: (1) a break-down in the family life and (2) a rapid change of laws." He read statistics, however, that showed that most of the crime was being committed by adults rather than those in the adolescent stages of life. Other statistics were read which proved that the negro crime wave was decreasing, while the white crime wave was very steadily increasing. When asked what caused these waves, Professor Brown stated, "I do not know whether these crime waves are caused from a period of more severe prosecution or whether they come as a result of the actual committing of crimes. While there is a steady decrease in some crimes, there is a decided increase in other crimes." Mr. Brown closed his talk by saying that the present crime statistics were very poor, and it would be hard to say how accurate they are.

Rev. Rozzelle's talk to the freshman cabinet was in the manner of a challenge to the youth of today to accept all the opportunities that were available. "Success," said he, "is not, as many think, making a great deal of money." Rev. Rozzelle quoted Borah in saying that we live in one of the greatest times in the history of his country. After his speech, the speaker conducted a forum, answering numerous questions asked him by the members of the cabinet.

The election of a new president pro-tem, necessitated by the failure of the regularly elected member to return to school this quarter, was deferred to a later meeting.

Before adjournment a message was received from the Philanthropic Assembly suggesting that the old custom of exchanging bills between the two societies be renewed.

signed, and four have been replaced by others, the last, because of incapacity to handle properly the agencies.

Commissions Yield Much

The dormitory agencies have not been set up in competition with local merchants. Their share of the money expended by students in Chapel Hill has been comparatively insignificant. The total receipts of the agencies for the fall quarter was $7,009.65. Of this amount, practically one-third was from commissions on clothes and shoes taken up for pressing clubs and shoe shops. The total profits for the amount taken in were $1,628.72. The average for the 13 agencies was $125.28, or $62.64 for each agent for the entire fall quarter. These figures were taken from the the weekly reports made by the agents to the buildings department as required. These statistics show that the dormitory agencies have not cut in materially on the volume of business done in Chapel Hill.

In order for one to become an agent for the winter quarter, he had to sign a written agreement with the buildings department stating hat he would assume certain obligations in operating his agency. The standard of selection has been shifted from that of pecuniary need altogether toward one of need and capability. If a man is not capable of managing one of these agencies, he will not be considered for the place, as things other than a job are at stake. The dormitory janitors are now responsible for cleaning out the Service Rooms. The agents are required to make regular financial reports to the buildings department. Dr. Nathan makes regular inspections and reports to the proper authorities. Inefficiency will not be tolerated by the buildings department, and we welcome any complaints from students. These complaints may come directly from the students themselves, or may be made to the dormitory presidents, who will report them to us.

Punch boards were prohibited by the buildings department under date of December 30, 1929. If any liquor or other intoxicating beverages are being sold in the agencies, the committee has no knowledge of the practice, but would like to have, if any one has any evidence that such is being done.

The original idea of the agencies was Service Rooms, not stores. These rooms are to eliminate noise, help conserve student time, prohibit canvassing and soliciting in dormitories, serve as an information bureau for visitors, and give the dormitory members a better place in which to live. They have made some steps in that direction. They will make further strides if properly managed and supervised.

it highly for the "sentiment attached to it."

The suspicion of a prank or practical joke was given up after Brown and Nat Coates had thoroughly searched the campus and immediate vicinity. The owner could offer no opinion concerning the manner of the disappearance, although he did venture that its notoriety might have caused it to be taken for the Smithsonian Institute.

Unfortunately (or fortunately, if the recent troubles of a fraternity are to be considered) the machine was not insured.

Commenting on the occurrence, Brown at first stated spiritedly that he only hoped the thief would suffer as much as he and his friends had. Then waxing into a more kindly mood, he wished that the offender be at least warned to carry at all times a good supply of chewing gum.

Philanthropic And Dialectic Societies To Sponsor Debate On Question Of Third Party

Secretary of League for Independent Political Action to Meet Prof. Woodhouse.

TO BE HELD IN FEBRUARY

H. Y. Williams to Expound Needs of Additional Party in United States; Lang and McPherson to Preside Over Debate.

H. Y. Williams, executive secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, will debate E. J. Woodhouse, professor of government in the University, on the night of February 5 on the need of a third political party in the United States. Williams will take the affirmative side of the question. The debate will be held under the joint auspices of the Phi and Di societies. John Lang, speaker of the Phi, and Garland McPherson, president of the Di, will preside.

Mr. Williams was born in San Francisco, attended school at the University of Minnesota and the Union Theological Seminary. He took graduate courses at the University of Iowa and Columbia University. While in college he worked intermittently as a miner in order to defray his expenses.

Finishing his work at the Seminary at the outbreak of the World War, he enlisted as a chaplain and served two years in France, first with the Tenth Engineers and then as a senior chaplain with thirty chaplains and 50,000 soldiers under his care. He was decorated by the French government and cited by General Pershing.

Following the war, Mr. Wil-

Lights In Library Found To Be Correct

According to a recent survey of lighting conditions in the University library made by Mr. J. S. Bennett, superintendent of the electric division of the Consolidated Service Plants, the illumination in the library is thoroughly adequate.

The survey was made at the request of library officials to insure proper lighting conditions for readers. It was found that at every seat used for steady reading adequate light was furnished.

"As a matter of fact," said Mr. Coney, assistant librarian, "we found in a few places that a good deal too much light was being furnished. Steps will be taken to reduce the illumination at these points to normal to prevent eye strain on the part of users of reading rooms."

G. W. HILL IS RE-ELECTED GEN. ALUMNI TREASURER

George Watts Hill of Durham, member of the graduating class of 1922, has recently been re-elected general treasurer of the alumni association. The election by the board of directors of the alumni association was transacted by balloting through the mail.

The re-elected treasurer has held his position since 1925, also being chairman of the finance committee of the association. As an alumnus he has retained the place of prominence and esteem on the campus which he held once as a student, winning wide recognition as one of the most active workers for the University among the graduates.

AUTHORS' READING FRIDAY EVENING

Eight Plays Will Be Read In Playmakers' Theatre; To Select Three.

The Carolina Playmakers will entertain with an author's reading of new plays Friday night at 7:30 in their theatre building. Five plays will be read and from these three will be selected for the next Playmaker production in March.

Try-outs for parts in the plays will be staged Monday at 4:30 and 7:30 at the theatre. The directors wish it definitely understood that all students intending to try out for a part in the productions must attend the reading Friday night. This request has been made due to the fact that there will not be sufficient time to provide manuscripts of the plays by means of which the students might familiarize themselves with the role.

The plays read Friday will be selected from the following list:

"Hollyhocks," a New England folk play by Joe Fox.

"The Same Old Girl," an Alabama society comedy by Fred Greer.

"The Maverick," a Dakota folk play by Irene Fussler.

"Death Valley Scotty," an Arizona folk play by Milton Wood.

"Student Third Cabin," a modern comedy by Robert Dawes.

"The Pack," a modern comedy by Nora Del Smith Gumble.

"The House of Grief," a fantasy by Margaret Howe.

"Bolshevicks," a college play by Hoke Webb.

Open Politics

With the talk of politics already in the air, and ambitious politicians industriously working on "frame-ups" and "machines," the Tar Heel is today presenting on its editorial page a plan for an open campaign in which the students will know what the various candidates stand for, what the constituency of each "machine" is, the latest gossip, and in general "what it is all about."

The Tar Heel plans to follow the developments in the campaign through its news columns and its editorials. A column of political gossip is being proposed; it will run at regular intervals until after the election in the spring. In it a number of political leaders will write their observations under the direction of the editor.

Through these mediums the Tar Heel hopes to stir up more interest in the campaign among the students, to help develop at least two strong "line-ups," and to keep the voters informed as to what is going on in political circles.

GERMAN CLUB TO ENTERTAIN WITH FEBRUARY DANCE

Art Sickles and Barron Grier to Lead Sets.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the German club Monday night, it was decided to have the annual mid-winter dances February 21 and 22. Bynum gymnasium was selected as the place for the dances.

At a regular meeting of the members of the club last November, Steve Millender was elected to lead at these dances. He will be assisted by Art Sickles and Barron Grier.

Plans for the dances are not complete as yet. Several well known orchestras are being considered, but no contracts have been signed. The manner of decorating the gym is also undecided.

The German club has only a limited number of memberships still open, and all applicants are urged to turn in their names immediately. Will Yarborough announces that tickets will be distributed for members early next month.

The officers of the German club are as follows: George Race, president; Julian Palmore, vice-president; Will Yarborough, secretary-treasurer, and Charles Waddell, chairman of the executive committee. The other members of this committee in addition to the officers already mentioned are: George Sanders, Travis Brown, Gordon Gray, William Dunn and Mayne Albright.

UNIVERSITY OFFERS COAST - COAST TOUR

During the coming summer eight weeks' transcontinental study tour will be conducted under the educational direction of the extension division, it was announced yesterday by R. M. Grumman, director. The tour will provide unusual opportunity for students and teachers to combine travel and college study under University auspices.

The party, which is to be divided in two sections, will travel in specially constructed motor cars, the first section leaving Chapel Hill on June 7, the second section on June 8. Traveling not more than 150 miles a day, with stops for class instruction, sightseeing, rest and recreation, the party will reach the Pacific coast the latter part of June, returning via the Yellowstone. Points of interest in the itinerary include: Carlsbad Caverns, New Mexico; Juarez, Mexico; the Grand Canyon; the Yosemite, the Yellowstone, Mammoth Hot Springs, and Zion National Park, with stops at the more important of the cities en route.

Under the supervision of the faculty committee on travel courses in America, courses granting college credit have been worked out suited to the needs of students interested. Courses offered in the first section will be confined to the natural sciences, i. e., geology, botany, and general science. Social science courses only will be offered in the second section, including sociology, economics and geography. Classes will meet daily, for three hours each morning before the motorcade begins travel. Field work and observation trips will be conducted as opportunities are af-

SEN. SIMMONS CONDEMNED BY PHI ASSEMBLY

Representatives Show Disapproval of Veteran Democrat By Margin of One Vote; Compared to Arnold and Judas.

A resolution to the effect that the executive committee of the Democratic party would be justified in reading Senator Simmons out of the Democratic party was passed by the Philanthropic Assembly at its regular weekly meeting Tuesday night. The discussion, in which Senator Simmons was called the Benedict Arnold and Judas Iscariot of his party, was very heated. The resolution passed by a majority of one vote. A recount was necessary in order to determine the decision of the Assembly. Representatives Carr, Speight, Yarborough, and Whittington spoke in favor of the resolution. The discussion against the resolution was led by Representatives Wilkerson, Baldwin, Ferguson, Montgomery, and Haywood.

Speaker Lang announced that the members of the Assembly would be seated according to the counties which they represented. The reading clerk directed the seating of the representatives. W. T. Crutchfield, D. C. McDuffie, and Harper Barnes were presented for membership and given the right to vote in the meetings. Representative Yarborough received the appointment of reporter-general.

The matter of requesting the Dialectic Senate to cooperate with the Assembly in jointly considering bills was put before the Assembly. The motion was passed and sent to the Dialectic Senate for action. A bill to name the date and subject of a joint session of the Phi and Di societies was tabled. Representative Montgomery was appointed floor manager to look after the seating arrangements. Representative Camden was asked by Speaker Lang to take charge of the valuables of the Assembly and to see that the hall was kept in order.

Speaker Lang announced to the Assembly that H. J. Williams, a nationally known lecturer, desired to appear before the student body and present the possibilities of a third party, and that the Assembly had been asked to become co-sponsor of the project with the Dialectic Senate. A motion that the Assembly assume half the obligations of such a speech was passed. Speaker Lang stated that the lecturer would debate Professor Woodhouse on the question of a third party on the night of February 5.

The speaker announced that the group picture of the Assembly would be taken at chapel period on Friday.

First Meeting of Newsmen Held Last Night in Gerrard Hall

WILL MEET THIS MORNING

Winder Harris To Conduct Discussion at Carolina Inn Ballroom; Advertising to Feature Afternoon Meeting.

America has passed through such great economic changes in the last ten years that the country has lost its perspective and must now find a new one, David Lawrence, noted newspaper correspondent and publisher, declared here last night in an address at the opening session of the sixth annual newspaper institute being held under the joint auspices of the North Carolina Press Association and the University.

Taking for his subject "The Trend of the Times," Lawrence reviewed the events of the last ten years leading to the present economic and political situation and made a few prophecies about the next decade to come.

"The economic emphasis is being felt in our life now as never before, particularly in our political life," asserted the speaker.

The last ten years since the war has witnessed a surplus of production, Mr. Lawrence said. Manufacturers have produced with little thought of the problems of distribution. Hence the next ten years must witness the process of distribution.

Mr. Lawrence, who is president of the Consolidated Press Association and publisher of the United States Daily, spoke in Gerrard hall and was heard by an audience of some five hun-

Saville Resigns

Professor Thorndike Saville of the school of engineering has resigned as chief engineer of the Division of Water Resources and Engineering of the State Department of Conservation and Development. In announcing his resignation, Mr. Saville said that restrictions of the budget bureau had made it impossible for his work to continue efficient operation.

Mr. Saville is regarded as one of the eminent authorities of the country in his field. Several years ago, at his suggestion, the division which he heads was established and he has been its director since that time.

Fred Sutton, member of the board from Kinston, introduced a resolution which was passed to increase by 50 per cent the salary of the chief engineer. He offered to pay the difference from his own pockets if departmental funds were not available. Director Harrelson spoke in high terms of the work of Mr. Saville and said that the salary was not a consideration in the resignation. The board has asked Mr. Saville to reconsider his resignation.

CHASE DESCRIBES METHOD OF STUDY

University President Tells Freshmen to Keep up in Work; Warns Against Distractions.

President Chase, in a chapel exercise address to the freshmen yesterday, described the difficulties that one experiences in studying. He grouped his remarks under four subjects: the proper timing of one's activities; proper study conditions; regular study; and seeking advice on difficulties.

Discussing the first point, Dr. Chase said there are always many distractions to draw one's attention from study. The proverbial good time, when one will have nothing else to do, never arrives. In view of this, he pointed out, it becomes necessary for the student to learn to divide his time in a way that will leave a sufficient part for study. According to the speaker, seemingly big difficulties are often merely matters of too much recreation and too little study.

As a splendid place to study when conditions in the dormitories and elsewhere are poor, Dr. Chase recommended the reading room in the library where an order of quietness is maintained at all times.

The University president put forward as the best method of study day by day work. He reminded the freshmen that it is the regular habit and not sudden spurts that counts. "Don't let an army of ignorance get be-

The Campus Political Pot Begins to Simmer

"Undergraduate politics" does not exist here; "fraternity politics" is the only accurate term for describing the activities of the campus political machines. Already the machines have started functioning, and two strong fraternity lineups have been formed.

The methods employed in selecting the candidates for offices in extra-curricular activities here are unsportsmanlike and underhanded. During the three and a half years of our undergraduate career we have witnessed countless examples of mediocre men securing election over far more capable candidates; practically every activity is headed by a fraternity man, and he nearly always will permit no ethical consideration to interfere with his desire to see his frat brothers or other frat men gain the offices they seek. Non-fraternity men have very little chance in politics here. During the campaigns they are back-slapped and flattered, made to feel an inflated sense of their own importance, but as soon as their votes for frat candidates have been secured the political bosses forget them entirely. As far as receiving an equal chance for office with fraternity men of commensurate ability—the campus political leaders would receive such suggestions from non-frat men with pitying smiles.

Very infrequently a non-fraternity man is so industrious or capable that the politicians cannot afford to ignore him; but such men are gobbled up promptly by fraternities, in most cases, as soon as they distinguish themselves in extra-curricular activities. The fraternities themselves often keep capable men within their own ranks from office for the sake of political expediency. If Mu Mu has a not particularly strong candidate for the student body presidency and an especially strong candidate for the editorship of the Magazine, it is very likely that the Mu Mu brethren will form a compact with the machine to withdraw their Magazine candidate if the organization support is swung to the prospective student body president. The latter office will bring far more prestige to the chapter; who will consider mere qualifications when the prestige of "the lodge" is at stake? Thus many capable candidates are eliminated in favor of far more unworthy men.

There can be little question that student politics are rotten here. There seems to be no effectual means of destroying fraternity control of activities and abolishing fraternity politics. As long as you have fraternities you will have political machines, in all probability. The evils of frat machine control of undergraduate extra-curricular activities are all too apparent; but there is at least one means of minimizing these evils. It may be accomplished by the creation of two or more powerful machines. For the past two years student elections here have been little more than mockeries; the candidates were selected months in advance and a single strong frame-up combination formed with such skill that it was almost impossible for adequate opposition to develop. All the influential fraternities were placated with one or two offices, and they were afraid to enter into combinations against the one powerful frame-up. As a result only one candidate appeared for each of the important offices, and they were unanimously elected.

But evidences have already appeared this year of two combinations. The Tar Heel is anxious to stimulate the formation of at least two strong machines, for the chances of the best men for the offices being elected are thus multiplied.

Efforts will be made through the editorial columns of the Daily Tar Heel to reveal the constituency of the combinations and to record the events which occur in connection with the campaigns. Candidates will be given opportunities to make statements regarding their opinions upon problems now in existence, and an effort will be made to give the campus some idea of their qualifications in a fair, unprejudiced manner. We intend to run a column of "Political Gossip" as least once a week after the campaigns get in full swing. The identities of the individuals who contribute to this column will be known to no one with the exception of the editor, under whose direction they will work. Everything within our power will be done to open up politics here this spring.

Our Faculty

Although the recognition accorded to any college or university is heavily dependent upon the quality of its student body, the ultimate and final classification of such an institution is determined by the caliber of its faculty. It is a marked tribute to the quality of the faculty of the University of North Carolina that other institutions of the highest rank throughout the United States are constantly making attractive bids for its members. The school of our choice is being forced to compete with the best universities of the country in gathering and retaining its teaching force.

Such is the big problem which confronts the University. Such is the situation which the board of trustees must be made to recognize. The best colleges keep ever before them the desire to employ the greatest scholars and teachers of the country. If this institution is to prosecute a program during the next decade commensurate with the progressive strides which it has made in the course of the past decade, then it must retain the fine teachers which it now has and, in addition, enter the competition for additional ones.

As evidence that there is a great demand for able teachers at present, suffice it to say that scarcely a month passes that some member of our faculty is not offered a position elsewhere that carries with it a bigger salary and more luring inducements than he is now receiving at Chapel Hill. Many have remained here at great financial sacrifice, largely because of their faith in the future of the state and their loyalty to the University itself. But others have found offers of large salaries too tempting to be denied and have withdrawn from our teaching force. In their going the University has suffered a serious loss which can be remedied, but which has left its imprint indelibly stamped.

We do not have to go far to find all manner of evidence that the University of North Carolina is being forced to engage in nation-wide and ceaseless competition for its teachers. This fact rightly brings pride to the hearts of the student body, but it is a fact which North Carolina lawmakers have given only casual consideration when asked to give the University funds adequate to the maintenance of the present high standards of its teaching force. Although some members of our faculty will remain here because of loyalty to the state and the institution itself, there are many others who are not so disposed. The lure of big salaries is universal in its application, and rightly so.

The writer feels that the people of the state need to be made fully aware of the situation, of the great competition for good teachers, and the relation which their own university bears to this competitive influence. Without adequatae funds many difficulties in this connection are insurmountable.—J. C. W.

In the Case of Memorial Hall Let's Have Major Operation

The question in the minds of the executive committee of the University Trustees being decision on attempting to remodel the presently unsafe Memorial hall at Chapel Hill or to demolish it and erect in its place an auditorium capable of seating 2,500 people, it is hoped that the latter course will prove the sense of the meeting.

It has never been quite clear in the light of University history why Memorial hall was built in the first instance. Surely the institution itself, which at that time was paying its handful of professors $150 a month, could have put the money it cost to far better use. In addition, the pile was a bit of freak architecture (we believe it held some sort of a record as to the span of a wooden arch or some such matter) utterly out of keeping with the character of the other buildings on the campus. For years it was used only semi-occasionally, generally for oratory, and for years on years its acoustics were such that the most lamblike speaker resounded like the Bull of Bashan. Of late years much money has been spent in the partially successful effort to cure this defect and it has been used more frequently, and with the growth of the student body has filled a need as a place of assembly.

But to repair Memorial hall in this day would probably cost twice as much or more than was originally expended in its erection. No remodeling or repair could serve to fit it into the scheme of University architecture, which on the whole is harmonious and related. There must be an auditorium at the University, but it will come at a price if it is attempted to provide it in the outre pile that still squats grotesquely to put out the eye of better conceived surroundings.—Raleigh Times.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Hardee Chambliss is Carolina's most recent blood-offering to Gotham. He left for the North shortly after finishing his course in the school of education last quarter. Now he and Joe Mitchell, his former campus buddie, are rooming together in New York. Both of these boys are in the writing game, and Joe has for several months been with the World. Both were considered good writers and good students on the campus, and perhaps they may in New York equal the pace set by Tom Wolfe, the Asheville boy who has attained a degree of literary fame and fortune in the metropolis since graduating from Carolina several years ago.

Such things are expected of Carolina. Somehow she has gotten the reputation of being the literary drum major of southern schools, so everyone naturally looks to her to turn out some sort of an artist once in a while. As the home of the Carolina Playmakers she continues to send to New York an annual contingent of young players. Last year's quota, preceded by Shep Strudwick, consisted of Helen Dortch, Al Kahn and Penn Harrison, all of whom, according to latest reports, are at least still acting somewhere in the city.

Likewise, as the resting place of the remains of the mother chapter of Sigma Upsilon, national literary fraternity, she should continue to produce a writer now and then. Or should she?

The January issue of Forum features a debate on the ABC's of culture between Will Durant and Howard Mumford Jones, and we see our campus l'uomo universale in a new role. Critics say that Professor Jones outpoints his illustrious opponent. At any rate the name 'debater' may be safely added to our list of the Professor's accomplishments, which goes something like this — author, poet, teacher, actor, skilled horseman, and painter. We'll affirm Mr. Jones' proficiency in any of these pursuits except painting, and it may be that he is considered good in that. We are only judging by a canvas we once saw on his easel as he was painting out at Piney Prospect one fine afternoon.

It has been truly said that no man is happy without some delusion. And out comes John Mebane's column in the Daily Tar Heel with a doctrine which does its best to wreck our last delusion. But the damage wasn't irreparable until we picked up a copy of the October Vanity Fair and read Harold Nicolson's article, "Where Women Make a Mistake," which is "an attempt by an English author to account for the growing dislike of women the civilized world over."

Mr. Nicolson starts off: "I have frequently been puzzled to account for the almost universal dislike with which women are regarded. There are moments, of course, in the life-story of any man, when his justifiable aversion from this section of the human race has given way to phases of sympathy, phases almost of attraction, phases of what, I believe, is called "being in love.' Such moments are not of long duration. They are his weaker moments; they do not last."

The author continues with a torrent of very logical condemnation of women that would make the most ardent wooer pause and refresh himself. All of which may be interesting and enlightening, but we'll bet John doesn't run for office again this spring.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Howard Mumford Jones

(By Frank J. Manheim)

Editor's note: This thumbnail sketch is the first of a series of minute biographies of prominent men of the University.

HOWARD MUMFORD JONES. Shortly after his birth on April 16th, 1892, his family picked "Howard" from a pile of names in a hat. Out of respect for Mrs. Frank Jones' best friend and neighbor, Howard was given the neighbor's name, Mumford, as his second appellation. He has always been called Howard. Although born in Michigan, he went to school in Wisconsin. An excellent debater, he won a medal for his ability in this field at the University of Wisconsin. He's still proud of it but his wife hides it from him.

He has traveled all over the United States . . . and hopes to "do" Europe. At Wisconsin, he became an excellent typist because of his secretarial work for Hamlin Garland. He may deny it, but he was a reporter. At the University of Texas, he succeeded Stark Young as professor.

As a boy, he was greatly interested in military campaigns and even today he can talk and talk for hours on end about campaigns and plans of action of wars long forgotten. This old interest has caused him to be vitally interested in biographies of historical figures and books pertaining to politics. Because of his column the Literary Lantern, which is published in most of the important newspapers in the south, he receives a great many books. He retains few of them . . . he is building up a library of southern literature . . . he would rather read in bed than in any other position.

When he writes, he writes quickly . . . his recent Forum-esque debate with Will Durant was written in a few hours . . . telephones, solicitors, visitors, go unanswered when he is busy. Between 12 midnight and three in the morning are his favorite hours for literary work.

He chose red for the color of his library . . . but likes blue shirts. He detests dressing and would gladly evade shaving, if possible. He never chooses the clothes he buys . . . if he had his way, he would wear only a cap but the Law says nay . . . he's pretty much of a gentleman when it comes to food, accepting everything his wife prepares. Cookies are his favorite delicacy and Mrs. Addison Hibbard makes the kind he likes.

He likes acting. He has written several plays and at Texas U. he was director of the Curtain Club, similar to our Playmakers . . . attends the theatre when he has the opportunity.

Talking before women clubs, outlines, personal photographs, athletics and Henry James are among the things he doesn't like.

Give him a corn-cob pipe, a round of bridge, entertaining guests, and he is happy.

Although driving for only 2½ years, he is an excellent driver and likes it . . . he is also a good furnace-man, his only household duty, and in Vermont, he showed his prowess as a carpenter by building the northern Chez Jones. He likes the temperature to be cooler than does Mrs. J.

He listens sympathetically and will accept Chesterfield cigarettes if offered him—or any other brand. He thinks Ellen Glasgow just swell.

Although he obtained his M. A. degree in the translation of Heine's North Sea from the German, he'd rather read French and Italian . . . he had only one lesson in Italian, the rest he learned by himself. He translated the opera, "For Love of Three Kings," into beautiful verse from the Italian and has been asked to do more.

A reputation has been earned by him of being a constant worker . . . he doesn't work constantly, but when he does, he allows nothing to interrupt him. Plays, poems, outlines, translations, numerous magazine articles are the things that have kept him busy in the past. No great cause numbers him as among its workers. Liberal, pacifist, he is tolerant of all things . . . except students who do slovenly work, or none at all. At one time, he parted his hair on the side but now—call it a pompadour. There is a picture of him extant which portrays him as a young boy, angelic and holy in the radiant sweetness that shines from his face. He is a brother of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Delta Chi, Delta Sigma Rho, Pi Kappa Alpha.

SHOPLIFTING IN CHAPEL HILL

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Since my arrival in Chapel Hill, it has greatly surprised me to find in certain stores so much of that petty offense termed shoplifting. Over the entire country this is remarkably prevalent; here it seems to me, for the size of the city, to be unusually so. I do not believe that I am more keensighted than most people, but time and time again I have observed young men and even boys nonchalantly taking possession of notebooks, magazines, or cigarettes, candy, and presumably any other useful articles which may be obtainable. Many merchants have wisely attempted to curb the practice by better arrangement of goods, mirrors, and by employing more clerks. In time stores may lose a great deal of property, and I should like to call it to the attention of all local merchants.

Strong Washington And Lee Five Invades Tin Can Tonight

Generals Have One of Strongest Outfits in South; All Veterans.

JOHNNY GREENE TO PLAY

Ashmore Will Likely Shift Forwards in Effort to Put Scoring Outfit on Floor; Williams-Harper Battle Expected.

Last night the Washington and Lee basketball team defeated Duke's Blue Devils 33-29 on Duke's court in the first game of the Generals' invasion of North Carolina. Williams, elongated center, led the visitors' attack and completely outplayed Croson, Duke star. Councillor starred for the losers.

Tonight the Generals play Carolina in the Tin Can at 8:30.

The Tar Heel cage team will make its Southern Conference debut against Washington and Lee at 8 o'clock tonight in the Tin Can. The Generals, with a team of veterans, take the court as favorites.

For the first time in a number of years, the Tar Heels, holders of the conference title four times and the state title seven times in the last eight seasons, are ranked lower than some of the other contenders for conference honors. This is in large part due to loss of players by graduation, and Coach Ashmore is having some difficulty in getting together a smooth-working outfit.

The Generals, with their offense built up around Williams, lanky football end and four-letter man, have made an impressive showing against non-conference opponents and are rated one of the strongest aggregations in the south.

As a preliminary to the varsity game the freshmen will take on the Oak Ridge quintet. This will be the second test for the Tar Babies, who showed considerable scoring strength in defeating Leaksville "Y" here Tuesday night by 73 to 16.

The Tar Heels will go into the contest tonight minus the services of their veteran guard Billie Brown, who was forced to leave school yesterday because of the untimely death of his father. He comes from Greenville, N. C.

The regular five journeyed to Durham last night to witness the contest between the Washington and Lee Generals and the Duke Blue Devils.

Local Highs Swamp Pittsboro 50 - 16

Chapel Hill high school defeated the Pittsboro cagers here Tuesday night 50 to 16. Prouty, with 22 points, led the offensive work of the local youngsters, and the consistent work of Captain Williams and Reynolds at guards kept the opponents' score down. This was the second time the Chapel Hillians have triumphed over the Pittsboro outfit, having won 32-30 shortly before the Christmas holidays.

The next game for Chapel Hill will be with Alexander Wilson high at Graham tomorrow, and the next home contest will be with Mebane January 31.

Lineup and summary:

Chapel Hill (50)		Pittsboro (16)
Prouty (22)	r. f.	Griffin (12)
Council (10)	l. f.	Harmon (1)
Lawrence (12)	c.	London

Schedule Changes

Several important changes have been announced in the varsity basketball schedule by Graduate Manager Woollen. The places for the home and home games with Wake Forest have been shifted to avoid conflict with a State College game in Raleigh. Under the new arrangement, Carolina will meet the Baptists in Raleigh on January 25 and the second game will be played here on February 18.

Washington and Lee will be met in a second game on February 18, replacing V. M. I. on the schedule. The game will be played in Lexington. The game scheduled for February 12 with Loyola of Chicago has been cancelled as Loyola will be unable to make the long southern trip this year.

S. A. E. Wins Over Fast Chi Psi Team

The S. A. E. quint won their first intramural basketball game of the 1930 season by drubbing the fast Chi Psi five 24 to 12 in the local Tin Can. The game was invested with many thrills, and the winners were not to be chosen until late in the last quarter. Both teams committed many fouls, and played both good and bad ball.

The outstanding star of the game was Rhett, shifty S. A. E. forward, whose floor work was unexcelled and whose shooting eye was in fine shape. Rhett was high man of the game with 9 points, while Campbell, Chi Psi forward, was second with 8.

In another game scheduled for the afternoon, Zeta Beta Tau forfeited the Phi Kappa Sigma quintet. Carr dormitory also forfeited to Old East.

Lineup:

Chi Psi (12)	G	F	T

Greene Eligible

Johnny Greene, star freshman forward of last year, was added to the Tar Heel varsity squad yesterday when a telegram from Southern Conference officials confirmed his eligibility.

Greene was a student all last year but was away during the fall. University athletic officials were not positive whether this lapse in residence affected his eligibility, and took the matter up with Conference officials.

Greene was rated a fine prospect as a freshman, and in the light of the Tar Heels' lack of forward material, his return is expected to help considerably. He reported for practice yesterday and looked to be in shape.

Greene was a member also of the Tar Baby football and baseball clubs last year, and is rated a good varsity quarterback prospect. He is from Oak Park, Ill., home of Chuck Collins, head Tar Heel football coach, whom he followed south.

Choate at Forward

Another shift is in order in the Tar Heel basketball camp in the line of Coach Jim Ashmore's search for forwards. Page Choate, rookie guard, who has shown such fine and aggressive floorwork all season, is being given a try at forward.

AYCOCK DEFEATS OLD WEST 27 - 9

Aycock dormitory continued its winning streak by defeating Old West 27 to 9 in the Tin Can yesterday afternoon. The same team that overwhelmed Law School No. 2 Tuesday afternoon by the score of 46 to 10 had an easy time winning from the Old West outfit. They were again led by Flowers, lanky forward, who scored 11 points, bringing his total for two games to 34 points. He was given good support by his teammates, Wall and Hooks showing up especially well. Hinton and Valk, a substitute, were outstanding for Old West.

Summary:

Aycock	pos.	Old West
Sherrill	l. f.	Wells
Flowers (11)	l. f.	Delinger (1)
Wall (8)	c.	Hinton (4)

"J" (Lewis) dormitory forfeited to Mangum dormitory the basketball game scheduled to be played yesterday afternoon at five o'clock in the Tin Can.

Question Marks Lose

Tuesday Manly defeated the Question Marks, an unknown team, by a score of 25 to 20. Center Barnwell led the Manly team with the high total of five goals. He was backed up by left forward, Ball, and left guard Stuart. The game was fast and slightly rough, but no one was forced to leave the floor. The Question Marks did not seem to have any leader.

Says Us

by B. R.

Things are getting rather exciting over around the Capital City, with the advent of hockey at Meredith. The denominational sisters of the Wake Forest Deacons expressed their approval of the debut of this sport with whoops and whoopees. The Lord knows that when it comes to the hows and whats of hockey we of the press don't know a "C.F." or a "G.G." from an "R.H." We think they are positions on the eleven—or is it a twelve or thirteen?

Since we've started it, let's see what the Twig, the female Baptist journalistic attempt, says about ye ancient and honourable game of hockey. Under the head, "Tie Between Teams in Spirited Hockey Game," the Twig (Jan. 9) says: "Among many cheers and yells the first hockey game at Meredith was played Saturday, the 14th of December. . . . The game started promptly at two, Miss Anderson, of Meredith, was referee and Miss Anderson, of the State Institution for the Blind, (we wonder if the two institutions are co-incidental) was umpire. The game started by the bully between Gore and Blanton. Then the mad race for the goal began. . . . It was the most exciting game during the history of our present student body, and a fine spirit was shown by both of the teams and the opposing onlookers. Faculty as well as students enthusiastically cheered the players. . . . Three cheers for better and bigger hockey games at Meredith." And more so-and-so.

Speaking of revival of old games and sports, how about that ancient Aztec game termed "tlaihiyotentle"? This is being revived under the name of "jai alai," or "pelota," as it is sometimes called, and is designated by sports authorities as "the fastest game in the world." If it is as difficult to play as it is to pronounce, that leaves us out. We'll take our recreation in a good old American sport that is spelled with letters following each other in normal sequence, and not too many at once—something we can understand without a comprehensive study of Aztec and Basque etymology.

According to Marjory Belisch in the New York Evening Post, Cortez took this Aztec pastime to Spain as "juego de pelota" and there it became the special property of the Basques. Having converted Habana to the skill and thrill of its play in this hemisphere, this game—"jai alai," we'll call it for consistency—has moved on to Florida and Chicago, and is expected to make its debut in New York at the Madison Square Garden soon.

One single fact furnishes a perfect idea of its popularity in Cuba. From the moment the players enter the court until intermission, the bars, housed in the lobby beneath the same roof, are totally empty of both Americans and Cubans. Nuff said. The right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" becomes for the American outside the border, in the words of Charley the Cockney: "life, liquor, and the purse full of ha' pennies."

The game is played on a large court which has walls forty feet high on three sides of it: one side opposite the audience, one wall at the left (the rear wall), and one at the right (the front wall, or fronton). The rackets used are called "cestas." They are long curved, basket-like contraptions, similar to Chinese finger nails grown into the hollowed shape of small canoes, and are strapped to the players' wrists. The ball is caught by them and with the same movement hurled against the front wall. If the opposing team fails to catch it on the rebound and volley it again to the wall, a point is scored against it. A team wins when the other side misses or sends the ball out of bounds thirty times." Sounds to us like a combination of volley ball, squash, lawn tennis and ping-pong, with a heathen name, played by Indians, Basques, sleek Cubans and other non-United Staters, and press-agented by a lousy set of typewriter pushers with nothing on their mind except to get off a few columns of copy.

Frosh to Meet Oak Ridge Five Tonight

With the Leaksville Y game under their belt, the Tar Baby basketeers yesterday resumed practice in preparation for the contest with Oak Ridge Military Academy tonight at 7 o'clock in the Tin Can. The game will be a preliminary to the Carolina-Washington and Lee struggle, which will go on at 8:30.

Last year the Tar Babies defeated the Cadets by a few points, but Oak Ridge annually turns out one of the strongest prep school quintets in the state. Two former Oak Ridge stars now sport the Blue and White of Carolina and the struggle between former teammates should be very interesting.

In defeating the Leaksville aggregation, the Tar Babies used several formations, each working to advantage, but against the fast cadet team the plays may not work so well. The Tar Babies are fast rounding into mid-season form and another few days' practice will have the boys on edge for the hard campaign.

The starting lineup as announced by Coach Enright will be: Chandler and Dunn, forwards; Henry and Lineberger, guards; and Beale, center. The only change from the lineup that started the Leaksville game will be Beale at the center post instead of Hines. Beale replaced Hines in that game and played heads-up basketball, and in addition was high scorer of the evening with 12 points.

No Wrestling Meet Assigned for This Week

Coach Quinlan has announced that there will be no wrestling meet Saturday, due to the fact that dates with neither Clemson College nor Concord Y. M. C. A. could be arranged. This leaves the Tar Heel-Navy meet at Annapolis as first on the Carolina schedule.

Varsity tryouts for the meet will be held Tuesday, January 21. Some keen competition is expected, and the bouts should be good. The date for the freshman tryouts has not been set yet, but may be held this week.

Co-Eds Lose Again

Coach Farris' co-ed sextet met defeat at the hands of the Greensboro high lassies to the tune of 36 to 23 in Caldwell gym Tuesday night. This was the second game of the season for the co-eds, they having lost to Chapel Hill last week.

Fouls were numerous, and at the end of the game only two of the original Tar Heelettes, Curry and Way, were left in the game.

Cram and McCollum starred for the victors while Way and Thacker were outstanding for the co-eds.

Both Thacker and Douglas are old Greensboro players. Greensboro will be met in a return game in Chapel Hill January 31.

The lineup:

Co-eds		Greensboro
Thacker (8)	f.	McCollum (12)
Johnson	f.	Butler (9)
Way (13)	c.	Cram (15)
Currie	g.	Hay
Hill	g.	Tye
Douglas (2)	g.	Byrd

The University of Washington, Seattle. Edmond S. Meany, its "grand old man," and keeper of traditions, graduated with the first class, nearly 50 years ago. Then a fiery red head. Now his hair, mustache and beard are perfectly white, perhaps because he has been an instructor there ever since. His record of never having flunked a student in his history courses stands perhaps unparalleled. He never forgets a name, and stands at the head of the receiving line at Homecoming.

The University of Oregon: Eugene. A millrace, like the Grand Canal of Venice, parallels the campus with its calm water. The waterway is old, and trees overhang it. Fraternity houses front upon it. Canoes line its banks, and when there is moonlight and romance . . . . the millrace carries many a freshman who can thank the millrace for romantic evenings of another and older college two decades in the distance.

Leland Stanford, Jr., University, Palo Alto. When Hoover was a freshman, and Lyman D. Wilbur was a freshman, Hoover had bids, but Wilbur had none. So both, inseparable friends that they were, remained "barbs." A few years ago Wilbur, then university president, decreed that "No fraternity . . . may either build or alter or make additions to its building." The University owns the West's finest college dormitories, and rents the rooms in them much more cheaply than fraternities can.

STATE U. D. C. TO OFFER HIGHWAY CHANGES TO N. C.

Fifteen Hundred Dollars Worth Of Improvement on Jefferson Davis Highway.

Friday, at 2:30 o'clock, by the large marker on the Jefferson Davis highway near the Virginia state line, the Jefferson Davis Highway Commission of the North Carolina United Daughters of the Confederacy will formally present the state highway commission with $1500 worth of improvements and beautifications that the organization has recently made on the North Carolina section of the transcontinental highway. Mrs. J. H. Anderson of Chapel Hill, state director of the committee, will have charge of the program.

The investment of this money is represented in the planting of shrubbery around the granite markers that the Daughters of the Confederacy placed along the highway some years ago. While the last thing that will be planted along the highway will be slips of walnut trees, grown from seeds that come from Mt. Vernon and Arlington—deemed very appropriate since they are to be placed along the route dedicated to still another southern hero.

Mrs. Anderson will present the markers and beautifications to the care of the state highway commission, represented by R. A. Doughton, of the state department of revenue. Mr. Doughton will accept on behalf of the commission, of which he was formerly the head. D. M. Read of Durham, district engineer of the commission, and state forester J. M. Holmes of Raleigh will also attend the ceremony.

The Oxford chapter of the U. D. C., being the nearest to the place of the program, will be present in a body. A group of Oxford school children will also attend, to sing a group of old southern songs. Acting as a guard of honor on the occasion will be the Oxford Boy Scouts.

Mrs. Anderson has called attention to the fact that there are two markers on the highway through Chapel Hill. As the head of the committee, she has requested the cooperation of students and townspeople in maintaining the beauty of the shrubbery around these two markers.

Dr. Bell To Address Debate Club Tonight

The debate squad will meet tonight at 7:30 in 201 Murphey hall. Dr. J. M. Bell of the department of Chemistry will speak on the question of modern science and its relation to theistic faith.

The meeting tonight will mark the beginning of the squad's work preliminary to the coming debates with Emory and Georgia Tech, both of which will be held late in February. The query which will be used in these encounters is "Resolved, that modern science tends to destroy theistic faith."

THE ROMANCE LANGUAGE BULLETIN IS POPULAR

Much interest has been manifested in the miniature newspaper, The Romance Language Bulletin, published by the romance language department of the University for teachers all over the state, and for students of French and Spanish.

The bulletin is issued four times during the school year, and is mailed out to names on a large mailing list. Professor N. B. Adams is now editing the bulletin in the absence of Professor Leavitt, who is in Spain.

England is rounding-up shoplifters.

Philology Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Philological Club tonight at seven-thirty o'clock in the graduate building. Mr. George Stevens will speak on "The Author and His Relation to the Publisher."

Carolina Theatre Has Modern Safety Devices For Fires

As a direct result of the disastrous fire at the Glen Theatre, Paisley, Scotland, during a New Year's performance for children, interest has been widespread. An investigation of the fire prevention aquipment of the Carolina Theatre shows that the local motion picture house is prepared with the most modern and complete devices for the prevention of fire.

A reporter for the Tar Heel was told by Manager E. Carrington Smith that the building is completely fire-proofed and protected. A tour of the theatre building revealed some interesting devices for the fighting of a possible blaze, and numerous methods of prevention.

The chief hazard in any theatre is the projection room, where ninety per cent of theatre fires are started by burning film. The projection booth of the Carolina Theatre is built entirely of fireproof material, and is equipped with sheet metal safety doors. If a section of film should catch fire, automatic sheet iron shutters drop and cut off the booth from the auditorium.

The projection booth is also equipped with large fans which effectually prevent smoke from getting into the auditorium. Regular type fire extinguishers to put out ordinary small blazes are kept in the booth, as well as special equipment to take care of fire in the electric machinery which cannot be handled with ordinary extinguishers.

Regular fire drills are held for the staff members of the theatre. Each man has his place and is equipped with his own hand extinguisher. The two back doors are opened as soon as fire is discovered, and one employ has charge of seeing that all children in the audience are ushered to the doors at once in orderly fashion.

Since the house itself is built throughout of fireproof material, there is little danger of its catching fire. The aisles are five inches wider than is prescribed by law, and the two large exits in the rear of the theatre make it easy to entirely empty the theatre within a few minutes.

Upon taking over the Carolina, Manager Smith enforced strict rules against smoking, in accordance with the fire underwriter's rules. As a result, the theatre is in no danger from smokers, as were the audiences at the old Pickwick, where smoking in the audience was more or less general, in spite of a rule against it. At times the Pickwick looked like the open mouth of a furnace when seen from the front of the house. The old days are passing, but in their place has come safety.

Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure the safety of the audiences in the theatre. With the most modern fire-fighting equipment and protective devices installed throughout, the theatre ranks high in the matter of safety among the moving picture houses of the country. Students and townspeople in Chapel Hill can rest assured that no disastrous fires, such as the recent one in Scotland, can possibly take place here.

In 1920, the illiterate of all races in the United States numbered 4,932,905.

Recorder's Court

The fight was short and terrible when Thomas Atwater and Robert Lee Snipes, both 12 years old and colored, met near the Carolina theatre. A large crowd had gathered to watch the battle when Police Chief L. B. Lloyd arrived on the scene.

Yanking the boys apart, he said, sternly: "I'll take your names and you may post bail at the police station. How much money have you?"

"Ah ain't got but two cents, boss," said one of the lads, beginning to cry. The other, being fully broke, was already weeping.

"You boys come to court Monday morning and we'll see whether you ought to go to jail. . . . Now go home," said the chief. Although the policeman doubts if his prisoners will appear before the bar of justice, he is confident they will fight no more—at least, not in public.

Walter Lloyd of Carrboro posted bail Tuesday afternoon to insure his appearance at recorder's court next Monday. He was charged with speeding 35 miles per hour on Franklin street.

E. W. Graves of Greensboro thought Tuesday that he was still in the country, and drove down Franklin street in Chapel Hill at 40 miles per hour, it is said. He will be tried Monday.

University Offers Coast - Coast Tour

Subjects of study will be considered chiefly at such time as can best be illustrated by the region through which the party is passing. In the natural science courses areas will be investigated and plants studied as the caravan moves across the changing country. In the social sciences emphasis will be upon the regional and institutional aspects of modern social problems, with special studies of the rural and urban districts visited. Sufficient time will be allowed to visit points of interest en route, so that possibility will be given the student for first-hand study of conditions in a continually changing laboratory. All of the instructors on the tour are members of the faculty of the University, and the courses offered carry college credit.

Under the educational direction of the University extension division, European study tours have been successfully conducted for the past three years. A residential tour to France during the summer of 1930 will be its fourth annual continental tour. This is the first American study tour which it has sponsored. The Blanks Travel Bureau of Charlotte is in charge of the business management of the tour.

hind you," he cautioned. "Do your work day by day."

A both foolish and unfair policy that students frequently elect, President Chase thinks, is the refusal to discuss difficulties and shortcomings with instructors. The fear that an instructor will form a mistaken opinion of one's self is decidedly foolish, he declared, and the "suffer-in-silence" method is a boomerang that eventually injures only the student. He urged the freshmen to cooperate with their instructors for common good.

Concluding, Dr. Chase said every student must learn to play the "classroom game." Furthermore it is purely an individual matter and must be solved as such.

dred who filled the lower floor. The newspaper folk were supplemented by a large number of faculty and students of the University.

A distinguished member of the audience was Oswald Garrison Villard, under whom Mr. Lawrence worked on the New York Evening Post, and the pupil who held the stage last night took occasion to pay tribute to his former master and to say that the inspiration he got from him still lives.

In welcoming the newspaper folk to the University, President Harry W. Chase said that the institution has profited greatly by these annual contacts. In attacking the problems of the state, he said, the North Carolina press has shown "an attitude which is more intellectual" than that shown by the newspapers in a number of other commonwealths.

"Many of the constructive things that have been accomplished in North Carolina in recent years have been the result of an informed and reasonable public opinion, in which the press has been the greatest single public agency," Dr. Chase said.

Mr. Lawrence was introduced by W. Carey Dowd, Jr., president of the North Carolina Press Association, who is presiding over the institute. Mr. Dowd referred to the institute as a classroom or clinic to which newspaper people should come to find out what's wrong. He knows of no more suitable place to hold such a clinic. He considered David Lawrence "America's foremost reporter." Mr. Dowd took occasion to commend two of the University's departments, the extension division and the news bureau. "The people of the state have come to know that they can get any kind of service through the extension division and the newspapers have learned that they can always depend on getting Chapel Hill news through the University news bureau," Mr. Dowd said.

Today the newspapermen will meet at 10 o'clock in Gerrard hall for discussions led by Winder Harris, managing editor of the Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va.; Oscar Coffin, head of the department of journalism here; Louis Graves, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly; O. C. Harn, managing director, Audit Bureau of Circulation, and J. C. Latimer, secretary, Virginia Press Association.

Mr. Harris will discuss editorial and news features. This discussion will be in the form of a round table. Following Mr. Harris, Oscar Coffin and Louis Graves will conduct a discussion of newspapering in North Carolina. Two talks devoted to the business end of a newspaper will be given by O. C. Harn on "Circulation Audits," and J. C. Latimer on "Circulation Audits for the Weekly Press" and "Virginia's Accomplishments and Plans."

This afternoon, the institute will meet again in the Carolina Inn ballroom. The general topic of discussion will be "Advertising." L. S. Kelly, space buyer for H. K. McCann, Co., and chairman country newspaper department A.A.A.A., will have as his subject "Headaches I Get from Trying to Place Advertising with Country Newspapers." Neal D. Ivey, formerly southern manager N. W. Ayer & Son, will talk on "Advertising Practices, Radio, and Special Representatives."

Entertainment for today consists of an oyster roast at 6 o'clock this evening at the Country Club. At 8:30 o'clock tonight the delegates will be admitted to the Carolina-Washington and Lee basketball game at the Tin Can.

UNIVERSITY GLEE CLUB PREPARING FOR BIG CONTEST

Daily Rehearsals Will Begin Next Week for Sectional Contest To Be Held in Greenville, S. C., Next Month.

TO APPEAR IN GASTONIA

The University glee club is working hard in preparation for the sectional glee club contest to be held February 7 at Furman University, Greenville, S. C.

H. S. Dyer, director, announced that beginning next Monday and lasting until the date of the contest there will be daily rehearsals of special divisions or of the entire club.

The group has been greatly strengthened by several new tenors who until this quarter had no glee club experience.

Members of the club have expressed their approval of the new alma mater song, composed by Arthur Edward Johnstone. They have already memorized and are now using this song.

Four student directors for the contest will be tried out January 24 when the glee club will make its appearance at the Durham high school auditorium. Those competing are Jack Connolly, Ewan S. Clark, Alden J. Stahr and W. T. Whitsett.

Schools representing six states are to enter the Greenville contest, and directors have communicated with Mr. Dyer to the effect that most of the glee clubs are unusually hard at work. The winning club will compete in the national contest to be held at New York in March.

The Greenville contest will be divided into three divisions: namely, groups of songs picked by the individual glee clubs, school alma maters, and selections picked by the contest committee to be sung by all groups. The order in which the schools will appear is to be determined separately for each division by lot.

Word has been received from Furman University that splendid entertainment is being prepared for the visiting clubs.

On its way to Greenville the glee club will give a concert at Gastonia, February 6.

BERNARD TO TALK ON ROBERT E. LEE AT SOPHS' CHAPEL

Dr. W. S. Bernard will address the sophomore class in Gerrard hall Monday morning, in celebration of Robert E. Lee's birthday which is Sunday, January 19.

A graduate of the class of 1900, Dr. Bernard has long been prominent in the life of the University. He has taught the student Sunday school class of the Methodist church here for several years. For the past seven years he has been a professor of Greek in the University.

He has been especially successful in speaking to alumni gatherings and is frequently called upon by the University for such addresses.

DEAN BRAUNE RETURNS TODAY FROM NEW YORK

Oswald G. Villard Says Liberalness Of University Is Well Recognized

(By H. J. Galland)

"The liberalness and open-mindedness of the University of North Carolina is well recognized in the North and all over the country," Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the Nation, said here yesterday in an interview. "Most colleges," he declared, "consider themselves aloof and apart from the communities in which they are situated, and the interest and study of vital problems of the vicinity on the part of the University of North Carolina is particularly interesting."

Mr. Villard commented on the fact that the University's president is a Northerner. It is another evidence, he said, of the liberality for which the University is known. He found the work done here in the field of study of the negro unusual, and referred to the work of Professor Brown and others for their studies of the North Carolina chain gang. As a grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, the great abolitionist, he said, the problem of the negro is one of intense interest to him.

He was particularly impressed with the beauty of the campus, and expressed himself as being pleased that the architecture of the buildings was harmonious. He hoped that the fraternity houses now building will not detract from the uniformity of the type of architecture.

Mr. Villard came from the Institute of Statesmanship at Rollins College, Fla. Yesterday morning he addressed all classes in history and economics on the subject of "Conditions in Russia."

An interesting highlight of his stay in North Carolina was his address at A. & T. College of Greensboro. There he was introduced by Professor Kendrick of N. C. C. W., whose father was a slave-holder, while the speaker of the evening was the grandson of an abolitionist and spoke to an audience of negroes.

Mr. Villard was taken on a short tour of points of interest about the campus by Professor Caldwell of the history department. He found the campus and faculty homes "most attractive," and was well pleased with the beauty of Kenan stadium. Before proceeding to New York, Mr. Villard went to Durham to see the new Duke campus.

Editor Of The Nation Speaks To A Large Group On Present Conditions In Soviet Russia

Oswald Garrison Villard Outlines Soviet Plans For Building Industry; States That All Opposed To Communism Are Punished.

Russia, a land of paradoxes and contradictions, was the subject of an address given by the noted editor of The Nation, Oswald Garrison Villard, yesterday morning in Bingham hall before a large audience.

Introduced by Dean Carroll of the school of commerce, Mr. Villard immediately commenced to describe the phenomenal changes which have occurred within the vast country of Russia during the past two years. Admonishing his listeners to do away with their preconceived notions, their ethical and social standards before judging the communistic experiment that is being tried in the former land of the Tsars, the famous journalist described how he and a large group of American observers were extended invitations to visit Russia by the American-Russian Chamber of New York City.

The most vivid impression which the largest country in the world made upon him was that of change. "Only one who knew what Russia was like 20 years ago can appreciate the colossal work that has been wrought," said Mr. Villard. Comparing Russia to modern countries is, according to the owner of The Nation, a wrong method of judging Russia. It is necessary for the intelligent observer to have a clear knowledge of the wretched conditions under which the Russian peasant, a virtual serf, labored before the momentous days of 1917.

Students of German To Be Guests of Dr. And Mrs. Metzenthin

Dr. and Mrs. E. C. P. Metzenthin issued a cordial invitation yesterday to all students of German to visit their home, 402 Hillsboro Street, on Sunday, January 19th, between the hours of four-thirty and six.

As is usual at these German teas of Dr. and Mrs. Metzenthin, German games will be played, German songs will be sung and a general good time will be had in a real typical German manner.

A feature of the afternoon that has attracted much attention is the novel manner in which guests are expected to receive their tea and cakes. Various directions, all in German, are written upon slips of paper and it is up to the individual's ability to read German that will decide whether or not he will have his refreshments sooner or later.

Although nothing but German will be spoken, Dr. Metzenthin made it clear that everyone who is interested in the native tongue of Heine, Schiller and Goethe will be heartily welcome.

PI BETA PHIS TO GIVE CONCERT JANUARY 24

McCall for the benefits of the Pi Beta Phi settlement school, which is located in the mountains of Tennessee. Miss Aliene Hughes, a graduate of the University, will give a recital. FARRIS RETURNS FROM NATIONAL STUDENT MEETING

President Of University Student Body Attends Annual Congress Held During Holidays At Stanford University.

MEETS CHICAGO GANGSTER

Ray Farris, president of the student body, has recently returned from the west coast where he attended the congress of the National Students' Federation of America. The following account of the trip is preliminary to a more detailed account to be published later.

From the first to the fourth of January Stanford University acted as host to the some hundred and eighty delegates from all parts of the country. The time of these delegates was divided among discussion, sightseeing, social functions, and other activities of interest. Welcoming the delegates were messages from President Hoover and Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford. The convention, first ever to be held west of the Mississippi, was presided over by Ursel Narvel of Oregon State College.

The delegates were first entertained by a tour of the campus, followed by a dinner. Then for several days followed discussions covering every phase of college life. Among the topics of discussion were athletics, including such problems as subsidizing, recruiting, amateurism, management, handling of student tickets, All-American selections, "hate" rivalry between schools, etc.; fraternities, including rushing problems, university aid, their effects on the school, etc.; non-organization

Chain Stores Have Little Effect On Local Business This Year

(By J. D. McNairy)

That the chain stores operating in Chapel Hill are not hurting business a great deal for local business men is the general opinion voiced by a number of merchants. Here as everywhere else the chain stores have made a strong bid for business and are fighting all the time for more customers, more stores, and more profits. Many small business men throughout the state are seeing their business vanish as the chain stores come in and undersell them. Interest has been keen throughout the south as the big chains are expanding their business in this section. The radio operator in Louisiana has given a good deal of free publicity to the A & P through his bitter denunciations that have fairly burned the air.

In the grocery line only one of the big chains has a strong foot-hold in the village. The A & P has an extensive grocery store and meat market on the north side of Franklin street; its business must be quite extensive as it is generally known that the A & P company will not operate a store unless it does at least $1,000 worth of business per week.

Penders, the giant that competes with A & P, everywhere, had a store here several years ago in the place now occupied by Jack Lipman, but as it found business bad, due in part to its location on the wrong side of the street, it was closed out. Due to the fact that there are not two big chains, there is no price cutting war, and local merchants have suffered little from the operation of A & P.

The great weapon of the chain store is its buying power. The M system store is owned by local people, and thus it is not properly a chain store, but it has the buying power of a chain store, and has central direction and supervision. It is the type of chain that local people are least hostile to, as it benefits the buyer in lowering prices, and at the same time the local people make a profit from the operation of the store. The Home Pride grocery store which used to operate on the corner of Franklin and Hillsboro, just opposite the Post-office, was operated on the same basis. However, when the national system went into bankruptcy the local store was not able to continue as the buying power of a large chain was lost.

A number of grocery stores owned and operated by local people are doing business and are as prosperous as ever.

In the realm of clothing stores Stetson D is the only chain in operation. While one hears rumors every day or so to the effect that a chain will take over Pritchard-Patterson, no announcement has been made to that effect yet. Stetson D established a store here after having done a large business through an agent taking orders

Kelly Provides Brickbats Of Newspaper Institute

Throws Brickbats

Larry S. Kelly, space buyer for the H. K. McCann Company, speaking before the Newspaper Institute yesterday, declared that if the country weeklies expected to increase national advertising they must establish circulation standards of reliability, quality, and quanity.

Space Buyer For H. K. McCann Company Tells Country Weeklies How To Increase National Advertising.

OSCAR COFFIN AND LOUIS GRAVES FURNISH SURPRISE

Journalism Professor Distributes Questionaire On State Politics; "Weekly" Editor Gives Sample Newspaper.

Despite ardent pleas by President Carey Dowd and other high officials of the North Carolina Press Association that the program of the Newspaper Institute be severe in its criticisms of North Carolina journalism, the speakers for yesterday maintained the usual optimistic tone. Among the half a dozen men on the program, only one stood by his guns and threw brickbats from the time he got up until he sat down.

That individual was Larry S. Kelly, space buyer for the H. K. McCan Company and chairman of the Country Newspaper Department of the American Association of Advertising Agents. Speaking mainly for the benefit of the small town dailies and weeklies, Mr. Kelly informed the publishers of these journals that, if they expected more national advertising, they must establish circulation standards of reliability, quality, and quantity.

Already some half a dozen states in the country are operating audit bureaus for weekly papers and early this year the number will reach twelve or more. He emphasized the establishment of such bureaus to sponsor a period of training for the weekly papers before they may join the A. B. C., the ultimate goal of efforts to improve circulation methods.

He deplored the fact that only 24 of the 37 dailies in the state are members of the A. B. C.

Winder R. Harris, a member of the well known Harris family of Raleigh, gave the opening talk of the morning session. Although Mr. Harris, who is now manager editor of the Virginian-Pilot of Norfolk, is 15 years removed from the state's newspaper circles, he is still proud to call himself a Tar Heel.

Talking on news and editorial features, Mr. Harris declared that a newspaper should be primarily a conveyor of news, news that is information, and features should be a side issue.

"If one regards the modern newspaper as a balanced mental meal, spot news is your piece de resistance your meat and vegetable course," he remarked. "Features should be classed with the salad or desert."

The local journalists Professor Oscar Coffin and Louis Graves were responsible for the cleverest things that happened yesterday. Professor Coffin, head of the department of journalism, who was scheduled for a talk, resolved his speech into a questionnaire. He read off a number of prepared questions pertaining to the present political situation in North Carolina and they haven't been answered yet.

One was: "What is the place of a reasonably honest and independent newspaper in the sort of family fight to be settled, perhaps, on June 7?" Another was: "Are North Carolina newspapers going to allow themselves

The "New Morality"

Since it is neither comfortable nor fashionable to go without them, the question of clothes has long been a pertinent one. Indeed, they form one of the foundation stones of present-day society. That wearing apparel will continue to occupy the spotlight of youthful attention seems quite likely.

"We are moving in a world of constant sex excitement." This quotation affords us the stimulus for this article. That we are moving in a world of sex excitement we admit; this has always been true. That we are living in a world of constant sex excitement, however, seems a bit dubious. To quote further, "Dancing, as it is practiced in modern dance halls, is the essence of a sex orgy."

Resultant of the attitude underlying the above quotations from a statement made recently by a prominent member of the American Social Hygiene Association, salacious magazines featuring figures of feminine pulchritude and physical perfection have been removed from the shelves of news-stands in several North Carolina cities of late. Students of aesthetics have been caused no small amount of worry by the removal of these so-called "art" magazines. Pornographic magazines, portraying human bodies in nude and semi-nude fashion early met with disapproval in this grand old state of ours. Such "studies in art" are now conspicuous by their absence in Durham, Charlotte, Greensboro, and other North Carolina cities. The dearth of lecherous literature is bemoaned by many, even though it may be cherished by the majority of those who are in power in these cities.

But depraved literature is not the sole means of creating present-day sex appeal. The pen of the sex novelist is competing with vulgarity, banality, and indecency on stage and screen. The great, piercing lamp of criticism has long shone on the unwarranted exploitation and degradation of the stage by those who lack respect for decency and seek to coin immorality into profit. The same is true of the screen. The voice of older people is continually advising that the present diet of youth contains too great a quantity of filth. The question of employing a czar to cleanse the stage is a pertinent one in numerous large cities, the city of New York being the center of this agitation.

Adherents to the so-called "new morality" movement, which is merely a term brazenly used for the age-old immorality, claim that people are getting what they want. If this be the case, we may well inquire as to whether they want the right things, or not. The common herd of people must always be directed by a few leaders who can peer into the future of society. Obviously, the "new morality" with which we are familiar stands for the very practices which formerly were classed as immoral. The present moulders of society's amusements sponsor practices which those of a few generations ago warred against. Is it possible that morality admits of such flagrant instability?

The question arises as to whether the theatre has debauched the people, or the people debauched the theatre. Is the motion picture debasing the public taste, or is public taste debasing the motion picture? Recently a group of Germans said that they wished to rid Germany of the "demoralizing influences from abroad"; and so the blame shifts from one place to another. Certainly, such pictures as A Most Immoral Lady, Hot Stuff, or Getting Gertie's Garter call attention too strongly to the so-called "shady work" of life. Since pictures bearing such glaring and suggestive titles draw the largest crowds, there is validity in the contention that people are getting what they want.

The following quotation seems to embody the solution of the much talked of situation: "Light, decency, and law have ruled the world thus far and will continue to rule it. Light, representing the intelligence of men, destroys the germs of immorality and indecency and cleans up other pest holes, including those established in the theatres for the profits of obtuse and conscienceless men. Decency is the power that prevails in public opinion in the minds of at least ninety percent of the people of this this country. Law is the power by which men compel those that lack moral light and decency to refrain from public display of their unworthiness."

If this be the case, then perpetuate light, decency, and law forever!—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

NOT AN UNPRECEDENTED CRIME WAVE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In my talk before the sophomore cabinet of the Y. M. C. A. Monday evening I seemed to have failed to get over with the Tar Heel reporter what I was trying to say. I did not say that we are in the midst of an unprecedented crime wave. Nor did I intend to endorse the idea that the crime of the present day is in large measure attributable to a break-down in the family. What I tried to say in this connection is, that as indicated by indictments in our superior courts over a period of thirty years there has been a decided increase in crime since the World War; but that if we omit liquor law violations for the whole thirty-year period, there is no appreciable increase in the crime rate per 1,000 population for the period following the war as compared with the period of the same length preceding it, and that the rate for the period since the war is decidedly lower than that for the first ten years of the thirty-year period. I made the point that since the increase in crime in the state consists in violations of the prohibition law and since the average of the liquor law violator is considerably higher than that of offenders against the law in general, this increase in crime can hardly be charged to any recent break-down of family control of youth.

ROY M. BROWN.

AND ATHENE WAS THE GODDESS OF WISDOM

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

It is interesting to note that the gentle John Mebane has succumbed to the temptation always besetting the philosophical and thus airs for us the shortcomings of the "unquiet sex."

In quoting from Rousseau's epistle and the popular little essay by Schopenhauer, Mr. Mebane thinks to add a touch of authority and thus clinch his case, but women are not so easily convinced of their inanity. Even had his dissertation bristled with the diatribes of Juvenal, Tertulhan, Solomon, the elder Cato, Valerius and Jean de Meung, I doubt if the gentleman could produce a single ripple in the placid surface of the female mind. Somehow she holds vague memories of the doings of Sappho, Aspasia, Theodora, Heloise, Marie de France, Christine de Pison, Elizabeth, Catherine the Great, Madame de Maintenon, Jane Austen, Madame de Stael, George Eliot, the Bronte sisters, George Sand, annd Sonia Kovalesky, to say nothing of a host of other sisters whose fame depends on something other than intellect. Of course those who make a cult of apotheosizing the male mind will observe that the above list represents the brilliant exceptions. Quite true, but at the same time would we not be stretching a point to classify Plato, Aristotle, Virgil, Dante, Beethoven, Goethe and Shakespeare as representative of their sex? Obviously no women have equalled these men but that does not prove women are capable of nothing but love and deceit. Most of us will agree that the female mind is not a philosophical mind. It does not attain to great depths of abstract thinking, but it surely is less phlegmatic in those mental patterns which it does master. The vigor and depth we ordinarily associate with genius is undeniably a male attribute, but in the finest order of genius this vigor is always refined by a sensitiveness to nuances that is essentially feminine. This is what Elbert Hubbard meant when he said that "Schuman was feminine in many ways as the best men always are." This is one of the things that distinguish the Hebrew Jahveh from Jesus of Nazareth.

Even if women have never become the greatest of philosophers and artists, they have been the inspiration of some of the best things that man has ever done. It is almost platitudinous to recall in this respect Beatrice Portinari, Laura de Noves, Caroline Esterhazy, beloved of Franz Schubert and Clara Wreck, wife of Robert Schumann. To George Sand we are indebted for some of Musset's purest lyrics and Chopin's most passionate music. Had not Catullus been enamored of Clodia we would not have the Lesbia poems. Beethoven probably did not have an abiding passion for one woman but women were constantly on his mind. So much so, in fact, that he is said to have cried out, "O God, let me find her who is destined to be mine and who shall strengthen me in virtue."

Even to enumerate the classic examples of a woman's inspiration and influence would be an almost hopeless task; the procession is too great. There are Livia, who directed Augustus; Theodora, to whom a sober historian refers as "a woman of dauntless courage, possessed of remarkable foresight in political affairs, and in a very real sense joint ruler with her husband"; Aspasia, the wife of Pericles was almost as influential and even the sainted Jerome had his Paula. Everybody knows what Catherine did for Peter the Great, and many know how Madame de Caillavet had to be continually urging Anatole France on to greater and greater achievements.

But suppose we grant—for the sake of argument—that "women are good for nothing but love and deceit." What of it? That is all the average man wants in a woman and she obligingly enough gives it to him. But in doing so she does not necessarily become his chattel. On the contrary, if she uses her native equipment with the least bit of finesse she can make him forget all the philosophy he ever knew—and she is aware of it. Who thinks of the precepts of Solomon when a woman's half-parted lips are waiting to be kissed. Why, even the old king himself became rather frisky on such occasions. Whatever may be their shortcomings women usually know what they're about when it is a question of handling men—particularly men whom they love; and that is one way of getting what they want. Says James Hunckner: "These long-haired, soft-eyed animals, as Guy de Maupassant described them, are our true critics, weighing us ever in the scales that are mortifyingly candid, excusing us if they love us, allowing the lords of creation to kneel in humble attitudes at the shrine and rewarded at the end by—toleration."

AN ORDINARY MAN.

john mebane

Euripides' Medea is a powerful play. We have attempted below to re-write one of Medea's most forceful soliloquies in order to give it somewhat of a modern appeal. (Profuse apologies to Euripides, of course).

MEDEA:

My sons, here in this house may you reside
While me, your mama, unkind fate deride,
For I to other realms an exile go—
How can your papa shame to treat me so?
I shall be gone ere you have taken wives
And settled for remainder of your lives.
For you, my sons, I then in vain have toiled,
In vain have washed your necks and ears, and oiled
Your locks and made you clean your fingernails
And told you wondrous stories and weird tales.
Why fasten on me such a steadfast gaze
Of tenderness? Or wherefore smile? My days
Are destined to be spent in misery
For I cannot evade the dread decree.
Ah, wretched, wretched me. what shall I do?
For Jason has declared that he was through.—
My resolution fails now I have seen
The faces of my children so serene.
With me I'll take my children, for why bring
A double portion of distress to sting
My heart that I may grieve the unkind sire
By murdering his sons? I'll send a wire
For reservations in some foreign state
And he shall grieve that he gave me the gate.
And yet, in my intent what means this change?
Why I'd a hundred times prefer the mange
Than mock'ry and derision from that man!
I needs must rouse my courage. To Japan
I'll fly when now the dreadful deed is done;
And if be overtakes me on the run,
I'll draw my dagger and cut short my life:
I'd rather be a corpse than be his wife!
Enter the regal mansion, o my suns.
(exit sons).
But such a moment is no time for puns.
Alas! alas! I cannot do the deed.
I tell you frankly it's against my creed
To do such things as this. Unhappy me!
With ashes and with sack-cloth cap-a-pie
Myself I ought to cover. No! I swear
Although I storm about and tear my hair
I shall commit the deed, nor ever let
My sons abide here near that foul coquette!
They certainly must die; since then they must
'Tis I shall do the deed. In God I trust.
Now, hurried on by fate, I tread a path
Of utter wretchedness, nor would a bath
Relieve me of this dreadful burning pain
Which fails upon my heart like drops of rain.
To my dear sons o how I long to say:
"Stretch forth your right hands, babies, that I may Embrace them. O, those lips to me so dear
Will silenced be forevermore, I fear;
Engaging features and ingenuous looks
Like angels pictured in the story books,
Ah, you shall be deprived of all life holds
And join the cherubims in blessed folds."
Farewell, sweet kisses, tender limbs, farewell!
For you cannot be saved now by the bell.
Now, my distress has conquered, and I know
What crimes I venture on and what a show
I'll have at Judgment. But my bitter rage
Has got the best of me and of my age.

"KNOW ALL WELL" IS BUDDY ROGERS' SLOGAN

Even in this age of specialization there is one class of workers who have to be jack-of-all-trades and masters of all of them. They are the screen players who are boxers today, suave men-about-town tomorrow; stenographers in one scene, and ladies of fashion in the next. The screen players must be able and ready to turn boxer, cowboy, acrobat, stenographer and what not at short notice.

This almost daily uncertainty as to the nature of the work required tends to keep screen actors continually on the alert, physically and mentally. Often the important matter of safety may hinge on adequate preparation for a role.

Charles (Buddy) Rogers, one of the youngest of the motion picture stars, has had to do many things for the screen besides make love. He has piloted airplanes, steered speeding iceboats and captained a tug through the Golden Gate at San Francisco. For his first picture, "Fascinating Youth," he had to learn all about iceboats, and learn quickly for the film called for iceboat races on Lake Placid with Rogers excelling at the tiller.

When he undertook the leading role in "Wings," Rogers faced a much greater test. He had to learn to fly an airplane, in "More Pay Less Work," he mastered the art of high diving, one of the scenes requiring him to dive from a height of 35 feet. In "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Close Harmony," he had to demonstrate proficiency with many different musical instruments. In "River of Romance," he turned fighting man to stage a rough-and-tumble battle with Fred Kohler, and, while these fights are not meant to maim or injure the screen players, they must be realistic. For his magic act in "Illusion," he learned the intricate art of magic.

For his latest Paramount all-talking picture, "Half Way to Heaven," which will show at the Carolina theatre today, Rogers had to become adept at still another specialized business. He became an acrobat. His role requires him to do all kinds of difficult and hazardous feats on the trapeze. That has meant learning another trade.

Washington-Lee Wins From Tar Heels 27-17

Williams And Captain Wood Play Well For Generals.

SCORE AT HALF 19 - 7

Carolina Plays Well But Is Outclassed By Fast Virginia Team.

The University of North Carolina, where they breed good basketball teams, where average fives win the Southern Conference championship, where mediocre quints turn out to be runners-up and where an absolutely worthless bunch is always a dark horse down in Atlanta, watched with intimidated fear a gang of ungainly Generals from up in the Blue Ridge mountains, Washington and Lee, steal a basketball game by the score of 27-17.

The score means nothing. Given the opportunity to review in action one of the best basketball aggregations south of the Mason and Dixon line, the fans sat back and saw all they wanted. Of course it was a Carolina team in there fighting every inch, but it was like the flea irritating the elephant. At the half the score was 19-7.

One thing the fans missed. The Washington and Lee quintet was never extended, and consequently that quick action which sends nervous thrills down the spine was not there. The satisfaction of witnessing the contest was the satisfaction of watching a mechanically perfect machine.

That boy Williams. He plays center, but if he could be divided into five pieces he would still make up a good basketball combination. Tall, slim, somewhat lanky and ungainly because of his more than six feet of height, he picked up the ball from nowhere, did what he wanted with it, and when it left his hands it went exactly where it was sent.

Winter Practice To Begin Monday

Coach Chuck Collins has completed plans for the winter football season, which begins Monday and lasts through a period of six weeks.

The Tar Heel mentor arrived in Chapel Hill a few days ago and has spent much of his time in outlining plans for winter football. Everything is in readiness for the boys to take their places in the circle and begin the old grind of exercising.

Exactly who will be back for football and who will not has not been definitely decided as yet. No one knows. It is rumored that more men will be lost to the squad than has been expected.

Nevertheless, the coaches feel as if the winter football practice will prove very valuable to them in finding the right men for certain positions and determining the right combinations that will be used against the teams that Carolina will meet in the fall.

Material will be issued the remainder of the week.

The University of California Press has published a biography of Anthony Mundy, Elizabethan man of letters, who never wrote anything great, but who wrote voluminously.

Freshman Notice

All freshmen who expect to compete for sub-assistant managerships of the football team are requested to report to Emerson Stadium at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, January 20, for instructions. All freshmen are eligible to compete.

Kappa Alpha Defeats Kappa Sigma 22-17

The Kappa Alpha cage team nosed out the Kappa Sigma five 22-17 yesterday in the Tin Can in a fast game that furnished many thrills. Both teams played on about even terms until late in the second half when Allen sunk a pretty field goal to establish the K. A. lead. "Sugar" Allen was high man of the game with 8 counters, while his teammate, Wells, was second with 7. Henry House, Tar Heel varsity football star, also showed up well. White, Eagles, and Satterfield played well for the Kappa Sigma team.

In othe rgames of the afternoon, "G" forfeited to Steele while A. T. O. forfeited to Zeta Psi.

Tar Heelettes To Play Durham Team Tonight

The co-ed sextet will meet the Durham Independents tonight at 7:30 in Bynum gymnasium.

The Independents are comprised of high school girls using an unaffiliated name as the Durham high school does not have a girl team.

No information could be ascertained by the Tar Heel as to the strength of the Durham team, or its schedule; but from all reports running around Spencer hall the game tonight should be fast and furious.

This is the third game of the season for Coach Farris' protegees, and they are hipped for a win on the credit side of the ledger.

The lineup for the Tar Heelettes is practically the same as that of Tuesday's game.

Phi Gams Win 25-11

The Phi Gamma Delta fraternity basketball team easily defeated Tau Epsilon Phi yesterday afternoon 25-11. The game was devoid of thrills, the shooting of Dewey, who scored 9 points for Phi Gam, being the one highlight of the contest. His teammates, Boucher and White, each scored six points, while Hirsh and Lelshin were outstanding for Tau Epsilon Phi.

Lineup and summary:

Phi Gam. Delt.		Tau Ep. Phi
Dewey (9)	r. f.	Hirsh (4)
Henry (4)	l. f.	Crisner
Boucher (6)	c.	Felshin (4)

FROSH WIN FROM OAK RIDGE 34-20

First Year Men Start Slowly But Hit Stride In Second Half.

HINES IS HIGH SCORER

Repeating their strong scoring attack, the Carolina Tar Babies last night in the Tin Can defeated the Oak Ridge cadets in a rough game before a capacity audience.

The Tar Babies started late but soon hit their stride and from the second quarter the result was never in doubt. Although the cadets played heads-up basketball, their floor work could not match that of Coach Enright's lads.

The most outstanding player for Carolina was Hines who was also high scorer for the evening with fifteen points. Captain Brady and Turner played best for the cadets.

The lineup:

Carolina (34)		Oak Ridge (20)
Chandler (3)	r. f.	Gold (3)
Dunn (3)	l. f.	Turner (5)
Beale (4)	c.	Newberry (1)
Henry (6)	r. g.	Neal (1)
Lineberger (3)	l. g.	Brady (7)

Substitutions: for Carolina—Chatham, Hamlet, Markham, Hines (15) Moore, Grant, Royster, Connor, Davis, Walch, Barnett; for Oak Ridge—Slayton, Ferrell (3).

CHANGES MADE IN COURT SCHEDULE

Places for Wake Forest Games Sifted; Loyola Game Is Cancelled.

Several important changes in the schedule of the University of North Carolina basketball schedule were announced here today by Charles T. Woollen, Graduate Manager of Athletics.

The places for the home and home games with Wake Forest have been shifted, to avoid conflict with N. C. State games in Raleigh, so that the first game with the Baptists on January 25 will be played in Raleigh and the second on February 18 will be played here.

Washington and Lee has taken the place of the V. M. I. date on February 6, and this second battle with the Generals will be played at Lexington, Va.

The game which was pending for the Tin Can here with Loyola of Chicago for February 12 has been cancelled, due to the fact that the Loyola team will not be able to make the long Southern trip this season.

The revised schedule follows:

Jan. 25—Wake Forest at Raleigh
Jan. 28—N. C. State there
Feb. 1—Duke here
Feb. 5—V. P. I. there
Feb. 6—Washington and Lee there
Feb. 7—Virginia there
Feb. 8—Maryland there
Feb. 11—N. C. State here
Feb. 15—Duke there
Feb. 18—Wake Forest here
Feb. 19—Maryland here
Feb. 21—V. P. I. here
Feb. 22—Navy there

PRINCETON HAS MANY VETERANS BACK ON TRACK

Tar Heel Cinder Stars to Meet One of Strongest Teams in East on Northern Tour.

Carolina's track team will meet one of the outstanding track teams in the east this spring when they engage the Princeton Tigers at Princeton on May 10. Some idea of the strength of the Tigers follows: "With unusual strength in all events except the weights Princeton's track team faces a brilliant outlook. . . . The Tiger varsity will be greatly strengthened this year by sophomores who proved unbeatable as freshmen in the 1929 spring campaign. Coach Keene Fitzpatrack will also have the majority of last season's team returning, having lost only a few stars by graduation. The mile and half mile will be ably taken care of by Dawson, Rosner, and Mills.

"The return of Rosner, former New Utrecht star and holder of several indoor scholastic half mile records, who broke his ankle last year, will greatly strengthen the middle distance events.

"Captain Ben Hedges, intercollegiate champion in the high jump and stellar performer in the pole vault, broad jump, and high hurdles, will lead the Tiger attack this year. Hedges was high scorer for Princeton in dual meets last spring and will likely duplicate his feat this season. In the international meet with Oxford and Cambridge last July he captured the high hurdles and high jump and placed in the pole vault and broad jump. He will confine his activities to the high jump in the indoor meets.

"Hollis Hand, a sophomore, who won the 220 and captured a second in the 100 in the Oxford-Cambridge meet last summer, will be the Tiger's strongest representative in the sprints. Thomson, MacInnes, and Andrews, all juniors, will cooperate with Hand in the dashes.

Princeton track men are training on an outdoor board track this winter."

It appears that Princeton is exceptionally strong in all except the weight events. Athletes from both Princeton and Penn State, with which the Tar Heels have a meet here on April 19, will participate in the Milrose games at Madison Square Garden on February 8.

Game Protested

Yesterday the scorekeeper turned in a report of an eight to four win for "I," in the Grimes-"I" basketball game. The game was rather uninteresting, but when it was over, then the fireworks started. Naturally the "I" team claimed that the scorekeeper was right. The peculiar part about it is the scorekeeper disappeared as soon as the score was contested. The Grimes team claimed that they had made three goals, giving them a score of six, and that "I" had only made two goals. The referee could not be found, so the game was contested and will be replayed soon.

Some one has described a football player as a boy who sprains his ankle in September, catches a cold in October, breaks a rib in November, and is perfectly healthy in December.

Fencers Notice

Final entries for the novice fencing tournament must be turned in to H. H. Hendlin at the Tin Can today before 3:30 o'clock. The tournament will begin at 4 o'clock this afternoon and is open to all novices in fencing.

From 3:30 to 3:45 instructions will be given those who have never handled foils before.

The tournament is open to the public.

Pikas Defeat Phi Alpha Team 15-13

Pi Kappa Alpha nosed out Phi Alpha's quint yesterday afternoon to win 15 to 13. The game was close throughout, though the Pikas had a slight edge on the Phi Alpha team. Lowrance, Brady and Patterson, of Pi Kappa Alpha, showed up well, while Cohen and Silverstein turned in good games for Phi Alpha.

Summary:

Chapel Hill high defeated Zeta Psi 20-16 in a practice game at the high school Tin Can yesterday afternoon. Council, high school forward, was high scorer with 8 points while White of Zeta Psi was next with 6.

Zeta Psi takes on A. T. O. this afternoon in the fraternity loop of the intramural league.

Lineup and summary:

Oregon Agricultural College, or "Oregon State," Corvallis. Newspaper editorials once commented with criticism upon a report that one fraternity possessed 17 automobiles. "Undemocratic!" said some. "Parents should not permit such a display of wealth." The student paper appraised the 17 cars. Estimated total value, $520.

RINGMEN READY FOR MINK TEAM

Captain Archie Allen Will Lead Powerful Tar Heel Boxing Team Against Washington & Lee Saturday.

Coach Crayton Rowe's boxing team is coming along first rate and everything is in readiness for the first bouts of the season with Washington and Lee Saturday.

The bouts will be staged on foreign territory, with the Tar Heel boys returning here Sunday and beginning training for bouts with V. M. I. which takes place in the Tin Can Saturday, January 25.

ed to permit some of his boys to go to Charlotte in the near future to take part in an amateur boxing show to be staged there in the interest of promoting boxing to a larger degree in that territory. Coach Rowe is planning to send Captain Archie Allen, John Warren, Noah Goodridge and several others, together with Platt Landis, resident of Charlotte and freshman here at present. Platt is a member of the frosh boxing team and fights in the light heavyweight class. It is reported that he is one of the hardest punching light-heavies to be developed in these parts in a long time. When he steps in the ring and hits, it's "Katy, bar the door."

John Warren, brother of the famous Add, has the right hand that packs dynamite. When he connects, something always happens. John is expected to bring many points toward the Tar Heel side of the score pad this year.

Captain Archie Allen has fought his way to the honor of captain which he now holds. It was learned that Allen is one of the cleverest welters who have been developed here. He has been on the team for several years and is experienced in the ring. Much will be expected of him this season.

A lightweight roams around down there at the Tin Can, hitting and dodging with all the appearances of a professional, and his name is Noah Goodridge. Another little fellow, who fights like nobody's business is Sheffield.

These boys and many others on both the varsity and freshman squads take workouts and spar around every afternoon. One should drift down and take a look at them some day. These boys mentioned are not the only bright spots that adorn the Tin Can; there are many others. Attempts will be made to look the others over before the season closes.

The first woman champion of tennis in England was Miss M. Watson, 1890.

FARRIS RETURNS FROM NATIONAL STUDENT MEETING

factors in campus morale; honor systems, their relations with, and effects on, campus activity; publications, including all phases of newspaper, yearbook, mazazine, and even scandal sheet editing; student government, its composition, scope, control, and machinery. In addition to the many delegates from various men's colleges and universities, there were approximately the same number of women delegates. Meredith, N.C.C.W., and G.C. had delegates present.

Many social functions were held in honor of the delegates. There was a reception, two dances, a basketball game, and a banquet in the way of entertainment. In addition, trips were taken to San Francisco, Golden Gate, China Town, and around the Stanford campus. A high light on the program was the speech of Secretary of Interior Wilbur, made over the radio from Washington, D. C.

According to Farris the trip was an entire success from all standpoints. "Stanford University is quite a beautiful but busy place. The greatest courtesy was shown us on every hand. Many of the discussions were very enlightening and educational. I was interviewed repeatedly in regard to our honor system, student government, athletics, and publications. It was found by a vote that in the majority of schools having an honor system the advantages were believed to outweigh the disadvantages."

Ray had many amusing, and some rather embarassing, experiences. Once when dancing with a California girl he inadvertently left here in the middle of the floor when she attempted to put into practice one of the unfamiliar steps of a new western dance. On the journey out, he stopped long enough to see something of Hollywood, meeting Jack Oakie, and seeing Lupe Velez and Wallace Beery. He saw also some of the homes of the stars located in Venice, a popular beach resort. The return trip was made via Chicago. One of the most interesting sights of the trip was the Grand Canyon. On the train near St. Louis he met a real gangster in the smoker. He was also invited to join in a card game, but politely declined. Another less judicious individual was subsequently fleeced of fifty dollars by the same men.

The meeting next year is to be held at Atlanta, with Agnes Scott and Georgia Tech acting as hosts. Murrow, of Washington State, is the president-elect. At the convention next year the schools are to be divided according to size and whether or not they are denominational, thus enabling the discussion of common problems of each group.

Chain Stores Have Little Effect On Chapel Hill Business

for a mail order service. The opening of the local store had a beneficial effect in keeping clothing prices down to a reasonable level.

The Morris and Robinson Tailoring Company of Baltimore which owns Stetson D also operate Campus Bootery, the only chain shoe store in the village. This has been in existence for two years and seems to be doing a good business.

In the realm of entertainment, picture shows and theatres, the chain store idea has been enormously successful. When the Carolina theatre was opened here in 1927 by the Publix-Saenger Company it offered newer and better attractions and soon drew the trade to such an extent that the old Pickwick, owned by local interests, had to be closed out. For the past year and a half the Carolina has been the only picture show in the village.

Of the various filling stations in the vicinity of Chapel Hill only one is operated by a national company; the Standard Oil runs the one at the MacMillan Motor Company. The practice of the company owning and operating the filling station is becoming popular among the oil companies. Already the Standard people have purchased a lot in front of the high school where they intend to build another company-operated station.

One grocery store, one clothing store, one shoe store, one theatre, and one filling station completes the list of chain store businesses in the village.

Assembly Notice

L. S. Kelly Provides Brickbats of Institute

to be used for rekindling the Smith-Hoover fires of bigotry and intolerance?" In concluding he wanted to know where Santford Martin's forty immortals were, and this drew a big laugh.

Mr. Graves, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, was also scheduled for an address. Instead, he distributed copies of his paper, printed, as he said, "like the front pages of our papers would look were we to heed the criticism that the newspapers place too much emphasis on the abnormal and sensational."

Across the front page of the Weekly a bold two-line streamer heralded the fact that "Convention Half Over and Carey Dowd Is Still Sober." Another headline read: "Methodist Church Plate-Passers Ended the Year Without Stealing a Cent; Congregation is Jubilant." And still another playfully announced that there are "No Wife-beaters in Faculty."

Concluding the program for the morning, J. C. Latimer, secretary of the Virginia Press Association, told of the success of his association in a recent audit of the weekly newspapers in that state. He commented on the increase in the strength and national advertising for the weeklies, as he had seen it.

That national advertising should receive the same consideration and pay the same rates as local advertising was the contention of N. D. Ivey of George A. McDevitt Co., formerly southern manager of N. W. Ayer & Son, speaking from the advertisers' point of view. Mr. Ivey was the principal speaker at the afternoon session of the Institute.

Following some discussion from the floor on the question of auditing the circulation figures of weeklies for the use of advertising agencies as an aid for securing national accounts, L. S. Kelly, the firebrand of the convention, explained more fully what the agencies require of the newspapers.

Directly after adjournment yesterday, the newspaper folk were the guests of the Carolina Inn and the Extension Division at an oyster roast, given at the country club. Last night entertainment was provided by the University Athletic Association at the basketball contest between the Washington and Lee and the Carolina teams. Manager E. Carrington Smith of the Carolina theatre was also host to a number of the visitors.

The Institute is to be concluded today with a session beginning at 10 o'clock. Round table discussions of newspaper accounting and business will be featured by the talks of T. D. Meriweather, manager of the Richmond and Winston Salem offices of Ernst & Ernst, accounting specialists, and of W. Clement Moore, a business analyst of the firm of Wolf & Co., specializing in newspaper finance and accounting.

The following is a list of the delegates attending the Institute and the papers they represent:

Editor Of The Nation Speaks On Present Conditions of Russia

healthy, physically perfect men and women. Instances were cited of the hardiness and bodily perfection of the new youth of the U. S. S. R., especially in the Ukraine.

Relations between men and women, boys and girls, are slowly being brought to a sound basis. The reputed laxity of morals is nothing compared to the debauchery that was common under the hated Romanovs. Both marriage and divorce are simple ceremonies. Alimony is unknown. In cases of divorce, the children are always given to their mother, while the father must contribute half his wages to their support.

$112.50 Highest Salary

An interesting feature of Mr. Villard's address was his description of the working people. The ultimate wage to which they can aspire is $112.50 per month. The president of the executive committee of all Russia, Joseph Stalin, draws no more than that amount for his responsible position. The head of a large steel mill, which in time will employ 25,000 men, also draws a mere $112.50.

There were one or two aspects of Russia that seemed false to Mr. Villard. The ruthlessness with which the Communists attack enemies of the government is unpleasant. In one day alone, 50 of the counter-revolutionaries were shot. Many are sent to Siberia. Others are sent to prison on trumped up charges, and with the same determination that marks their campaign for the eradication of opponents, the Communists are educating the children in a manner that will teach them to hate capitalism and to despise capitalistic forms of government. This is, to Mr. Villard, one of the paradoxes. They are freeing the serf, only to restrict his education along lines which breed hate and misunderstanding of their fellowman.

There has been much talk in America of Russia endeavoring to break down the family and church. This rumor, Mr. Villard explained, is wrong. There are many clinics, nurseries, playgrounds and the like in which working mothers may leave their children under the best of care while they are in the mills. As for the churches, it was definitely explained that the U. S. S. R. does not attack the Greek Orthodox church, merely insisting that the state will aid in no wit to their support. Protestant sects, however, have come under the ill-will of the present government and Mr. Villard obtained from authoritative sources the information that 100 Protestant missionaries have been sent to Siberia on minor or false charges.

Copy American Industry

Industrially, Russia is trying in every possible way to pattern herself after America. They hope to achieve the same ends, i. e., mechanical perfection, dexterity, mass production, etc., without letting the control of the machines fall into the hands of a few capitalists.

Although originally violently opposed to private capital, and the reason why there is no middle class in Russia today, the Bolsheviki were forced in 1923 to adopt the New Economic Policy, now termed the NEP, by which private capital would be allowed to enter the country under various regulations. Thus we find Henry Ford and other American industrialists entering Russia.

The present government has entered upon contracts for construction of factories and roads during the ensuing year that amount to more than $1,600,000. This industrializing of Russia, according to yesterday's speaker, is a wonderful thing.

Mr. Villard believes that if certain of the bad qualities of the existing government are done away with, Russia will become a powerful influence in the world, causing other nations to modify their attitude to the laboring classes.

GOV. W. E. SWEET HERE TO SPEAK THIS WEEK END

Noted Colorado Governor Will Address Two Audiences in M. E. Church Sunday.

William E. Sweet, ex-Governor of Colorado, will deliver two addresses at the Methodist church tomorrow at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m.under the auspices of the University Y. M. C. A. on the subjects, "The New Patriotism" and "A Valid Christianity for Today."

Mr. Sweet, well-known for a humanitarian and progressive view on modern problems, has made large contributions to various forms of church and philanthropic work. During the war he was a divisional secretary in France for the Young Men's Christian Association and since has been connected with many similar activities in their country. Mr. Sweet was governor of Colorado in 1923 and 1924.

For many years a student of public questions and the promotion of progressive ideas, he believes in democracy and in the right of the individual to self-determination. He is decidedly forward-looking in political and social views. Prominent in the business world as well as in public activities, Mr. Sweet possesses a keen sense of what should constitute a fundamental justice in our industrial and social order, and he is fearless in advocating these principles which he believes are for the common good and the advancement of human brotherhood.

People who have heard Mr. Sweet say that he is a fine example of the business man who has vision and an open mind; of the man of wealth who has not allowed his humanitation instincts to be stifled. Several summers ago he went to Europe to inform himself on social and industrial conditions abroad, and on his return he spoke widely on the subject. He is said to be both a forceful and convincing speaker.

Jack Of Clubs Telepathy Works From Harrisburg To Charleston

(By John Patric)

She was beautiful; she was a little dumb, but in her hand she held the jack of clubs. He wanted to make a hit, and did, as we shall see.

There are men in the world who can paint vivid pictures with words. Some of them are playwrights, whose creations might make even radio audiences see the stirring scenes and follow the story of the play as though they were watching its actors. Others lecture in the psychology department.

When Dr. English Bagby of the psychology department lectured last week to his class in psychology 1, many of its members were without books. And as a result a room full of students witnessed demonstrations of telepathy, mind-reading and hypnotism, differing only from actual attendance at the performanee in the fact that methods were exposed at the end of every show.

Beginning with simple illustrations of convincing pseudo-telepathy, Dr. Bagby related the incident of two Yale men who went different ways at vacation time. Before they parted, they agreed upon the Jack of clubs.

In Harrisburg, Penn., one of the pair sat with a pretty lady. They played bridge, and finally, with the skill of a clever card player, he manipulated the deck so that she would have in her hand the jack of clubs, though unaware that he knew it.

"I have," he said, "with my roommate, studied telepathy. I know what card you have . . . your brain is very delicate and sensitive, and your thoughts are easily transferred."

"Really?"

"Yes, indeed. Now, just to show you what a powerful thing and what a useful thing telepathy is, my roommate is in Charleston, South Carolina. Wire him, ask him what card you have. Take me with you, and don't let me out of your sight until his answer comes back."

The telegram replied, correctly.

"We worked long and hard to learn telepathy—my roommate and I," he told the lovely lady. "At first, we could only transmit our thoughts with our heads close together,—like this, see?—but finally we could transfer them when we sat across the room from each other, and now—well, just see what we have accomplished!"

Industrial Engineer Asserts That Recent Survey Shows North Carolina Weeklies Do 50 Percent More Business Than Papers in Other Southern States.

ANNUAL SESSION ENDS

W. Clement Moore, industrial engineer and business economist of Philadelphia, in an address at the closing session of the sixth annual newspaper institute, declared that newspapers in small towns and communities in North Carolina were showing progress. He stated that a recent survey of the weekly publishing business showed that North Carolina weeklies last year earned approximately 50 per cent more profits per newspaper than the average in the South Atlantic states.

And since newspapers are presumed to reflect the prosperity of a community, North Carolina should be an excellent state for further newspaper investments and for national advertisers, Mr. Moore pointed out. In making the survey Mr. Moore cooperated with the National Editorial Association's research bureau.

"There is still abundant room for improvement, but the conclusion is inevitable that North Carolina is stepping out in weekly newspaper development," Mr. Moore declared.

The other scheduled speaker on yesterday's program was T. D. Meriwether, manager of the Richmond and Winston-Salem offices of Ernst and Ernst, specialists in newspaper accounting, who emphasized that the greatest need of newspapers today is a better knowledge of the business end. Accountancy, he said, has not kept pace with the growth of the other departments of the average newspaper.

A checkup of registration revealed that the attendance this year exceeded that of last year by approximately 25, 105 having enrolled as compared with 82 for 1929. This was a sur-

Harrell and Pertie Address Engineers

The University student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers held its first meeting under its new charter Thursday evening in Phillips hall. D. Allen Harrell spoke on "The Construction of Model Airplanes" and C. L. Pertie described the manufacture of water gas.

Mr. Harrell presented a practical description of the construction of model planes, mentioning the materials used in model making and the factors that must be taken into consideration in the designing of a model. He particularly stressed the importance of the propellor, stating that this part constitutes at least 50 per cent of the model.

Speaking from experience obtained while on cooperative work, during which he was connected with the construction of gas plants, Mr. Pertie gave an explanation of the manufacture of water gas, tracing the processes involved from the time the coal left the bin until the gas was in the mains.

After the program of the evening, those present filled out registration cards for membership in the national organization.

University Alumni Attend Conference

Two representatives from the General Alumni Association of the University are attending the regional conference of the American Alumni Council, which opened yesterday in Charleston, S. C. The University men are J. Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary, and Edward Scheidt, director of the student survey department of the University. Mr. Scheidt was last year field secretary for the Alumni Association.

The sessions of the conference continue today with discussions of concern in organized alumni work. Mr. Saunders is on the program to lead two of the discussions, these being those on the Carnegie report and methods of financing the alumni program and special campaigns. Mr. Scheidt will contribute to the discussion of the work with prospective students.

Representatives from the states of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama are attending the conference.

AUTHORS READ ORIGINAL PLAYS

Quarterly Reading of New Folk Plays Held Last Night; To Select Three.

Six folk plays by writers from as many different states were read by their authors last night in the Playmaker theatre in the regular quarterly reading of new folk plays. Out of these the play committee will select three to be produced on March 6, 7 and 8.

"Death Valley Scottie," a play of the California desert, was written by Milt Wood of California. "The Maverick," a play of frontier life in the Dakotas, by Irene Fussler of North Dakota, and "Holly Hocks," a New England folk play by Joe Fox of Massachusetts, were two more "folksy" plays written about the sections where the authors live.

Three short plays about southern college life, written by three northerners who have been in school here for a while, were also read. These were: "Student Third" by Bob Dawes of Pennsylvania, "Suspended Animation" by Kent Creuser of New York, and "For Auntie's Sake" by John Patric.

Officials of the Playmakers expressed themselves as very well pleased with the merit of the plays.

Students To Tour European Countries

During the coming summer twelve tours of European countries will be conducted under the auspices of the Confederation Internationale Des Etudiants. These tours, made in the company of students of European and American schools, will be varied as to time, expenses, itinerary, etc., and offer exceptional opportunity for an educational visit across the Atlantic. Anyone interested in these tours may obtain additional information from Ray Farris.

Future Is Dominant Note Annual Athletic Banquet

"Pride and capacity to master are athletics' great contribution," said Judge W. J. Brogden speaking here Thursday night at a dinner given by the University of North Carolina athletic council in honor of the coaching staff and the 1929 varsity and freshman football teams. Some 150 athletes, the University's coaches and a number of special guests were present. Judge Brogden was the principal speaker.

Scores don't make a successful season, Judge Brogden told his young audience. It's whether the boys who play the game get this pride and capacity to master the tasks of every day, whatever they may be, that has built civilization.

"Everything that is worthwhile costs us," he went on. The particular price for "this noblest thing in man" he set forth as the capacity to diagnose a problem and solve it; the capacity to co-ordinate powers of body, mind, and person, to see the goal and lay on stoutly and unerringly; and the capacity to stay in the game.

The keynote of the banquet—not to praise past performances, but to lay plans for the future was sounded early by Dr. A. W. Hobbs, faculty chairman of athletics, who presided. In line therewith head coach Chuck Collins, announced plans for intensive winter football work, director of athletics R. A. Fetzer announced a special nightly study period being arranged by and for athletes, and football captain-elect Strud Nash urged members of the team to forget the past and lay a foundation for the future in intensive winter work.

There were short words of praise for the football team from Dr. Foy Roberson, of Durham, and for the coaches from W. A. Blount, also of Durham, and short talks by Phil Jackson for the Monogram Club and Captain Ray Farris for the 1929 football team.

President Harry W. Chase was a guest of honor and briefly paid tribute to Carolina's fine football team and to the high value of athletics, concluding with a plea for athletics to be for men who are in college as students and not as athletes and for just as many men as possible.

Tar Heel Topics

The senate's refusal to grant higher tariff rates on sugar is evidence that even the solons like their sweets.

We advise those State College students who have formed a discussion club to lay off the textile situation if they don't like to be called "crack-brained radicals."

Ray Farris is reported to have met a Chicago gangster and card sharp on his trip to the National Students' Federation congress at Stanford. Shoulda kept quiet about that, Ray. Now you can't get anybody to play cards with you.

A buggy factory was robbed at Reidsville the other day and a considerable sum secured from the safe. The robbery wasn't news in itself, but when you consider it as evidence that buggy factories still exist, and what's more, have safes with cash in them, it enters the front page category.

We opine as how President Carey Dowd's ardent plea that plenty of brickbats be tossed by the delegates will be adequately answered by the results of Oscar Coffin's Newspaper Institute questionnaire on "What is the place of a reasonably honest and independent newspaper in the sort of family fight to be settled, perhaps, on June 7?" and "Are North Carolina newspapers going to allow themselves to be used for rekindling the Smith-Hoover fires of bigotry and ignorance?"

The Methods of David Clark

In the mind of the average American, especially the less enlightened member of the middle classes, the terms "socialist" and "radical" denote wild-eyed and long-haired fanatics who have unpleasant habits of hurling bombs to blow the innocent citizenry into gory bits, advocating free love and anti-Christ, and inciting the workers to abolish all property and property owners by blood and thunder methods. Although the mistaken conceptions of radicalism and socialism are rapidly being corrected by popular education and an enlightened press, they still exist among a considerable proportion of the American public.

A few unscrupulous writers and speakers apply these terms indiscriminately to all persons who offer opposition to the accomplishment of the selfish ends for which they are striving. By associating the odium attached to the terms "socialist" and "radical" with their opponents, unprincipled men attempt to discredit them, to prevent the public from giving consideration to their views.

Excellent examples of the methods employed by such men are afforded by editorials appearing in recent issues of the Southern Textile Bulletin. Through its managing editor, David Clark, the Bulletin has been carrying on a campaign for dismissal of several prominent professors from the University, N. C. C. W. and State College. These professors have exhibited interest in improving conditions in the textile industry of the South, both for the laborer and for the employer.

Among the possible improvements suggested by these expert economists and sociologists have been more efficient distribution of the manufactured product, close cooperation among manufacturers in reducing overproduction, and the encouragement of better feeling between employer and employee. One of the methods advanced for improving employer-employee relationships has been organization of the laborers for collective bargaining, in order that they may be assured of a fair portion of the profits of their labor, thus encouraging them to cooperate with the employers in producing more profits.

With a display of narrow mental vision and unintelligence that would have shamed the most bigoted figures in history, the Southern Textile Bulletin has invoked every unfair method in its attempts to discredit these men. Its favorite procedure in initiating its editorial attacks is to quote a rabid socialist or anarchist. Thus the ordinary reader is alienated from all sympathy with the object of attack from the very beginning, without having considered the least evidence against him.

The following commentary upon Bertrand Russell's address at N. C. C. W. this fall is illustrative of the Bulletin's editorials:

"Bertram Russell was invited to address the young ladies in our State owned and State supported North Carolina College for Women at Greensboro, N. C., and he was introduced with words of eulogy, by a man whose salary is paid by the State of North Carolina.

"They might have gone into some dive in Greensboro and found a moral degenerate and atheist of as low character as Bertram Russell and presented him to the young ladies of North Carolina, most of whom came from decent homes, but such a man would not have had the ability to sell filthy doctrines to the young ladies and therefore, Bertram Russell was paid to come and was introduced as an authority on advanced ideas.

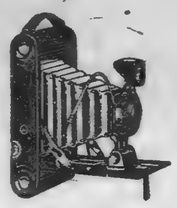
"As a traitor to his country, as an atheist, as an enemy of the sacredness of the marriage relation, as a teacher and practicer of free love, Bertram Russell is par excellent.

"For these reasons and doubtless with the hope that he might win deciples was Bertram Russell presented to the students of North Carolina College for Women."

Intelligent men throughout the world recognize Bertrand Russell as an enemy of hypocrisy, a profound thinker who adheres to ideals of intellectual honesty, happiness and culture. But the moralistic Bulletin describes him as a degenerate, a man of low character, a purveyor of "filthy doctrines," and imputes to the professor who introduced him at N. C. C. W. the motive of "winning deciples" for free love and atheism. We doubt seriously that the Bulletin would have printed a line in criticism of Bertrand Russell if the professor in question had not advanced the idea of labor organization as a possible solution of the southern textile problem.

"Enemy of labor," "crack-brained radical," "twister of plastic young minds"—these are adjectives employed frequently by the Bulletin in its attempts to blacken the reputations of the professors who have incurred its enmity. The editors deny the fundamental rights of American labor, unionization and collective bargaining, and they are attempting to coerce institutions of higher learning into suppression of liberal thought. The Bulletin's editorial attacks upon college professors in this state are classic examples of unfairness, of almost fanatical prejudice and unintelligence. If they were representative of the viewpoint possessed by the majority of southern mill owners, the prospects wuld be black indeed for peaceable solution of the South's industrial problems. But we are confident that most of the mill owners are far too intelligent to concur in the views of a David Clark.

Woodhouse Vs. Williams



We heartily congratulate the Di and Phi upon their decision to sponsor a debate between H. Y. Williams, executive secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, and E. J. Woodhouse, professor of government in the University. In addition to being good speakers, both men are deeply interested in party development in the United States.

The question of an additional party in the United States is a pertinent one at present. The so-called split in the ranks of the Democratic party, occasioned by the recent candidacy of Al Smith for the presidency, has brought the third party issue to the forefront. Unfortunately, however, there is a dearth of information along this line in the public mind. Advocates of the third party plan claim that there should be an additional political faction to hold the balance of power, while the opponents of such a political system are solidly entrenched in the conviction that present political conditions do not call for a triangular type of political organization.

The Daily Tar Heel hopes that the student body and the townspeople, as well, will avail themselves of the opportunity to hear the debate, on the night of February 5, between these two prominent figures in the realm of political thought—Professor E. J. Woodhouse and H. Y. Williams.—J. C. W.

INCIDENT NO. 1

While talking to a few co-ed friends of ours the other day, we chanced to get into a heated argument (hot air being made to permeate the locality). One of our fair friends told of having dared a bona fide preacher to kiss her, alleging that he succumbed to the temptation. Resultant of this narration a spontaneous argument arose in which we failed to hold the balance of power. "Would a preacher kiss a damsel's two lips just because she dared him to?" Such was the question which stimulated the controversy.

The co-eds entrenched themselves solidly on one side of the question, saying, "Of course he would. Any man would. A preacher is a man like all the rest—therefore, he couldn't help it."

The above narrative affords abundant food for speculation. In the first place, it is quite remarkable to note what the average girl thinks of herself. No man could resist a pair of tempting lips, indeed! Of course Adam fell, so the story goes, and set us all a precedent along the line of least resistance; but menfolks in general and preachers in particular have cogitated quite a lot on two lips since Adam's day. This is an age of science, and the magic in lips is largely a matter of superstition. Very few men have to accept all the invitations to osculate which they receive, in order to keep this time-honored activity alive. Girls, your idea about this osculatory matter is derivative of a bit of conceit, which is—no doubt—sponsored by "Mavis" advertisements.

(Writer's note: Of course, our own dame is irresistible; but that is quite another matter.)

We hesitate to tell the following harrowing experience, but we realize that it must be done:

Early in the week we invaded the Bachelor's Club Cafeteria for our evening meal, which is quite the usual thing. Neither to the right nor to the left did we peer, for we seek to pose as quite a modest young man. Our soup and our two crackers we succeeded in maintaining in erstwhile equilibrium upon our tray, the while we partook of huge slices of 'Possum meat, being aided by an accomplished olfactory nerve. But alas, not long was peace and tranquility to be our lot. We were abreast of the teller's fortress witnessing with heart-rending anguish the partial demolition of our quite beautiful meal ticket, when a co-ed graced the realm of our then stunted gaze. Our manly knees weakened, our proud chest sagged, and our soup spilled on the best tie that Pope Crowder ever sold. We hugged our tray desperately to our abdomen, for our two crackers must not be lost. "Mr. W.," quoth the fair charmer, the while eying us with what seemed to be pity, "Do you really believe what you write in your column?" At that even our two crackers fell to the floor with a heart-rending clatter. We were too weak to reply.

INCIDENT NO. 3

We were mildly surprised the other day when a co-ed asked us to run fraternity ratings in our column. The idea in itself made us dizzy, but we immediately resolved to satiate the fair damsel, and after several nights of toil, submit the following with apologies to all poetic style. If further information is desired, we refer our gentle readers to the Poll Tax reports.

The co-ed's favorite is Kappa Zig,
Her prize is Zigma Chi.
She loves to dance with Shaka Leg—
And pet with Geta Thi.

She wears the pin of Sigma Ep.
Upon her boyish form
And thinks a fellow's out of step,
If he's slow to conform.

That's how they rate at Russell Inn,
The Ribbon-Wearers' Row.
And every co-ed wears the pin
Of Sigma Hata, OH!

Conclusion

Everything which man has invented, from his wife to his tobacco, his moustache to his religion, is an attempt to satisfy himself. So let us satisfy everybody by saying that there is another side to the picture. Then the lions shall lie down with the lambs, say "aw revoir," and dispute no more (unless someone doubts what we have said in this work).

MAN, THE EGREGIOUS EGOIST

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I read in the Open Forum colum of yesterday's paper the article entitled "And Athene Was the Goddess of Wisdom." Immediately I became demoniacally enthusiastic, thanked God that all men were not cynical, genuflected with reverent awe before the writer of that letter, and prayed, out of pure goodness of heart, for the soul of the woman-hater.

Mr. Mebane, in his account of the failings of the beskirted sex, evinced the fact that he was not human. At least such was the impression that I received; for all humans are in love. The writer of yesterday's letter is in love; the editor of the Tar Heel is in love; I'm in love; everyone is in love. And in the Spring we'll all be more in love than ever. And no one who is in love could have the heart to toss bouquets of so unsavory a flavor into the lap of any woman (even if he did purchase the bouquets with the approval of Schopenhauer and Rousseau). The writer of yesterday's letter ("An Ordinary Man")—a thorough human being—said that women are not so easily convinced of their inanity. There is a truth which is wholly evident! Even with a sledge-hammer one would be unable to persuade a woman that she was inane. Such is the indubitable courage of the fair sex.

Mr. Mebane agrees with Rousseau (a subtle move) that "Women have, in general, no love of art; they have no proper knowledge of any; and they have no genius." How a man with the intelligence and enlightenment of Mr. Mebane can cling to such a belief is quite beyond my comprehension. May I supplement "An Ordinary Man's list with an aggregation of modern women of renown and ability far above that of the average man? Take a glance (even a shy one, if you wish) at Leonie Adams, Anna Hempstead Branch, Willa Sibert Cather, Fannie Stearns Davis, Florence Kiper Frank, Louise Imogen Guiney, Helen Hall, Georgia Douglas Johnson, Aline Kilmer, Amy Lowell, Grace Fallow Norton, Dorothy Parker, Lola Ridge, G. B. Sterne, Genevieve Taggard, Jean Starr Untermeyer, Edith Wharton, Marya Zaturensky. Not to mention countless co-eds in this very institution (and there is not the semblance of a smile on my lips).

I again quote from "An Ordinary Man": "Beethoven probably did not have an abiding passion for one woman but women were constantly on his mind. So much so, in fact, that he is said to have cried out, 'O God, let me find her who is destined to be mine and who shall strengthen me in virtue'." Well, perhaps Beethoven did have a difficult time in finding a suitable woman (he had to pray for one); but that doesn't prove anything. Probably women didn't like Beethoven.

"An Ordinary Man" asks "who thinks of the precepts of Solomon when a woman's half-parted lips are waiting to be kissed?" Why, I'll wager that if Mr. Mebane approached close enough "the half-parted lips" of a woman that he would immediately (and without regret) retract every statement he made, and against Schopenhauer and Rousseau oppose himself forever!

Mr. Mebane, take my advice; cast aside that cynical attitude which infects the growing youth, profit by these testimonials of ours, open your mind to the universe of facts, and take a course in Sociology.

With all sincerity,
PHILIP DeVILBISS.

SOMETHING ABOUT BOYS

At twenty years or thereabouts
One owns no philosophic doubts:
The mystery of time and space
Is recognized as commonplace:
The simple platitude of God
Dismissed with supercilious nod;
Let those of elemental mind
Study the male and female kind,
Two halves united, they agree,
Alone can form an entity:
Let kings and barbs and minstrels praise
A woman's petty words and ways,
Arousing hopeless aspiration
To vie with Lords of all Creation;
An age-old riddle such as this
Of Jael, Joan, Semiramis,
Is solved in less than half an hour,
With aid from Mr. Schopenhauer.
Let scientists and saints and sages
Garner the wisdom of the Ages:
Then only find, with vain regret,
They scarcely know the alphabet,
And bend their hoary heads in awe
Before some undiscovered Law.
The curse of study is the chance
Of learning all our ignorance.
Why should we use our brains to think
In view of all the printer's ink
Expended in efficient fashion
To curb latent mental passion!
With patent answers, neatly printed,
Before a question need be hinted;
When "fifteen minutes once a day"
Will make us wise in every way,
There's very little left to know—
When one is twenty years or so.

Council's Policy Insures Stabilized Athletics Here

Dr. Foy Roberson, Alumni Representative on Athletic Council, Writes in Alumni Review of System Employed in Selecting University Coaches.

"The present policy of the University Athletic Council," writes Dr. Foy Roberson in the current issue of the Alumni Review in commenting on the organization of the University's coaching staff, "is to hold this organization intact, believing that through the same type of progressive hard work and study of the game our football will improve in the future as it has in the past." The writer is alumni representative on the Athletic Council and during his stay in the University played quarterback on the football team. The article is entitled, "Stabilizing Coaching in University Athletics."

In commenting upon the policy adopted by the Council, Dr. Roberson says, "For years the University of North Carolina operated her teams with no definite coaching policy. Football and baseball were the first sports adopted at Carolina and Hector Cowan, a Princeton man, was the first paid coach in football. The baseball teams were coached by the team captains for a long time. As other sports were introduced, such as track, basketball, boxing, wrestling, cross-country, tennis and golf, they either functioned without coaching or were coached by the person who happened to be interested in introducing the particular sport. While we feel that our coaching system is a pretty closely knit organization at the present time, it has not always been so."

Various types of play were used from 1895 to 1920 when the Fetzer brothers came to Carolina, with Yale, Princeton and Harvard style predominating, with occasionally Dartmouth, Pennsylvania or other styles sandwiched in, states Dr. Roberson. However, with the Fetzers the first definite organized policy of coaching was introduced.

With Bill Fetzer's resignation in 1926 the Athletic Council was faced with the same old problem, he continues. "It was then that the council decided to adopt the system of coaching developed at the University of Notre Dame and carried out so successfully by Coach K. K. Rockne." The reasons of the council for this decision was that "Notre Dame alumni seemed to enter the coaching profession much more often than alumni of the other institutions mentioned above." Thus it was that the council secured Collins, Cerney and Enright for coaches.

In knitting the coaching staff the policy of having a head coach for every sport with the freshman coach under his supervision was adopted. "Under this plan the council does not hope to produce all championship teams, but believes that we shall win our share of victories and get the best out of the material available," he says.

In conclusion the Durham doctor writes: "It is the policy of the council to retain coaches so long as their services are satisfactory and they desire to remain. But under this plan the structure does not hinge on any one person and the loss of any particular person would not cause a collapse of the organization."

Tar Heel Cagers To Resume Practice For Wake Forest Contest

With their next game scheduled for Saturday night, January 25, a rejuvenated Tar Heel team will resume practice Monday afternoon. Because of the remarkably strong offensive and defensive play presented against the Washington and Lee Generals here last Thursday night, the Tar Heel cagers will resume practice with their self-confidence bolstered to a greater degree than heretofore.

Though Carolina was on the tail end of a 19-7 score at the end of the first half, a different team headed by three stalwarts of defense, Marpet, Choate and Dameron, re-entered the fray in the second half and, putting up their best exhibition of the year, held the Generals' scoring machine to a bare eight points, while they themselves scored 10.

Cleland, a clever little floor man, showed up remarkably well in this game, as did the substitute forwards Hutchinson, Slater, and Neiman in the short time each was in the game. Johnny Greene, outstanding frosh basketeer last year, will begin practice with the team next week, and in him Ashmore may find an answer to his prayer for a dependable, consistent forward. Billy Brown, veteran guard, who was called home by the death of his father, is also expected to return the latter part of the week.

Next Saturday night's game in Raleigh between Carolina and Wake Forest will find two teams fighting to retrieve previous losses. The Deacons boast a strong team this year, including Quillen and Mills, football stars.

FENCING PRIZE GOES TO LOWRY

Pair of French Foils Awarded to Student Amateur Fencing Champion.

(By W. W. Taylor)

Walter G. Lowry, a senior from Pineville, N. C., is today the possessor of a fine pair of French foils as a result of his winning the amateur fencing tourney held yesterday afternoon in the Tin Can. This tourney was open to all men who had not had previous training in this sport, and was in every way a success. There was present a large crowd of enthusiastic spectators who watched with intense interest every move of the contestants and applauded every display of ability and sportsmanship.

Lowry defeated Paul H. Rhodes, a junior from Albemarle, in the final round by the score of five touches to four. The contestants were very evenly matched and the outcome of the bout was in doubt until the final touch. Due to the fine showing made by Rhodes, he will also have a pair of foils to hang in his room.

At a conference between Coach Hendlin and Bo Shephard held prior to the tourney, it was virtually decided that the fate of fencing at Carolina would depend upon the number of applicants and the interest shown in the tournament. According to these standards, fencing will be a major sport at the University. Approximately 50 students entered this tournament, the first one of its kind to be held in the south, and about a hundred spectators were on hand to see them contend for the foils as well as the honor of being the amateur fencing champion of the University.

The tourney was sponsored and directed by H. H. Hendlin, who coached each contestant prior to the meet. Members of the varsity fencing club were on hand and assisted Coach Hendlin in managing and judging the matches. Faculty sponsors of fencing, among whom were B. W. Linker and Professor Williams, were also present.

According to Coach Hendlin, due to the great success of the event, plans are expected to be put into effect immediately towards the establishment of fencing as an intramural sport. Coach Hendlin also stated that he hoped to form in the near future the first woman's fencing club ever to be organized in the south. This would in a large measure help to make up for the lack of sports open to the co-eds in this institution, according to Coach Hendlin, and would bring Carolina nearer to the athletic standards set by northern colleges.

BOXERS TO OPEN SEASON TONIGHT WITH GENERALS

Tar Heels Launching Drive for Third Consecutive Southern Conference Title.

The University varsity and freshman boxers left last night for Lexington, Va., where tonight they will open their season against the Washington and Lee mit teams.

The varsity will be launching its drive for a third consecutive Southern Conference, with veterans back for six of seven weights.

The varsity will probably line up as follows: Evan Vaughan, 115 pounds; Harry Sheffield, 125 pounds; Noah Goodridge, 135 pounds; Captain Archie Allen, 145 pounds; John Warren, 175 pounds, and Bill Koenig, heavyweight.

Several men who have been showing unusually well might displace one of the veterans. In this class are S. L. Clark, 125 pounds; Jack Farris, 135 pounds, and Frank Smathers, 160 pounds.

The probable lineup for the freshmen, who are without a bantamweight this year, is Martin Levinson, 125 pounds; Albert Gaylord, 135 pounds; C. C. Jackson, 145 pounds; W. B. Patterson, 160 pounds; P. W. Landis, 175 pounds, and N. M. Wilson, heavy.

Captain Allen, Koenig and Sheffield have been showing unusually well for the varsity and are being looked to to set the pace against the strong Generals. Davis and Vaughan didn't get out for the fall work, but should hit their stride soon.

He remonstrated without perceptible result. One morning a student—not a co-ed—drew forth a shaving outfit, lathered his face, and, peering into a small mirror, leisurely shaved. Said the professor: "You need attend no more classes nor take any more examinations in this class if you choose not to do so . . . . your grade will be 'A'."

Frontiers of telephony—old and new

Yesterday the natural course of telephone expansion was to penetrate the nation's frontiers, building new lines and adding new subscribers.

Today finds many new "frontiers" for telephone expansion — among them the homes of present subscribers. Upstairs and downstairs, wherever needed, additional telephones are being installed. People are learning that there is added utility in convenient communication.

This new field of activity was conceived by commercial development men of the Bell System. Just another example of forward planning to make telephone service more valuable.

Moore Declares State Weekly Newspapers Showing Progress

prise for the committee on arrangements which had feared that the talk of hard times might cut down the attendance.

W. Carey Dowd, Jr., president of the North Carolina Press Association, who presided over the sessions, declared that the institutes had improved from year to year and that this had been "one of the most constructive, instructive and beneficial yet held." He also commended the new management of the Carolina Inn, which was headquarters and the University committee that cooperated with the committee from the Press Association in arranging the program.

Jim Barrett, Brevard publisher, extended to the Press Association an invitation to hold its summer meeting in the mountain town. The editors would be given the honor of being the first guests to occupy the new Franklin hotel there, Mr. Barrett said. The invitation was referred to the executive committee for decision.

There was passed a resolution to invite the National Editorial Association to hold its 1931 convention in Asheville.

A resolution to appoint a committee of five, three from the weekly papers and one member and one non-member of the A. B. C., to make a study of standardization of auditing methods for North Carolina newspapers, was proposed by Lee B. Weathers of Shelby, and adopted.

"Although North Carolina is showing 50 per cent more profits per weekly newspaper than the average for the South Atlantic states and 8.3 percent net profit as against only 5.5 percent for the South Atlantic section, she is still below the average for the United States which, in net profits, is 9.9 percent," Mr. Moore declared.

Mr. Moore gave his reasons for the progress of North Carolina as shown by the survey. Subscription collections have been much better than the average in the South Atlantic states, he said, and a greater amount of commercial printing has been sold at a good margin of profit.

It has also been shown that mechanical work has been done at a cost slightly lower than the average for the South Atlantic section. The payroll is 1.8 percent lower than for the section, although above the average for the country.

"A real subscription building campaign based upon the merits of the papers would be a good thing," Mr. Moore said the survey showed. "The advertising rate is low and apparently requires some attention. North Carolina should be a good field for national advertisers.

"Our study shows that about $10,000 is invested in the average weekly newspaper, and about $12,000 represents the average receipts. The average advertising rate is 26 cents an inch. The return on the investment is 10.8 percent. New subscribers are being added at the rate of 81 per year compared with 105 for the nation.

"Sport pages and local school columns were suggested as excellent methods of increasing circulation. It would be well worth while to publish bridge scores which only one paper in fifty now does," he said.

A brief but inclusive daily study of the accounts in all department is absolutely necessary, accompanied by daily and monthly reports of subscriptions, cash, and advertising, Mr. Meriwether said in his address. For advertising, the old-fashioned ledger is best.

Among others who made talks were Larry S. Kelly, chairman of the country newspaper department of the American Association of Advertising Agents, who urged a circulation audit for the benefit of the national advertisers; General M. D. Bryan, of Bryan, Griffith and Brunson, New York advertising agency, and A. O. Hoefeld, North and South Carolina representative of the Campbell-Ewald Company.

Institute Notes

Around the wall in the ballroom at the Carolina Inn, headquarters for the Newspaper Institute, there are 117 different newspapers, published by the members of the North Carolina Press Association. Of this group, 90 are weeklies and 27 are daily publications.

Arranged alphabetically, the titles of the papers represent the best in North Carolina journalism. Among the most prominent of the dailies are to be found the well-known Raleigh News and Observer, the Asheville Times and the Asheville Citizen, the Charlotte Observer, the Greensboro Daily News, the Fayetteville Observer and the Wilmington Star-News.

The weekly papers, each of which has figured prominently in making the history of the section which it serves, have among their number a group of periodicals whose influence and popularity are the envy of their big brothers of the daily press. In content and appearance they are a source of pride to their publishers, many of whom are attending the institute.

Practically every section of the state that is represented on the roll of the University has its paper in this group.

It was rather surprising to see such an oldish looking man take out one of these newfangled "dry-smoke" holders for his cigarette. But then, he is an unusual character — J. W. Noell, the publisher and editor of the Roxboro Courier.

He and his paper are individual, since for 45 years the Courier and its owner have not been separated. A native of Graham in Alamance county, Mr. Noell took up newspapering as a boy. Now, since the death of his brother, who was joint owner, he still continues to publish one of the best rural weeklies in North Carolina.

Commerce Professor Blames Lack Of Readjustment For Present Textile Troubles

Murchison's Contribution In Quarterly Review Selected By Librarians As One Of Outstanding Articles Of Month.

Failure to adapt itself to changes in industrial environment is responsible for many of the evils in the textile industry, writes Dr. C. T. Murchison, of the school of commerce, in the January issue of the Virginia Quarterly Review. The article analyzes the difficulties of the present situation in the textile industry from the point of view of the mill owners.

The contribution has been selected by the Council of Librarians of the American Library Association as one of the ten outstanding magazine articles of the month. The authors of the other nine are Mark Sullivan, Walter Lippman, Gamaliel Bradford, Henry Cabot Lodge, Chas. A. Beard, Franklin S. Clarke, Orville Welsh, Bernard De Voto, and Philip Marshall Brown.

Dr. Murchison finds King Cotton's ills of a basic nature, lying deep in the structure of the industry itself. Stagnation, he says, is one of the causes of the disease. Cotton manufacturing, viewed as a whole with respect to all its processes from the purchase of the raw material to the sale of the finished product, "has remained practically unchanged for the past fifty years"; whereas other industries "have been forming combinations and mergers of every type, revolutionizing production and marketing methods, and adopting all sorts of devices for control of output, inventory and price."

"The textile industry in the South, no less than throughout the whole country, is itself faced with the necessity of a readjustment that is little less than a life and death struggle," the article states. "The case of the operators of the mills is not the simple one of a man who puts his hands into well-filled pockets to take out more money to meet increased wage demands. A mill must be operated at a reasonable profit or it cannot long be operated at all."

Aside from this obvious lack of unified organization and integration of the processes of the industry, another cause of the ills of King Cotton is the fact that "the wild gyrations of the raw cotton market are demoralizing the industry." It is nothing strange or new for the price of raw cotton to jump from 10 to 40 cents per pound in one year, the University economist points out.

This irregularity of the market makes for difficulty in adjusting proportionally the price of the goods, causing greater risks, greater variations in the productive output, and fluctuations in the price of the finished product. Spontaneous changes in fashions characteristic of the present time tend, also, to rack the nerves of the cotton industry.

"Any real steps toward a permanent abatement of the troubles in Southern cotton mills must begin with a study of the economic conditions that surround the network of industrial enterprises that go to make up the entire textile industry," Dr. Murchison writes.

"Little or nothing," Dr. Murchison states, "could be gained

COUNCIL GIVES PLANS FOR TILT

Annual Carolina-Virginia Radio Debate To Discuss Calendar.

The debate council announces that the second annual Carolina-Virginia radio debate will be broadcast from station WPTF, Raleigh, late in April. This event will take the place of the regular University Hour program of the particular week of its occurrence.

The question of the thirteen months calendar will be the subject of controversy. This particular query was selected because it is the object of widespread discussion in the scientific world at present. The debate is designed to be an educational program on the subject of the "new fangled" calendar.

Last year the University of North Carolina and the University of Virginia met in the first battle of the air in their history. The debate was broadcast from station WRVA, Richmond. J. C. Williams and W. W. Speight represented the Tar Heel institution in the contest.

The present agreement between the two universities calls for an annual radio debate between them. Richmond and some North Carolina town are to be the scene of action on alternate years.

Billy Arthur

BILLY ARTHUR, ONE YARD TALL, IN UNIVERSITY

Former Vaudeville And Radio Star Registered In Department Of Journalism.

Billy Arthur, known to radio and vaudeville audiences as "One Yard of Fun," is the smallest student in the University. Arthur is registered in the Department of Journalism, and is a recent addition to the sports staff of the Daily Tar Heel. He measures a little more than a yard in heighth.

For the past year he has been in vaudeville, where he came to be known as "One Yard of Fun" because of the fact that he is only about a yard tall and plays humorous sketches. With the Keith circuit he played in Atlanta, Richmond, Memphis, and other leading Southern cities. With the Loew circuit he played over the North and in many places in Canada, appearing in New York, Philadelphia, Toronto, Ottawa, and other cities.

For some time Billy was connected with the WBT broadcasting station at Charlotte, appearing in comic sketches and singing.

For four years, 1922-1926, Billy travelled with the Charlotte baseball club as mascot. This perhaps, accounts for his interest in sports. He was sports editor of the Charlotte central high school paper and was connected with the sports section of The Charlotte News.

PLAYS SELECTED FOR PRODUCTION BY PLAYMAKERS

Committee Picks Four Out of Six Plays Submitted; Produced In February.

After the Playmaker reading of new folk plays last night in the Playmaker theatre, a committee composed of Professors Bagby, Caldwell, Paine and Mr. Bruce Bennett, a visitor from the New York State Normal at New Paltz, selected four of the six plays that were read for production in February.

Of the six plays read not one of them was written by a North Carolinian. Each of the authors is from a different state. This reveals the fact that the Playmakers are developing a native American drama rather than just a native state drama.

"Death Valley Scotty" by Milt Wood of Pomona, Calif.; "Hollyhocks" by Joe Fox of Methues, Mass.; "For Auntie's Sake" by John Patric of Snohomish, Wash., and "Suspended Animation" by Kent Creuser of New York City are the plays selected for production. "The Maverick" by Irene Fussler will be revised for future production.

Tryouts for parts in the plays will be held in Gerrard hall tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 and tomorrow evening at 7:30. A wide variety of parts is open. Directors of the plays are very anxious to secure new talent for plays. Every one interested is asked to try out.

REALTOR GIVES PLAN FOR BOARD

H. V. Koonts To Make Proposal For Local Real Estate Board At Institute Meeting.

Henry V. Koonts, Greensboro realtor and secretary and treasurer of the North Carolina Appraisal, will make an effort to have a real estate board organized for Chapel Hill at the Real Estate Institute to be held here in February. Mr. Koonts stated his plan in a letter to Louis Graves, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly. The Institute meeting is to be held under the auspices of the University extension division.

Mr. Koonts' letter answered an article in a recent issue of the Weekly which stated that a number of faculty members were successful realtors. Mr. Koonts explained the meaning of the word "realtor."

"The professors who have made such a success in real estate," he writes, "are to be congratulated, but none of them are realtors in name, as you will see from the enclosed pamphlets and other information. Knowing them as I do, I feel that all of them are realtors in practice and would make ideal timber for a real estate board, and we will endeavor to organize a board in Chapel Hill during the Real Estate Institute in February. Here in Greensboro the newspaper men are honorary members of our board, but for some reason which we are not able to explain we have had a hard time educating them in the use of the word realtor."

Mr. Koonts encloses a sheet giving the definition of realtor, as prepared by Glenn D. Willaman of Los Angeles and accepted by the national organization

Ex-Governor Of Colorado To Discuss Patriotism And Christianity In Addresses

Ex-Governor Sweet

W. E. Sweet To Speak Under Auspices Of Local Y At Methodist Church; To Explain Kellog Peace Pact.

IS NATIONALLY FAMOUS

W. E. Sweet, ex-governor of Colorado, speaks here this morning at the Methodist church at 11 a. m. on the subject of "The New Patriotism." Mr. Sweet will speak again tonight at 8 p. m. on "A Valid Christianity for Today." He is here under the auspices of the local Y. M. C. A.

For the past 25 years Mr. Sweet has been president of the Denver Y. M. C. A. and has taken an active part in all kinds of student and religious work. During the late war he was a divisional secretary in France for the Young Men's Christian Association, and since that time he has been connected with similar activities in that country. Mr. Sweet has presided over the annual Y conference of the Middle west for the last 12 years.

He is a graduate of Swarthmore College, a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity and a member of the Phi Beta Kappa honorary fraternity.

During the years 1922-24 Mr. Sweet was governor of Colorado, and in 1926 was a candidate for the United States Senate. He is a trustee of the University of Denver.

Governor Sweet is a student of the Kellogg Peace Pact and his morning address will be based largely on the implications of this document. In regard to his evening address, Mr. Sweet made the following statement in a letter, "I have some very clear notions about social and economic questions. Under the title, 'A Valid Christianity for Today,' I shall speak with wide freedom on the implications of the gospel as applied to industry. My address will run strictly counter to many accepted ideas of the church people in your state, but if industrial ills are ever cured, they must be cured by those who hold strictly to the principles of the Christian Gospel and who want to see them rigidly applied.

While in the state Mr. Sweet has delivered addresses at State College, Duke, and several other of the larger schools in the state. He has also made visits to Marion and Gastonia in order that he might get first-hand information on the recent disorders in the two places.

McKie Announces Speaking Contest

The annual American Legion State Oratorical Contest for college students will take place in February, according to an announcement from Professor George McKie of the English department. The contest is open to any college student in North Carolina.

In accordance with the plans of the contest committee, headed by Cale K. Burgess of the Raleigh Post, each school will select its representative sometime before the final contest, to be held in Raleigh. Mr. McKie is in charge of arrangements for selecting the University speaker.

A similar contest for high school students will also be sponsored by the Legion. The local post of the organization will conduct the contest in Orange county.

Playmaker Notice

Tryouts for roles in the bill of four new one-act plays to be produced by the Playmakers in February will be held Monday afternoon at 4:30 and in the evening at 7:30 in Gerrard hall. The Playmakers stage will be used at the time for a rehearsal of "The Show-Off." As a wide variety of parts are open, there is abundant opportunity for new players. Everyone interested is asked to be present by the direction.

Glee Club To Sing In Chapel Programs

The University glee club has been invited by Dean F. F. Bradshaw to appear in three successive chapel programs, prior to its entry in the February contest at Greenville.

H. S. Dyer, glee club director, has accepted, stating that he is glad of the opportunity for the club to sing before audiences, believing that several such appearances are greatly beneficial to the group.

Buccaneer Notice

There will be a meeting of the Buccaneer staff, art and editorial, in the Buccaneer office in the basement of Alumni building, Monday night at 7 o'clock. Important that all members of the staff be present.

Tar Heel Topics

Prohibition's tenth anniversary was observed Thursday. No, we didn't say celebrated.

Evidently a few Tar Heel columnists and Readers' Opinions contributors have been given the gate by their lady loves recently.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen is fighting for the right to occupy a seat in the House. No wonder she's fighting; consider her parentage.

The make-up man who ran pictures of Louis Graves and Oscar Coffin on the same front page must have been in a morbid state of mind.

William Hand Brown, State College's praying prof who spent the holidays in "humiliation and prayer" because his class in electrical distribution made an average of 12½ on the examinations for the first term, has added the editor of the State Technician to the list of those for whom he seeks the mercy of God. No use, Prof. He's already lost or he wouldn't be a newspaper editor.

"No Wife-Beaters in Faculty," "Methodist Church Plate-Passers Ended the Year Without Stealing a Cent," "Convention Half Over And Carey Dowd Is Still Sober"—headlines from the issue of the Chapel Hill Weekly which Louis Graves distributed at the Newspaper Institute to show what a front page might look like if the papers played up the good and not the bad things men do. We'd hate to think of the jam Mr. Graves would be in if someone demanded substantiation of those heads.

Duke And Carolina To Smoke The Peace Pipe

During the past few days considerable impetus has been given to the movement for increased amity between Duke and Carolina students. Invitations have been issued for a meeting of representative students of both institutions, which will be held the latter part of this week. Plans for increasing cooperation and friendliness among the undergraduates will be developed at this meeting.

Several weeks ago the Tar Heel suggested that the "hate rivalry" between Carolina and Duke is the heighth of folly; this suggestion was followed by a series of editorials urging that concerted efforts be exerted to replace this inane jealousy with mutual good will. We have observed with keen interest the reception accorded the series of editorials. On the University campus the response has been rather gratifying, although a few sophists have expressed profound scorn of the entire idea.

Especially gratifying has been the response on the part of the Duke Chronicle and several of the state's leading newspapers and magazines. Editor Jake Lippard of the Chronicle has been most generous and enthusiastic in his advocacy of better Duke-Carolina relations. In a recent issue of his paper he suggests an inter-university banquet. Excerpts from the editorial follow:

"Now that the football season has closed and the majority of college students have come down to Earth, we are desirous of seeing action taken on a proposed era of good feeling between Duke and Carolina. The Daily Tar Heel and The Chronicle, in its weekly way, were first to acclaim the possibility of a peace pact between the neighboring universities, Carolina and Duke. Several leading North Carolina newspapers and magazines marveled at the apparent amity between the publications of the two schools and the unprecedented willingness of the lion and the lamb, as it were, to lie down tobether. Editor Holder, of the Tar Heel, has devoted a number of well written editorials advocating such a movement. Carolina is ready to bury the hatchet of inane jealousy; The Tar Heel suggests that the interment be held at a Duke-Carolina banquet sponsored by the student governments of each institution. The Chronicle agrees with The Tar Heel.

"At present students of either school cannot fully realize the benefits, both immediate and ulterior, that might grow out of a determination to maintain gentlemanly relations between Duke and Carolina. The combined resources of the two schools can attract the attention of the whole southland. . . .

"The continuance of past superciliousness on the part of both student bodies will inevitably result in the severing of athletic relationship between the two institutions. Witness the V. M. I. and Washington and Lee segregation. Neither Duke nor Carolina can afford to divorce on athletic grounds for obvious reasons. Henry Kistler, captain of the 1929 Blue Devil football team, is of the opinion that if the Duke-Carolina bitterness continues, athletic isolation will surely follow. We could not bear to see this come to pass.

"We suggest that the senior classes or the student governments of both universities make some definite arrangements to stage an inter-university banquet such as Carolina has suggested. Duke seniors might consider the possibilities of the get-together at its next class meeting. At least, we should show the state papers that we are sincerely interested in smoking the peace pipe."

An inter-university banquet between Duke and Carolina students would provide the foundations of a general attitude which would render impossible such exhibitions of illogical and dangerous animosity as the near-serious outbreak at the game last December 7. The psychological moment for insuring Duke-Carolina good will is apparently at hand.

Russia Plans For the Future

In the talk by Mr. Villard Thursday morning one could not help but be tremendously impressed by the picture of the Russia of the future as The Nation editor painted it. If present plans are carried out the working man's lot will be a comfortable and happy one. Everything will be done to make the working day as short as possible, recreational facilities are planned for all the factories, the sick and injured will be ably cared for, and the position of the ordinary laborer will be the first consideration in the plans of industry.

If the rosy future planned by Russian leaders is made a reality, then the working man will have every advantage of art, literature, culture, and education that the privileged classes in America now enjoy. Illiteracy has been reduced already from 75 per cent under the old government to 50 per cent under the new. Yet we doubt the assertion of the leaders that at the completion of the five year program of expansion illiteracy will be gone from Russia.

In the Russia of the future the economic structure will not be burdened by high salaried executives who draw a fat pay check and do no work. Workingmen who have proved their worth are being given positions as superintendents of factories and directors of production. No salary over $112.50 will be paid in Russia. If such a plan works, then certainly greater happiness for the average man who will be on the same level as every one else will result.

But Russia is yet in the experimental stage, and just entering upon the greatest program she has yet planned. If the wisdom of her leaders carries her through her expansion successfully, then, as Mr. Villard says, every nation of the world will be profoundly affected. We may believe that if the principles upon which the Russian government are founded prove sound and workable, other nations will adopt them. The world will look on with keen interest the working out of this great experiment in government.—J. D. M.

THE JONES-DURANT DEBATE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In the January Forum appears a debate between Howard Mumford Jones and Will Durant, the query being: "Are Outline Books Softening Our Brains?"

It was really no debate. The redoubtable Jones, writing for the affirmative, slashed unmercifully at outlines in general, The Story of Philosophy in particular. Durant presented himself as a lion, not willfully ferocious, but fighting to give his master, the public, satisfaction of its lust for blood. After presenting himself as such, however, he quickly shrunk except in his own estimation (which he bolstered with self-thrown bouquets) to the size of a lamb. Mumford skinned the lamb and there stood

The colyum controversy on the ladies, God bless 'em (or otherwise, according to your present standing with the One and Only) is assuming proportions. Enough fuel from various sources has been added to the fire. Our only contribution will be to maintain a discreet silence, thus by example adding one more rebuke to those already handed the suffering, but apparently still cheerful, fair sex.

Oscar, the gentleman who rides the nag at the top of this column o' print, informs us that he is much bothered with the ringing of the bell in Old South every night at 10:15. He says that he at last found out what it is for—to warn the co-eds that 10:30, the time for being in their rooms, is approaching. What is worrying him is the fact that the bell is rung again at 10:45, fifteen minutes after all good little girls are safely home and after the door is presumably locked at Spencer. What, asks Oscar, who may have gotten his facts wrong, is the idea of that?

Just before Christmas a list of names was sent out from Jimmie Williams' office to all the merchants in town. The merchants were warned that the gentlemen included in this directory were on the Bad Check list, and were accordingly to use their own discretion in dealing with them for Christmas merchandise. The list, we are told, was a veritable Who's Who of campus celebrities, almost a political guide of office-holders and well-known men about college. And the columns of the Tar Heel will be opened to political gossip about the impending Spring campaign. Almost without exception the merchants are complaining of hard times and lack of money. Here at last is a chance for them to do a little business.

Bridge scores, said W. Clement Moore at the annual session of the Newspaper Institute here, make interesting news and should be played up as much as possible. The editors of the Tar Heel are considering publishing the scores of a few of the feverish games played hereabouts during Exam Week. Thursday's, Friday's, and Saturday's issues will be entirely given over to them. And the results of a few hundred games will probably be left out at that.

A movement is on foot to start a trolley-car system in Chapel Hill. It was instituted Friday by a number of unfortunate co-eds in evening dress and slippers. Escorted by poverty-stricken students who do not own cars to the Pi Phi dance at the Gorgon's Head lodge, they were forced to walk back in the rain. It is understood in local quarters that professors who find it difficult to catch their 8:30 classes are backing the movement with enthusiasm, supported also by Local No. 349 of the Durham Traction Union.

College Papers Of Duke And Carolina Commended

The Tar Heel and The Chronicle, student papers of the University of North Carolina and of Duke University, respectively, indicated in recent issues a desire to bring about a better feeling between these two universities. Why not the alumni and all others interested in these two institutions join the students in this most praiseworthy effort? These two universities—within ten miles of each other—are sure to be closely allied and intimately engaged in a common task as co-operative efforts multiply in the years ahead. The friends of each should certainly strive to see that good will is cherished and that every possible effort is made to prevent friction and ill feeling. No good can come of antagonism and strife.

Intense rivalry is to be expected in all sports, but the spirit of true sportsmanship should be dominant. This does not in any way rob of loyalty and devotion to one's own institution: it really makes for a loyalty and devotion that wins admiration in defeat as well as in victory. Carolina and Duke must get on side by side. They will grow and expand with the years. Each will number its devoted followers by the thousands. Students and patrons of each are now in every church and community. Each year the number will increase. Thus Carolina and Duke are becoming so interlinked in heritage, in patronage and in effort as to make most unseemly any spirit other than friendly rivalry. The utmost mutual good will should prevail.

This does not imply that these institutions are to be similar. Indeed they are expected to be different. Though it is hard for

Tar Heels To Face Stiff Grid Schedule Next Year

To Play Ten Games, Eight With Conference Teams; Five Games Carded For Kenan Field.

MEET TENNESSEE

The University of North Carolina announced yesterday an ambitious 1930 football schedule that shows ten games, eight with Southern Conference opponents, and three on consecutive weekends with such Southern leaders as Georgia, Tennessee, and Georgia Tech.

The completed schedule had been held up for several weeks while dates were juggled, and was released yesterday by Charles T. Woollen, Graduate Manager of Athletics.

The Tar Heels, who blazed away for 346 points and nine victories in 10 games last fall, will face the same foes except that Tennessee will replace South Carolina.

There will be the usual five games at home and five away. The Tar Heels will appear in Kenan Stadium against Wake Forest, Maryland, Georgia Tech, Davidson and Duke.

The Wake Forest game will open the season, according to custom, and the Thanksgiving battle with Virginia and the flanking Davidson and Duke games will occupy the same positions. The other games have been shifted slightly as to time.

The V. P. I. game will come in Maryland's old second place, with Maryland moved down to third, where Georgia Tech was last year. Georgia will be met fourth again. Tennessee will be slipped into V. P. I.'s old fifth place. Georgia Tech will be sixth, where N. C. State was, and State will be met seventh in South Carolina's old place. Davidson, Virginia and Duke will round out the card in usual order.

The complete schedule follows:

Sept. 27—Wake Forest at Chapel Hill.
Oct. 4—V. P. I. at Blacksburg.
Oct. 11—Maryland at Chapel Hill.
Oct. 18—Georgia at Athens
Oct. 25—Tennessee at Knoxville.
Nov. 1—Georgia Tech at Chapel Hill.
Nov. 8—N. C. State at Raleigh.
Nov. 15—Davidson at Chapel Hill.
Nov. 27—Virginia at Charlottesville.
Dec. 6—Duke at Chapel Hill.

by a combination of spinners only, unless it approaches the monopoly point which would be clearly undesirable. Likewise nothing could be gained through a similar combination of weavers, if it continued to buy its yarns in a competitive market and dispose of its products as grey goods. Combination, to produce stability and efficiency, must embrace all the functions which extend from the purchase of the raw cotton to the final disposal of the finished products to large retailers, garment manufacturers, and industrial consumers."

To accomplish this end, the formation of holding companies alone is not sufficient. A sensitive and perfectly balanced relationship between all the operations must be established. "It requires a complicated, mechanized, mass-producing organization which can supply an ever-changing product to an ever-whimsical consumer with all the delicacy and precision of the handicraftsman — in short, a complete union of the arts and sciences."

CLASS A CAGE SERIES BEGINS

Three Teams In Each Section Retain Clean Slates; Durham Leads.

The first week of play in the class A high school basketball championship series has been concluded with Durham, Wilmington and Raleigh leading in the eastern league, and Asheville, Charlotte, and Greensboro heading the list of winners in the West.

Sponsored by the High School Athletic Association of North Carolina, the class A conference is made up of the 14 largest high schools in the state, with seven schools in each section. The class A conference standings are determined on a percentage basis, the winner in each district meeting here in a final contest for the state championship.

The general conference, composed of the smaller schools, will be organized at an early date, according to Mr. E. R. Rankin, of the Extension Division. An elimination series will be arranged to determine the winners in this group.

Results of the games for the past week in the eastern conference are as follows: Jan. 9, Durham 35, Rocky Mount 12; Jan. 10, Wilmington 45, Wilson 12; Jan. 17, Raleigh 33, Wilson 17; Durham 29, Goldsboro 10; Rocky Mount 51, Fayetteville 20.

The standings of the teams in this group:

Team	Won	Lost	Pct.
Durham	2	0	1.000
Raleigh	1	0	1.000
Wilmington	1	0	1.000
Rocky Mount	1	1	.500
Goldsboro	0	1	.000
Fayetteville	0	1	.000
Wilson	0	2	.000

Results and averages in the western league are given below: Jan. 10, High Point 49, Gastonia 25; Jan. 14, High Point 38, Salisbury 30; Jan. 17, Charlotte 35, Salisbury 17; Asheville 40, Gastonia 13; Greensboro 14, High Point 12.

Says Us

by
Browning Roach

These larger high schools don't seem to have any monopoly on this basketball business. Greensboro, boasting one of the biggest high schools in the state, evidently miscalculated the strength of its opponent when it took on Candor high last week. The Candor boys poked out their necks and administered a sound drubbing to the Gate City fellows. The Montgomery county lads manifestly failed to be impressed by the superior rating of the Greensboro outfit in state circles. Incidentally this Candor quint has won 13 games in a row this season. The small teams are giving the big ones plenty to do to look after their position as leaders on the court. The Chapel Hill five also has a perfect record with four wins and no defeats.

You men who have failed to see the Tar Heelettes in action have been missing some real exhibitions of female athletics. The co-eds have had a little tough luck and have dropped the last three games. The contests with the Chapel Hill frails and the Durham Independents were lost by a single point, so it can't be said that the superiority of scores of their opponents was anything to climb up on a rail and cackle about.

Give long dresses a little more time and Carolina men will be flocking over to Bynum gym to see what co-ed really looks like. It has been closed season in the Arboretum so long that some of us are getting a little hazy on the subject of feminine anatomy.

Some of these co-eds have been getting their eye on the ole iron doughnut and sinking them in with fair consistency. Wells, Thacker, Lee and Johnson and two or three of the Curry—and Currie—tribe have been displaying all kinds of form on the floor, thanks to Coach Carl Farris and the official uniforms. Varsity goal-tossers might gather a few points on the game by a look-in into the Co-ed basket ball situation. No disparagement meant in connection with the success of your cohorts in ringing them up, Mr. Ashmore, but a few expert goal-tossers would not go amiss.

The Tar Heels have been showing some flashy spurts of guarding, dribbling, and occasional accuracy in long shots; but a speedy attack to break through the opposing man-to-man defense has been rather lacking. However, the defense lined up by some of Carolina's opponents this season has been practically air-tight, and to dash through it with any consistency would have taken something more nearly approaching conference predominence than the Tar Heels give promise of. While we do not hesitate to predict a successful season when it comes to the number of games won and lost, still it is somewhat against our conscientious belief to forecast a repetition of the records of '22, '24, '25 and '26. Carolina may turn out to be a dark horse yet, but so far the color of the animal is a rather dull gray.

S. P. E. LEADS FRATERNITIES IN BASKETBALL

Nineteen Teams Maintain Clean Slate; Aycock And Steele Lead Dorms.

(By Hank Anderson)

Results of the first week's play in the Intramural Basketball league show that 19 out of 43 teams entered in the league have no defeats registered. Although most of the teams have played only one game, some have completed three scheduled meets. S. P. E. leads the Fraternity League by virtue of 3 wins and no defeats, but they are closely followed by Phi Sigma Kappa and Sigma Nu with 2 wins and no defeats to their credit. Ten other fraternities can boast of clean records. Aycock and Steele are the outstanding members of the Dormitory league with three and two wins and no defeats respectively.

The number of entries in the Basketball league is maintaining the interest shown in Intramural Activities which began with the Tag Football league last quarter. The Intramural department stated that the same number of points are given for the winning of a basketball and baseball league as in the tag football league. Fifty points are given to each entry, 50 to each league winner, and 50 for each campus title. Ten points are to be deducted for each game forfeited after the first game, thus giving those that have already forfeited one game a chance for their 50 points for entering the league as well as a chance for a league or campus title.

Tar Heelettes Continue Streak

The co-ed scoring rally in the second half failed by one point to overcome the eight-point lead that the Durham Independents held at the half, and the Tar Heelettes lost their third basketball game of the season Friday night in Bynum gymnasium, 37-36.

Playing their best game of the season before a crowd of one hundred people, mostly boys, the Tar Heelettes fought gamely to the final whistle, but the early lead of the Durham aggregation was too much to overcome.

Atwater of the Independents repeatedly sank long shots from all sections of the floor to lead her team in scoring with 20 points. Newson, sensational Durham forward, counted for 13 points.

For the co-eds, Lee, playing a brilliant and fast game, seemed to have little difficulty in connecting with the basket and rang up 18 points to lead the Tar Heelettes' scoring machine. Thacker played her usual scintillating game and counted for 12 markers.

The game was fast throughout, with both teams taking many chances in the last few minutes of play.

The lineups:

Carolina (36)		Durham (37)
Lee (18)	F.	Atwater (20)
Johnson (6)	F.	Newson (13)
Thacker (12)	F.	Gray (4)
Curry	G.	Holman
Hill	G.	Reams
Currie	G.	Wilson

Substitutes: for Carolina, Underwood for Curry, Curry for Underwood, Underwood for Hill; Durham, Yarborough for Reams.

Football Squad To Begin Winter Practice Tomorrow

(By Billy Arthur)

Football in all its glory arrives in Chapel Hill tomorrow afternoon to resume its place as ruler over Kenan stadium. Coach Collins, Tar Heel mentor, arrived last Sunday and has spent the past week in preparation for the winter football proceedings which begin tomorrow. He issued orders to distribute material yesterday, and so far approximately a hundred or so men have received equipment. It was estimated that approximately 150 men will answer the call of the pigskin.

Monday will be spent in dividing the squad into teams. It is believed that there is sufficient power to form five or six teams instead of the usual four. Following the division of the squad, the boys will endure a light workout. The process of loosening up will consume the first part of the week, with the scheduled "round robin" games following twice a week thereafter.

Captain-elect Strud Nash, Johnny Branch, Jimmy Magner, Rip Slusser, Wyrick, Fenner, Lipscomb, Hudson, and the remainder of the reserve strength of the Heelites are expected to show great form.

This winter football session will afford Coach Collins and his assistants, Coaches Enright, Cerney, Pritchard and Fetzer, opportunity to pick the right man to fill the shoes of those who will be lost to the team for the coming year.

Material for the ends is strong. Parsley, Brown, Tabb, Nelson, Reid, Morris and Johnson will help Julian Fenner take care of the ends. As for tackles, the frosh come to the aid with McDade and Sharkey, while Underwood will make some one do some tall scrapping to keep him out. Dortch, Thompson and Bill Collins, brother of Coach, constitute the remainder of the tackle material.

Almost all of the flock of guards that were on the frosh team will be on hand to help Fysol, McIver, Crew and Hudson handle the situation.

Ned Lipscomb and Gilbreath will be ably assisted by Tom Alexander plus nearly a half dozen from the freshman team.

These men will be the backbone of the teams that face each other on the sod down at Kenan field. Coach Collins is contemplating a more successful winter football season than has ever been on the Hill. Those expecting to take part in the session report for practice Monday.

Chapel Hill High Wins Over Wilson

Chapel Hill high defeated Alexander Wilson high school at Graham Friday evening 17 to 11. Council, of Chapel Hill, and Myrick of Alexander Wilson tied for scoring honors with 9 points each. This is the fourth consecutive victory for the Hill boys.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Francis Foster Bradshaw

(F. J. M.)

Editor's note: This is the second of a series of thumbnail sketches of prominent University men.

FRANCIS FOSTER BRADSHAW. Eighteen years old . . . ! with but 5½ years of regular schooling behind him . . . he entered the University of North Carolina in the same year as the Titanic disaster . . . for three years he roomed with one Bob House . . . later to become executive secretary . . . they haven't rid themselves of the habit of "bulling" yet . . . both of them played mouth-harps . . . but they don't now . . . although Francis . . . who was once called Friscoe by Frank Graham . . . his only nickname . . . can play the guitar . . . he knows two selections on it . . . his children like it . . . his favorite musician is Wagner.

A native of Columbia, South Carolina . . . raised in Hillsboro . . . where his father is still the Presbiterian minister . . . he loved to steal the eggs of birds . . . at one time he had 60 various kinds of eggs . . . there are only slightly more than 70 in the entire state . . . he's still proud of his collection . . . if his family hadn't moved around so much, he would probably still have the eggs. . . . He also went about picking up shells and rocks. These boyhood hobbies have developed into . . . an appreciation of golf . . . a rabid aversion to bridge . . . and an unconscious habit of whistling.

He likes to have a leisurely meal . . . but with the telephone in the dining room . . . he is often interrupted by calls . A southerner, and descended from southerners . . . he has foreign tastes . . . chop-suey approaches Nirvana for him . . . he learnt that dish while attending Columbia University, in New York (U. S. A.) . . . cheese and beer make him smile . . . carefully cooked calves-liver tickles his palate . . . he cleans his teeth after every meal . . . likes to eat in restaurants . . . misses them in Chapel Hill.

He denies that he has one favorite color . . . but green is a prominent note in his attire . . . someone once saw green pajamas that belonged to him . . . Mrs. Bradshaw doesn't like him in brown . . . she directs his purchases of clothes . . . what she buys, he wears to "death." He dresses carefully . . . and likes to be well groomed . . . takes plenty of time for dressing . . . eats breakfast at 8:30 on week-days . . . and is home for dinner at 1 p. m. . . . until recently, he used to come for dinner at all kinds of hours, upsetting the routine . . . but now he's doing well.

He's very systematic . . . he runs the furnace by a thermometer . . . and always has the house at 70 degrees . . . is said to be a better fireman than his next door neighbor . . . although never bothering with household economy, he often suggests various systems of management. . . . He never goes about the house in slippers or shirt-sleeves . . . always reads in the same rocking chair, occasionally smoking a pipe . . . sometimes he reads aloud to his wife . . . sometimes they read together . . . both are very fast readers . . . he is an excellent photographer . . . and has an extremely complicated machine . . . tints his snapshots . . . he dislikes to see his wife reading such "trash" as Cosmopolitan and Good Housekeeping magazines . . . his taste runs to the scientific or philosophical . . . and wants his wife to cast an eye upon books dealing with psychology.

Psychology is a theme that often comes into prominence in his life . . . in his dealings with students, he exercises psychology . . . in his relations with his children, he trains them psychologically and is a great believer in it . . . Mrs. Bradshaw tends more to the old fashioned "be good, or I'll send you to bed, children" . . . he dislikes people who are intolerant . . . or have, psychologically speaking, the Jehovah complex . . . not so many years ago, he expressed the wish to be a king of a small country . . . he hasn't said that recently . . . He was once an assistant in the biology lab . . . and always had a hankering for medicine.

On Sundays, the entire household arises one-half hour later than on week-days . . . at 9:00 he breakfasts . . . at 9:30, he wends his way to the Presbyterian church, where he is Sunday School superintendent . . . he likes the old-fashioned observance of the Sabbath . . . and believes that it is good for one to attend church . . . nothing delights him more than to have the students drop in on him informally . . . and he is a very sympathetic listener to all their troubles . . . he likes teaching and explaining as well as administrative work . . . and does teach philosophy in addition to his Deaning of the students.

He's beginning to believe that his hats are jinxed . . . he has lost four this year.

The first impression that Miss Marjory Moxley, now Mrs. Bradshaw, had of F. F. B. was that of a lieutenant with red hair. . . . At Louisville, where he was stationed in the army, he had a difficult time making a decision . . . he didn't know whether or not to remain in the army . . . he liked it tremendously . . . and approved of the R. O. T. C. when it was here.

He goes irregularly to the motion pictures . . . his favorite picture this year was "Cocoanuts" with the Four Marx Brothers . . . he also likes comedies on the "legit." . . . Although he has never made a long sea trip, he loves the sea . . . would rather be at the seashore than at the mountains . . . raves about Nantucket and Wrightsville . . . and would like to fish more than he does . . . some day, he hopes to make the long sea voyage to Europe . . . he enjoys traveling in trains . . . and sleeps in a lower berth in the winter time . . . an upper berth in the summer . . . member of Phi Beta Kappa . . . Golden Fleece . . . Gimghoul.

Old Road to Be Marked

The old road from Raleigh, over which detachments of Johnston's Confederate Army and Sherman's Federal army marched to Chapel Hill in 1865 is to be marked by some suitable standard. Part of the cost will be borne by the University, part by the U. D. C., and part by the state historical commission. A swath through the woods near the A. W. Hobbs home in Glandon Forest shows where the old road ran. It passed by the cemetery and on westward. The marker will probably be placed somewhere near the Graham Memorial.

Dr. J. Lee Richmond, 72, one of the first great baseball stars of the country, and lately dean of men of the University of Toledo, died recently from a stroke. In 1880, when he was the highest paid pitcher in organized baseball, Richmond pitched a game against the Cleveland Nationals in which no batter reached first base.

"However," observes Arthur Brisbane, "we have plenty of gold left." What do you mean we?—Macon Telegraph.

Start on Hard Courts

Athletic Authorities Hope to Have Them Completed by Mid-April

The University athletic authorities have authorized the construction of four all-weather courts, and J. F. Kenfield, tennis coach, expects to have them completed by the middle of April if he has a fairly good break on weather. The hard surface is to be laid on the lower-level courts nearest the dormitories east of the campus.

A. D. Browne, alumnus of the University, now director of physical education at Peabody College in Nashville, will come here for a week to superintend the application of the final coat of oil. Mr. Browne built the Peabody courts which Coach Kenfield went to inspect recently. He had a good deal to do with working out the mixture which makes this type of all-weather court so much less costly than the more familiar cement.

First a foundation of crushed stone is put down. This is treated with gravity flux oil poured on while hot. Before the oil cools cedar sawdust is spread upon it, and then the mixture is pressed down by a heavy roller. This produces a surface which has a "give" to it—something akin to cork. Not only is it cheaper than cement, but, Mr. Kenfield thinks, is much better. The lines are painted on in white.

The cost of upkeep is almost nothing. The courts can be played on within a few minutes after a hard rain. And the composition is not affected at all by frost.

an American College to be different from all the rest, some do make the effort. Duke University and the University of North Carolina are expected to be much unlike, but this does not justify an unseemly spirit of antagonism.

Many good and true Methodists are loyal to each of these universities, and some are deeply devoted to both. The Methodist church is committed to the local church and every religious undertaking at Chapel Hill, the same as in church and religious work at Durham. Both institutions are fine fields for religious work. In the course of years these two great universities are destined to make this section one of the notable student centers of America—and thus become a center of world-power. Why should not the Methodists, the followers of the scholar of Oxford, be greatly interested in Carolina?

We would insist that every encouragement be given the students and that all friends of both universities, as well as all well-wishers of education, do their utmost to make secure the best of fellowship and good will between Carolina and Duke. Engaged in a common task and having to do so largely with youth of a common heritage and a similar destiny, we are unable to see any justification for the show of an unseemly spirit by the followers of these two universities.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

revealed not the wolf but the ass.

Seriously, Durant submitted not one logical reply. He became angry and dealt in personalities. College professors, he said, were a dry, obscure lot, who, because they had worked for their knowledge, were jealous of it, and therefore antipathetical toward him and his "humanizers" who had simplified the professors' secrets and were "giving" them away to laymen.

In his rebuttal, Mumford casually laughed, named some human professors. H. M., however, made a serious slip in this rebuttal. If he will glance over its second paragraph, he will note that he has left the implication that it is the drawing power of the professors that accounts for the large increase in college enrollment. That this is in the main untrue, I think the penetrating mind of Jones will immediately see. However, this apparent flaw may have had its purpose. In proving how devastating was the effect on the brain produced by outline books, perhaps Mr. Jones was simply giving a personal example.

EDGAR ADAMS NEELY, JR.

NONCHALANT ENGINEERS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

As Will Rogers would say, this here engineering school is getting right high-toned and culturous. Or in the more elegant phraseology of the adherents to the liberal arts idea, culture has become the very essence of the engineering curriculum. The courses in English that are required of each and every engineer are fast converting the entire school into gentlemen of such polish, culture, and sophistication as to make them the envy of every aspiring A.B. student. No more can social climbers of that school gaze with ineffable scorn at their unenlightened brethren in the engineering division. No more will students of the reformed school stoop to take issue with those so blind as to say the engineers are hopeless in a social way. Men of letters all. Business letters, sales letters, letters of this and that no end.

We won't go so far as to say there is anything in the rumor that one of these English courses follows a text of female authorship, though there is every evidence that this is the case.

The circumstance never arises where an engineer is forced to light a Murad. Their easy nonchalance is the result of much careful training in public speaking.

No student may take these courses without the full quota of technical courses. Register early and avoid the rush.

A ENGINEER.

At The Carolina

When a beautiful girl counters a legitimate proposal of marriage tendered by a handsome young man with such a statement as "I'll see thee hanged," things are bound to happen.

And happen they do in "Taming of the Shrew" which comes to the Carolina theatre as the feature attraction Monday and likewise brings Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks to the screen together for the first time.

From the opening shot to the final fadeout, "Taming of the Shrew" is just one long, glorious laugh. From the first moment gay but stubborn Petruchio (Douglas Fairbanks) lays eyes upon his bride-to-be, the stormy, tempestuous Katherine (Mary Pickford) there ensues a battle of wits and wills. Loving her fiery temper, and intrigued by her defiant remark: sets about unceremoniously to tame the Shrew. To make things more complicated, he employs the very tactics that have won her the cognomen of "wildcat" throughout all Italy. How she resists, and how the ultimate solution is worked out could only be told by Shakespeare.

In this screen story of the Bard's immortal comedy, brought to the screen for the first time in the history of motion pictures by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, every bit of essential dialogue, comedy and striking situation has been left intact throughout production. This was accomplished by Sam Taylor, the man who directed "Taming of the Shrew" and, before that, "Coquette," which established Miss Pickford as one of the greatest emotional actresses the screen has ever seen.

Taylor succeeded in retaining all the humanness which characterizes Shakespeare's works, and yet enhanced the scope of the play through the medium of the motion picture camera.

Critics who have seen the "Taming of the Shrew" hail it as an achievement in sound-recording, thanks to the innovations supplied by David Forrest, who was responsible for the microphone work on "Coquette."

Among the featured players who support the two stars in the comedy are Joseph Cawthorn, Clyde Cook, Dorothy Jordan, Geoffrey Wardwell and Edwin Maxwell.

of realtors. Professors who want to qualify as members of the new board in Chapel Hill will do well to read this carefully so that they may know what is expected of them. Also the editors and reporters of the Greensboro News and the Greensboro Record should read and memorize it, so that Mr. Koonts will no longer be able to say that they do not use the word realtor properly. Here is the definition:

"The Realtor is a modern business man of progress who belongs to and works for his local, state and national associations. He lives up to a Code of Ethics, abides by Arbitration decisions, is qualified to make appraisals based on a statewide standard, reads and supports his official magazine, does business with signed listings on state-approved standard forms, observes the standard schedule of fees, and boosts for his state and for his home town. He brings in newcomers, thereby enriching the merchant, the banker, the worker and the farmer in his community, and increasing the wealth of his state.

"He diversifies his income resources, buys and sells land, manages and leases property, makes appraisals, conducts a rental and exchange service, arranges loans, writes insurance, invests in and owns real estate himself. He is educated in the school of experience and in standard real estate courses.

"He safeguards real property against unjust taxation and represents the home-owner at the city hall, the courthouse, in the legislature and in congress. He conducts a well-manned, orderly, business-like office, and, upholding staunch integrity, employs upright salesmen, thereby being a true adviser to the investor. He helps his salesmen by having them enroll in Realtor organizations.

"He is a subdivider who foresees the contented citizen in a home of his own, who improves wisely, making good on his promises, who opens to the community a well-planned and a well-balanced development.

"The Realtor is one whose services in the interest of his client do not cease when he has earned and received his fee, who profits most because he serves unselfishly, who is kindly and God-fearing, a prophet of good-will and optimism, and above all, a true citizen and a gentleman. May he live long and prosper!"

GOVERNOR SWEET IS HEARD ON THE NEW PATRIOTISM

Former Chief Executive Of Colorado Says That War Is Subject To Will Of Man.

MAN ABLE TO PREVENT IT

William E. Sweet, former governor of Colorado, spoke Sunday morning at 11:00 at the Methodist church on the subject of "The New Patriotism." Mr. Sweet's address was heard by approximately 800 students and townspeople. He spoke again Sunday night on the subject of "A Valid Christianity for Today."

Mr. Sweet began by saying that there is a new patriotism in America which does not consist of marching in battalions and wearing uniforms. "The old belief that war was inevitable," continued the speaker, "kept all nations in a constant state of preparedness."

"War," declared Mr. Sweet, "is subject to the will and purpose of man. And we are not powerless to prevent it." He believes that a vast number of people who say that war is inevitable are absorbed in the war system of today and that the reduction of armaments is often retarded because the manufacturers of warring tools are fighting for their revenues.

Speaking of the Kellogg-Briand peace pact, Mr. Sweet said that "if the United States ever goes to war, we must say that this peace pact is but a scrap of paper." Mr. Sweet was highly in favor of the League of Nation and stated that Woodrow Wilson, although severely criticized, was right in going to Paris to incarnate his own ideals. He closed by saying that he thought that this Kellogg-Briand peace pact would help to bring an everlasting peace between nations.

In his talk Sunday night, Mr. Sweet spoke chiefly of the social implications of Christ's philosophy of life. Both of the talks made by Mr. Sweet were well attended by both students and townspeople.

Phi Will Elect Speaker Tonight

The Phi assembly will hold its regular meeting tonight at 7:15. The resolutions to be discussed are (1) "Resolved: that radio station KWKH of Shreveport, La., which broadcasts against the chain store should be deprived of its operating license"; and (2) "Resolved: that North Carolina should order a detailed investigation of conditions existing in the textile factories.

Due to the necessity for turning in Yackety Yack pictures as early as possible, the speaker of the Phi assembly for the spring quarter will be elected at the meeting tonight.

Scientific Movies To Be Shown Wednesday

The weekly motion picture reels on scientific subjects this quarter are being given at 7:30 p. m. every Wednesday in Bingham hall.

For this week the bill is "The story of a Spark Plug" and "The Story of a Rock-Dusted Coal Mine." The details on each subject will be shown. Announcing the movies, Dr. F. C. Vilbrandt expressed a desire for a larger student attendance. "The reels shown," he said, "have a general as well as scientific interest."

Buccaneer Notice

There will be an important meeting of the Buccaneer Business Staff at 5 o'clock today in the Buccaneer office. A revision of the staff will be made and it is important that those wishing to be on the staff this quarter attend.

Oscar Coffin, head of the University department of journalism, has received a number of requests for the questionnaire he submitted to North Carolina editors and publishers at the newspaper institute here last week. Following is a copy of the questionnaire:

"What is the place of a reasonably honest and independent North Carolina newspaper in the sort of family fight to be settled, perhaps, on June 7?

"There being no way to avoid over-emphasizing the news value of the disturbance, where may one find a fence to mount, and if so, is this policy advisable?

"What shall be done by a neighborly editor with bad-tempered communications?

"Why should anybody publish for Arthur Talmadge Abernathy he's one of many—personal abuse of a man he'd be only too glad to serve on a reception committee with?

"Are North Carolina newspapers going to allow themselves to be used for rekindling the Smith-Hoover fires of bigotry and intolerance?

"Is there anything less intelligent—to say nothing of its positive harm—than for a free press to submit to being covered up with verbal refuse by a lot of numbskulls who have nothing more to do with their time than to devote it to bawling out other roughnecks who have been retained by the defense?

"Where are Santford Martin's Forty Immortals and what are they now doing?"

Wants Glandon Drive Maintained By Town

Dr. W. C. George of the Carolina faculty, appeared last week before the board of aldermen with a request, now being considered, that Glandon Drive, one of the roads to Gimghoul Castle, be made a public road and be maintained henceforth by Chapel Hill.

The requirements of publicly maintained roads within the city are that they be surfaced with at least six inches of disintegrated stone, and be properly drained. Glandon Drive does not meet either of these requirements.

Henderson Says Shaw Is Greatest Writer Of Age

Henderson And Green Speak At New York Dinner For Noted Irishman.

SHAW FAILS TO ATTEND

Says Blood Sacrifices Are Not In His Line; Advises Fast Instead Of Feast;

"Bernard Shaw stands forth today as the greatest writer of his age," Dr. Archibald Henderson, official biographer of Shaw, declared here Saturday night at a dinner in tribute to the noted Irishman.

The dinner was given by the Town Hall Club, and was attended by a notable assemblage of dramatists, novelists and other admirers of Shaw. Francis H. Sisson, president of the Town Hall Club, presided, and Dr. Henderson was toastmaster.

Other speakers included Mrs. Richard Mansfield, the famous actress; Paul Green, the playwright, who is a member of the faculty of the University of North Carolina; Norman Thomas, the former socialist candidate for president; and four representatives from the New York Theatre Guild, Theresa Helburn, the executive director; Lawrence Langner, founder and director; Philip Moeller, the producing director, and Dudley Diggs, the actor.

Dr. Henderson had urged Shaw to come to America to attend the dinner and the famous playwright sent the following characteristic reply which Dr. Henderson read:

"A dinner! How horrible! I am to be made the pretext for killing all those wretched animals and birds and fish! Thank you for nothing. Now if it were to be a fast instead of a feast: say a solemn three days abstention from corpses in my honor, I could at least pretend to believe that it was disinterested. Blood sacrifices are not in my line."

Dr. Henderson, in his address, described Shaw as "The first great economist in letters known to history. His novels are execrable—almost as bad as the best of Dreiser; his art criticism is mediocre; his musical criticism delightful; his dramatic criticism the best of its kind. His great triumphs have come in the field of the drama; but in the generally accepted sense, Shaw is not a dramatist at all. His plays, which he calls debated-dramas, are not studies of human beings, their destinies and tragedies; they are devastating literary exposes of social and economic institutions."

"Shaw began his life as the Bad Boy of literature; he is ending it as the Grand Old Man of Europe. But the habits of his youth persist. He still commits the youthful indiscretion of thumbing his nose and spreading his fingers out at the hallowed traditions of society. He still makes a great verbal racket with his battering at doors long since flung upon by his own gate-crashing. He still belabors idols long ago tumbled from their pedestals. These peccadilloes, pardonable in childhood, are sometimes as painful to the admirers of his genius, as the sight of a respected grandmother, gaily bedight in in the manners and the raiment of the flapper."

Police Will Arrest Townspeople Using Out-Of-State Tags

The police department is investigating several cases where automobiles owned by residents of Chapel Hill are being driven with out-of-state licenses, according to John M. Foushee, city manager, who adds that the state law allows but two months' use of a foreign tag by one who takes up residence here.

"There are some cases where people from out of state have become bona-fide residents, sometimes even leasing homes, but are driving their cars with foreign licenses. Only those who can show a real residence elsewhere will be allowed to use tags other than those issued by North Carolina," says Foushee.

The new town tags, for which there is a fee of $1.00, will be issued on June 1st and will run to January 1st, this year, thus putting them into the same fiscal year period as the state tags. The new tags will be black letters on a white background, it having been impossible to secure tags of a Carolina color scheme that were guaranteed to last. A total of 565 Chapel Hill tags are now in use.

Village Council May Reconsider Old Zoning Law

A public hearing on the petition of Mrs. A. E. Brown to so alter the zoning plan as to permit the sale of her property at Ransome and McCauley streets to a college fraternity, will be held in the city hall on Wednesday, February 29, according to John M. Foushee, city manager.

"At this time opportunity will be given for anyone to speak for or against the proposed change," says Foushee, and we cannot tell whether the petition will be granted.

The zoning plan has been a benefit to both the fraternities and the private home owners of Chapel Hill, according to Mr. Foushee, who points out that the fraternity men keep different hours and make more noise than the average householder. "To all of which," he adds, "no one can object when zoning is properly handled.

"From time to time in state legislatures in the south, laws are proposed abolishing fraternities, as was the case in South Carolina until recently. One of the sources of such proposals is the person whose home is near a fraternity house. By adhering to a plan of zoning, such objections are reduced to a minimum."

HOUSE PRAISES LEE IN ADDRESS

Executive Secretary Points To Lee As America's Greatest Military Figure.

In commemoration of the birthday of Robert E. Lee, January 19, R. B. House, executive secretary, spoke in chapel yesterday on certain aspects of the career of the noted southerner.

Although Lee's greatness has been appraised by much varying opinion, Mr. House deemed it unnecessary to find his proper place in the scale of historical figures, but declared that he must at least be considered America's greatest military figure. The speaker turned to the later part of Lee's career for the finest expression of his character.

Pointing to his struggle against overwhelming odds, Mr. House showed the Confederate leader to be undoubtedly the outstanding figure of the Civil War. He then put Lee from his place in this greatest of American military art among the greatest military geniuses of history. In the opinion of the speaker Lee's was no less an illustrious career for the side he chose or for his having lost.

However, Mr. House decried the measuring of Lee by his military achievements alone. The promptness with which he adjusted his thinking to the situation after defeat was emphasized by the speaker. Mr. House pointed out that he willingly and unselfishly turned his mind to the problem of the moment. He declared that outstanding in Lee's life was the fact that he kept up-to-date in his thinking.

UNIVERSITY BAND ONE OF TEN BEST AMONG COLLEGES

Information Received From Executive Secretary Of Kappa Kappa Psi Band Fraternity.

CHOSEN AFTER SURVEY

The University of North Carolina band has been chosen as one of the ten college bands deserving special recognition for their work.

This information was contained in a letter recently received by T. S. McCorkle, director of the band, from Scott P. Squyers, executive secretary of the Kappa Kappa Psi band fraternity. This organization at a national meeting recently held, made the selection as a result of a general band survey.

Mr. Squyres visited Chapel Hill last winter and made a thorough investigation at to the type of work the band is doing. This investigation led to the selection of the U. N. C. group, Mr. Squyres stated in his letter.

"The University band has tried to point the way to a higher type of music," Mr. McCorkle stated. "Of course, the music that is suitable for playing at the games is more or less universal in type, but in concert work the band has found and used a considerable variety of music that is very much worthwhile."

The Asheville paper after a concert there last year, spoke of the band as "a symphony orchestra without strings." It was this phase of the work that particularly interested Mr. Squyres when he visited here.

The band will play several out of town concerts this year. Since no auditorium is available for a campus program, it is likely that spring weather will bring about several stadium concerts.

Kappa Kappa Psi is attempting to arrange for a national college band contest next year, similar to the one now conducted for glee clubs. The University band has already promised to support this contest when it is inaugurated.

Di Senate To Hold Important Meeting

The Dialectic senate will go into long session tonight in order to dispose of several pressing executive matters. The office of president pro-tem must be filled, as Senator Kincaid failed to return.

Tonight will be the regular initiation meeting of the quarter. All candidates for membership should report to the Di hall, New West building, at 7:15.

After disposing of these matters the senate will proceed to consider the measures which appear on the calendar. Prominent among these is the proposition that the Di and Phi revive the old custom of passing bills from one society to the other.

The Flunking Question

Predigested doses of knowledge, as administered by pedantic professors to lethargic students in the average American institution of higher learning, are seldom productive of real education. This is merely an ancient truism stated verbosely, but its application to numerous college generations has not diminished its force. For four years and more the accumulated wisdom and knowledge of the ages may be poured upon a man in an euphonious and uninterrupted stream, without "adding one cubit to his mental stature."

The predominance of uneducated college graduates is attributable in large measure to the undergraduate attitude. Most students regard a college career as a glorious vacation, a week-end extended over four years. If the undergraduate would regard his academic career as a job and not a vacation he would come much closer to securing his money's worth from his father's investment. The student of average intellect who works on his courses for forty hours each week, including classes, has sufficient time for recreation and limited outside activities; in all probability he has better than a C average at the end of each quarter and a genuine education at the end of his academic career.

President Chase addressed the freshmen in chapel recently upon habits of study, urging them to use the reading rooms of the library when dormitory conditions are not conducive to study. His remarks are especially appropriate, since the quarter is now well underway and resolutions concerning industry and application are now meeting their first severe tests.

A recent investigation of the extent to which the library is being utilized as a place for study produced interesting results. Although it was ascertained that the study halls on the first floor are reasonably well filled at all times with those using the specialized reference books there, the main reading room on the second floor was discovered to be almost vacant throughout a considerable portion of the day and evening.

In this main reading room there are 350 seats in comfortable and pleasant surroundings. A check on the readers in this room throughout December, when studying reached a high water mark because of the proximity of examinations, revealed that the average number of occupants during the evening was 60. Another check made since the opening of the winter quarter shows that this average has dropped to about 50. At the present time less than 17 per cent of the available seating capacity in the main reading room is being used.

Thus it is seen that space is always available in the library for those who desire a quiet, comfortable place in which to study. An hour or two spent in the library every night might enable the undergraduate to make the knowledge spread out before him in classes of his own, instead of uncomfortably coasting through college upon his instructors' frenzied efforts to turn out a class not consisting entirely of flunks.

America, The Beautiful

Ever since the day of the Boston tea party, when the slumbering independence of our ancestors began to awaken and cast off the yoke of the mother country, America has fostered the growth of a national spirit seeing its expression in thousands of gaudy, glittering parades, in countless pompous, eloquently stupid speeches by "100 per cent American" politicians; a spirit that urges great applause whenever the flag is displayed, and that makes anyone who considers himself proud of the supposed distinction of being an American boast of the country's many magnificent features, her freedom, her independence, her limitless opportunities for success and happiness, America, "the greatest spot on God's green earth," and so on, ad infinitum. Pride in our country seems to be a religion; from the cradle, the average American is taught to regard himself as so much better off than a person of any other nationality that he finally comes to regard other peoples with a faint air of patronizing condescension.

This loyalty to one's Vaterland would be splendid and worthy of the highest commendation —were it only intelligent and reasonable. Instead it is a spirit founded on an intolerance, based in turn on a lack of courage to face the facts. Rather than face deplorable situations in our country and admitting them to be disgraceful features, we choose to ignore them deliberately and heap anathema upon "debunkers" whose eyes, not being blinded by this pitifully shallow "patriotsim," cut beneath the hypocritical sham of the American attitude to make caustic and bitter wounds on our vanity.

Worst of all these wounds hurt because they are true. Far from being the great, noble, the magnificent America of the "100 per cent American's" faith and the European peasant's dream, America is a struggling baby giant, arrogant, ribald, shamefully hypocritical, flamboyantly gaudy, young, and, in spite of the sophistication of its metropolitan centers, to a certain extent raw. Many typically American gestures and actions are absurd in their inconsistency. We blindly make ourselves a choice laughing stock by our naive censorship of books and periodicals considered lewd by a customs official or a municipal censor,—yet these books and publications can always be obtained no matter how thoroughly banned; and any number of filthy burlesques, smutty revues, and obscene plays run merrily along, occasionally playing a game of hide-and-seek with the grave board of censors or the Watch and Ward society. We pass the prohibition law and at an enormous expense establish enforcement corps which seem to be about as effectual as sieves; liquor, this time of a corrosive variety, apparently flows as much as ever. And instead of making an earnest effort to enforce the amendment, things continue to run along in a characteristically slipshod fashion, and our meager respect for law is diminished to almost none at all. This is a republic supposedly based on a democracy where the voice of the people controls,—yet the people of Chicago revealed their intelligent use of the Franchise by putting in Big Bill Thompson's administration, and worse, by leaving it there.

This enumeration of absurd incongruities and ridiculous vices on the part of Uncle Sam (better Uncle Sham) could be continued indefinitely. But it would be futile. Journalists are constantly parading before the apathetic eyes of the public the weaknesses and faults of the nation,—but nothing seems to be done. Novelists reveal to us the grossly predominating materialism of our country, our universal lack of culture and background, our small town bigotry and our preposterous hypocrisy that fools no one,—and we only rail against them, brand them as traitors, asses, and continue to censor impartially, to buy cheap, rotten magazines in large quantities, and to patronize the bootlegger at the same time we denounce the lawlessness of the nation.—R. H.

World Peace And The Average Man

Whatever the average man manifests in the way of interest in movements to promote international peace is negligible. The diplomats of the world get together quite frequently in formal assemblies to come to "understandings" of each other, and the aftermath of one of these agreements consists largely of a few speeches by men in the public eye and, sometimes, a senatorial resolution. Tete-a-tetes which are held from time to time among diplomats result mostly in newspaper flourishes and editorial comments. To the ordinary citizen such happenings have no meaning at all. What is it to him whether a few men thousands of miles away, certainly having no real power, adopt this plan or not? There is a lack of interest on the part of the average man because his relation to international peace—at least it would seem to him—is too remote to require serious consideration.

An innovation is being made today, however, which will play a large part in bringing the problem at hand closer to the man in the street. Beginning this morning, the people of the world have the opportunity of listening, by radio, to the sessions of the five-power naval parley being held in London. This may mark a new era in the science or art of diplomacy by bringing the constituencies of delegates to international conferences in closer contact with the questions at issue. Sir Philip Gibbs, who sees open diplomacy developing from the closed, will no doubt see this latest turn, broadcasting the sessions, as an even surer sign of open diplomacy.

Word peace can never make headway unless the masses demand it. And the masses will never demand it vigorously until the average man sees his proper relation to it—that is, to efforts to further the proposition. The citizen must, then, be thrown in contact with the things that are happening which might promote peace; his interest must be stimulated. Perhaps the radio, more than any other device, will prove to be the best means of interesting the ordinary person in efforts to advance international tranquility, thereby promoting the movement to secure peace.

Certain remarks tinged with caustic irony having come to our ears lately, we have concluded that since our recent column the belief is prevalent that we have lost our faith in women. Not so.

We never had any.

And besides, almost every remark in that column applied with equal force to men. We merely forgot to mention that.

This isn't an apology—precisely. It is an attempt to escape from heads turned aside and noses up. Which are not to our liking.

With an eye keen for detail one may distort almost anything one sees, transform common sights, and plant them in the realm of the grotesque or the ridiculous. Yet, this transformation taxes the imaginative faculties of the average student a bit too strongly. I am talking of the student whose inherent indolence will not give way even for the reward of an excellent bit of entertainment. The remainder of this column is for those people. There are numerous sights on the campus which are highly amusing in themselves, denying the imagination an opportunity for play. We point out below:

SIGHTS WORTH HEARING AND SEEING

Cy Edson at the Carolina Grill trying to get a sandwich named after him.

Garland McPherson tying up love-letters with a violet ribbon.

Haywood Parker's 12-year-old hat which has been to 14 rifle meets, 114 dates, and in three street brawls.

Prof. Koch reprimanding Dixit for emitting howls of protest during a reading of one of Shakespeare's tragedies.

L. P. Stack trying to persuade himself that he is wrong about something.

Glenn Holder in his usual attitude at the typewriter preparing to write an editorial on "Why I Am Not a Baby Radical" and inventing invectives to toss at the Southern Textile Bulletin writers.

Officer Blake turning his flashlight on a streetlamp to see if it is burning.

Mr. H. M. Jones suggesting gently that his students prepare their lessons a trifle better.

"Vagabond Lover" as it is played by the Buccaneers.

Will Yarborough chasing a fly around in a bowl of soup. (Will isn't in the soup himself—just the fly).

Dean Hibbard leading his class on a tour of the campus in an endeavor to find a classroom, and insisting that even if the classroom isn't found, the observance of nature will improve the students.

M. P. Moorer insisting that he is an Englishman and wearing a monocle to prove it.

A reporter on the staff of The Daily Tar Heel running down a story (which, in turn, is "run down" by everyone who reads it).

Readers' Opinions

THE LABOR PROBLEM

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

The problem: Continued strife between labor and capital causes an enormous loss each year to labor, capital and the consuming public.

To find: A solution which will benefit both labor, capital, and the public.

Capital's solution: Abolish unions and establish the open shop. This would abolish wage-strikes and insure a cheap labor supply, resulting in prosperity in industry and more goods at a lower price. However, we must pause to see just to what degree this accomplishes our three-fold purpose. Obviously, Capital and that part of the consuming public not considered as labor benefits by a pure financial gain. However, this solution does not accomplish our ends since the loss of bargaining power to labor is more harmful to this class than their gain in purchasing power due to cheaper comodities.

Labor's solution: Establish strong unions and adopt a closed shop policy. The proponents of this plan claim the resulting increase in the bargaining power given labor, would raise wages and therefore the standard of living level. In order to see just what way this would accomplish our three-fold purpose, we may view the situation in England today, which will serve as a fine example of the labor program brought into effect. Here, we see the powerful unions are unable to raise the standard of living of the laborers, since the more strikes they hold the more they hurt industry and cut off their own income as well as that of capital. As for the consuming public, these general strikes on a large scale are more ruinous to it than any previous situation.

With this knowledge as an hypothesis we are in a better position to arrive at a program which will be the best advantage of the three parties concerned.

The solution suggested: Establish strong labor unions. This will give the laborer the much needed collective bargaining power. Make strikes illegal, and establish a national system of trade commissioners to investigate all disputes between labor and capital and decide on them in courts established for the purpose. To the average American this radical departure from our existing institutions would seem far too socialistic even for consideration. However, for the benefit of those who are willing to consider it, we will examine the matter further. Generally, after a strike has run long enough to be disastrous to labor as well as capital and has cost the consuming public inestimable financial loss and inconvenience, the average American is only too glad when the government investigation steps in and brings the strike to a close. Why not have the investigation first and avoid this enormous loss? It is generally believed that the thing a company fears most is a government investigation. If this is so, is not this fact all the more reason why there should be an investigation?

Let us close by attempting to discover just to what extent this solution solves our three-fold problem in benefiting labor, capital and the consuming public.

First labor is given collective bargaining power to better its situation, but it is not self destructive as British labor unions since it is unable to hurt industry through large strikes and in this way cut off its own income. Capital, although it would no longer be able to make unreasonable profits through the exploitation of labor, would more than make up the loss through the general prosperity of industry resulting from lack of strikes. And it is obvious that the consuming public would be the greatest beneficiary of all. No amount of statistical information is necessary to convince one of the tremendous losses it now suffers under what we may term our present strike system. If one is led to believe that the establishment of the above mentioned courts would insure an extra cost which would have to be born by labor and capital, it is probable that on further consideration he would arrive at the conclusion that this cost, however great, would appear insignificant when contrasted with the saving these courts would bring about.

Tar Heel Five Will Meet Monograms Here Tonight

Charlotte Organization Scheduled For Game Yesterday Afternoon.

FRESHMEN PLAY DURHAM

Many Former Carolina Stars Will Play In Tin Can; Ashmore Expected To Shift Line-Up.

The Charlotte Monograms, fast independent organization of the Queen City, will meet the Tar Heels here tonight at 8:30 o'clock in the Tin Can, according to a last minute announcement made yesterday afternoon by University athletic officials.

The Monograms are expected to present strong opposition to the current edition of the Tar Heels, as there will be in their lineup a number of Carolina all-southern stars of recent years such as Bill Dodderer, Carr, Johnny Purser, and Sam MacDonald.

With the return of Billy Brown, veteran guard, to school this week the Tar Heel defensive strength has been greatly strengthened, and Johnny Greene, who will probably make his debut at forward tonight, is expected to strengthen the offensive play of the Tar Heels. The starting lineup for the varsity quint will probably be Greene and Cleland at forwards; Harper, center, and Brown and Marpet, guards.

By winning both ends of a double header Saturday night, the Tar Baby quintet extended their streak to four successive victories in as many starts. Tonight the freshman basketeers will try for their fifth straight when they tackle the strong Durham high five, the game to be played at 7 p. m. in the Tin Can. The Durham quintet has one of the finest teams in this section of the state and the freshmen will have to be on their toes if they are going to win this game.

Coach Rex Enright seems to have found the combination that he is looking for in Henry, Lineberger (guards), Chandler, Dunn (forwards), and Hines or Beale at the center post, and this will probably be the starting lineup for tonight's game.

The squad, which shapes up to be about the best frosh quintet that has represented Carolina in the last few years, has been worked hard by Coach Enright, and appears to be in midseason form.

Old East Wins 38-11

Old East beat the Question Marks yesterday 38 to 11. Compared to the Question Marks the Old East team was a beautiful piece of machinery. The playing of Forwards Lowry and Henlen was excellent. They fitted together well although Henlen had three personals scored against him. Lowry piled up 14 points and Henlen 12. McDuffie was the Question Marks' only outstanding player.

The lineup:

O. E. (38)		Question M. (11)
Lowry (14)	R. F.	Beam (1)
Henlen (12)	L. F.	Leonard (1)
Stafford (2)	C.	McDuffie (5)
Sutton (4)	R. G.	McDermid (4)
Wilson (4)	L. G.	Vann

Rifle Club Notice

There will be a meeting of the rifle club tonight at 7:30 in the office in the basement of Alumni building. All old men are requested to be present and all new men who are interested in rifle shooting.

Fencing Notice

Coach Hendlin of the fencing team wishes all members of the team to meet in room 313 Old East, tonight at 8:30.

Frosh Have Good Wrestling Team

Although the freshman mat squad has no immediate meets in sight, it continues to keep in excellent condition. All berths have been filled with the exception of the heavyweight position which is still open. A majority of the wrestlers have been training since early fall and are fast becoming skilled matmen.

Deitz and Lewis appear to be the most likely candidates in the 115 pound class. Seligman has already won undisputed leadership in the 125 pound division. Conklin and Hassel are fighting it out for the 135 pound berth. Six men, Leary, Bradley, Biggers, Hodges, Greer and Herman, all good wrestlers, are contesting in the 145 pound group. Bradley stands alone in the 155 pound class, as does Idol in the 175 pound group.

The unlimited class is without suitable candidates. Competition is open to all men in the freshman class.

Meets have been scheduled with Washington and Lee, V. M. I., State, Virginia, V. P. I. and Duke.

Law School Beats Manly

The Law School team No. 1 Manly 27-12. The game was got going yesterday to clean up rather rough with one player put out on fouls. Sharpe, playing for Law School, totaled 10 points on fouls. He and House were the high scorers for the Law School. House scored five field goals. Manly lacked the organization of the Law School, but put up a spirited fight.

The lineup:

Law School (27)		Manly (12)
Lewis (2)	R. F.	Auman, H.
Bane	L. F.	Wiggins
House (10)	C.	Auman, M. (3)
Sharpe (11)	R. G.	Stewart (2)
Smith	L. G.	Goldston (3)

Substitutions: Law School—McDaniel (2), Rockwell (1); Manly—Cedar (2), Ball (2), Barnwell, Wiggins.

Dr. F. C. Vilbrandt will address the chemical engineering students in room 201 Venable hall tonight at 7 o'clock on the subject of "Opportunities in Chemical Engineering."

Says Us

by Browning Roach

With three victories last week, all of them at the expense of North Carolina teams, the Generals of Washington and Lee jumped into the lead in the Southern Conference cage race. None of the three victims taken in tow by the Generals were conquered by any outfit outside the state in the conference tournament at Atlanta last year. Carolina was eliminated by the Duke Blue Devils in the second round of the 1929 tournament and was in turn defeated by N. C. State in the finals. But the Generals did not take into account last season's records when they invaded North Carolina last week, and beginning with Duke, whom they out-pointed 33-29, the Generals marched on through Carolina 27-17, and then returned to their home floor to wind up with N. C. State, the 1929 champions, 39-28.

Alabama, remaining idle, retained a hold on second place along with Sewanee, Kentucky and Georgia. Sewanee, with the strongest five in years, climbed into prominence by victories over Clemson and Vandy. Kentucky maintained a perfect record by triumphing over the Tennessee Volunteers 23-20, and Georgia kept its record clean by nosing out Georgia Tech Saturday night 26-23.

Mississippi, by trimming L. S. U. twice on successive nights, boosted its record to three won and one lost and claimed sixth place. Duke follows with two victories and one defeat. Clemson, having played more conference games than any other outfit, heads the .500 division with three won and three lost.

The Mississippi Aggies and Tulane divided a two-game series, the first one going to the Aggies 22-20, and the second falling to the Green Wave 22-19. The Cavaliers dropped a game to Maryland 54-20 and also a non-conference engagement with William and Mary.

The N. C. State Wolfpack, before losing to W. & L., won its first conference game against V. P. I. 21-17, and a couple of nights dropped Wake Forest 38-10. Other non-conference games played by conference institutions last week were: V. M. I. 32, Bridgewater 30; V. P. I. 43, Roanoke 19; South Carolina 32, College of Charleston 40; South Carolina 31, Citadel 27; North Carolina 48, Guilford 24; Tennessee 43, Tennessee Wesleyan 20; Duke 49, Wake Forest 24; Washington and Lee 69, Bridgewater 30.

Winter Grid Work Begins With 150 Men Reporting

Collins And Cerney To Direct Practice; 25 Lettermen Working.

WORK ON FUNDAMENTALS

Squad To Be Divided Into Four Teams With Regular Schedule Of Games Twice A Week.

Candidates for the 1930 football team began winter practice yesterday.

The 1930 season, with a schedule that includes Georgia, Tennessee and Georgia Tech on successive week-ends, may seem a long way off, but Head Coach Chuck Collins is a firm exponent of the idea that it takes work to win football games.

Collins and his coaching partners, Bob Fetzer and Bill Cerney, are expecting a squad of 150, that will include 23 and 35 varsity lettermen who will be eligible next year.

Equipment was issued last week to the varsity and freshmen of last fall. Everything is set to begin harder work this afternoon.

The workouts will concentrate on the fundamentals, but within a couple of weeks the Tar Heel mentors plan to divide the squad into separate teams for a round robin schedule of two regular sixty-minute games a week. This plan has been used two years and has proven highly satisfactory.

The regular coaches will be assisted by a majority of the Tar Heels' nine graduating grid stars.

"Forget last year," is Coach Collins' request of his boys. "Forget we won nine games. If you want to remember anything, remember we lost one. It takes hard work and lots of it, and the big part has got to be done this winter."

Theta Kappa Nu Wins Over Phi Delts 34-16

The Theta Kappa Nu intramural basketball team ran over Phi Delta Theta yesterday in the Tin Can by the score of 34-16. Henry, tall Theta Kappa Nu center, was high scorer of the game with 12 points, while Gill led the other team with 8. The winners clearly outclassed their opponents throughout the game, and once the game got under way the outcome was never doubtful.

In another game Carr dormitory forfeited to "J."

Lineup:

Th. K. Nu (34)		Phi D. Th. (16)
Midgett (2)	R. F.	Gill (8)
Cheek	L. F.	Fonville (4)
Henry (12)	C.	Eubank (4)
Crane (5)	R. G.	Taylor
Hunter (2)	L. G.	Griffin

Substitutions: Theta Kappa Nu—Hunter (6), Maus (5), Jones (2); Phi Delta Theta—Smith.

Chi Psi Takes Thriller

The Chi Psi cage team came from behind to win a thrilling game from the Chi Phi five 20-18 in the Tin Can yesterday. Pierre Campbell, fast Chi Psi forward, was the outstanding star of the game with eight field goals and one foul shot to total 17 points. Skinner and Upshaw led the other five with 6 counters each.

Lineup:

Chi Psi (20)		Chi Phi (18)
Campbell (17)	R. F.	Skinner (6)
Mitcham (2)	L. F.	Haywood
Atwood	C.	Upshaw (6)
Dudley	R. G.	Hudson
Baggs	L. G.	Abels (4)

Hines And Grant Basketball Stars

Carolina's two most expert recquet weilders have now turned their attention to another sport for the winter. Both Wilmer Hines and Bryan Grant, finalists in the University's tournament held last fall, are trying for places on the Tar Baby basketball team. They are both showing up well as forwards. Hines, aided by his height, is exceptionally good at shooting baskets, scoring 15 points in the game with Oak Ridge previous to the varsity-W. and L. game. Grant's speed and amazing agility frequently enabled him to get the ball in scoring position.

SOUTHERN STARS TO COMPETE HERE

Indoor Track Meet March 8 To Bring Flippen, Hamm, Young And Others.

The Southern Conference indoor track meet here on March 8 will bring to the Tin Can the outstanding track athletes of the south and at least four men who rate high in national competition. Georgia Tech will send Ed Hamm, Olympic broad jump champion, as the high light of the meet. Hamm holds both world and Olympic records for the broad jump, besides having been Southern Conference champion in the 100 and 220 yard dashes in 1928.

Young of Georgia, who is the conference champion in cross country and who last year placed fifth in the National Collegiate meet, will also attend, as will Flippen of Virginia, world's champion in the 60 yard high hurdles and all-around track star. Another southern track star who will attend is Wisner, also of Virginia, who placed second in the broad jump at the Penn Relays last year.

Plays With Pistol; Gets Road Sentence

Reuben Winston, colored, brandished a big pistol.

"What you doin' wid dat gun, fellah?"

"Ah shoots 'em wid dis yere gun, ah does, and mah houn' dawg licks de blood up. Dis yere houn' dawg's the bestest blood-licker in Nawth Cahalina," replied Reuben.

His auditor fled, as a harmless shot rang out. The blood-licking dog ran, also, his tail between his legs.

A short time later Winston, after other encounters, entered a negro merchantile establishment and tapped an acquaintance none too gently on the head with the butt of the pistol.

Recorder's Court record of case No. 275 reads as follows: "Reuben Winston, colored. Assault with deadly weapon; namely, a pistol. Second offense same nature. Judgement enforced in former case No. 197, four months on the county roads, and in this case two months. Judgement effective at once."

Walton Lloyd and E. W. Groves, each charged with violating the speed laws of Chapel Hill, were given suspended sentences in Recorder's Court yesterday morning upon payment of their costs.

Mr. Morgan F. Vining of the extension division was in Raleigh yesterday on official business for his department. He is the head of the University bureau of lectures and short courses.

Harold Meyer Says 'Talkies' Revolutionizing Cinema Art

(By H. D. Meyer)

Our Little Town

Dear Big Towner:

Last year, about this time, I was with you in the Big City. It has been one of the delights of my life to look forward, each year, to this visit. Our Little Town, like most small places, has always lacked the opportunities afforded by the larger centers of population. This was especially true along the lines of recreational interests, cultural advantages, keeping abreast of the times and seeing and hearing the best from everywhere. Of course, we have the advantages of the printed page, hearing voices and music over the radio, riding to the larger centers in the automobile, occasionally a good lecturer or musical program through some community medium and our moving picture house did its best with the silent drama.

About six months ago the picture show temporarily closed its doors. An announcement was made through the local weekly that the management was installing a talking-picture arrangement. This surely started the town to talking and all summer long arguments pro and con waxed heatedly. As in most places, there were a lot of intemperate fans who dreaded anything that might disturb the usual night entertainment in the old way; there were also a large number who oppose change regardless, always sure that the change would ruin the existing satisfactory status; then a number didn't believe it could be done for it was impossible to match sound and sight in a mechanical process too, it had never been done before; some were sure that the change would send prices higher and make going prohibitive to the small towner. It seemed that the majority would thumbs-down on the new adventure and the management was on a sure road to failure and ruin.

But in most communities there are a few souls who keep up, think clearly, believe in invention and discovery, long for changes that better conditions and eagerly try the new with the hope that something better will result. I shall not write you about the opening, hectic days nor the first few weeks of trial for the talkies. Rather let time elapse and now after four months of progress let's see what has happened. The town is unanimous for the talkies—that is as unanimous as a small place can be. All turn out and no one stays away because of sound. Many folks who never attended now go and the management proudly asserts the best four months of business ever. Now, why is Our Litle Town so enthusiastic about the new adventure? What has this innovation meant to the citizenship of the small community? There are a number of reasons and I am going to write them down for you and also number them so we can see the real effectiveness of it all.

1. Within the past four months Our Little Town has seen and heard some of the world's greatest characters. Presidents, statesmen, Governors, military leaders, royalty of all ranks and men of science and industry. Here are some of the folks who have come to Our Little Town: Hoover, Ramsey MacDonald, Edison, Lindbergh, Hindenberg, Madame Curie, Dowager Queen Marie, the young king of Roumania, the prince of Wales and many others. How is that for small town folks having within their midst such distinguished persons, to see them and to hear their voices?

2. Would you believe it, we attended a number of the outstanding events in the history of the past few months. We saw and heard President Hoover deliver a brief message to the diplomats of more than forty countries cementing the Kellogg-Briand peace treaty; we were with the royalty of Italy as they visited the Pope; we heard the tread of feet and saw the multitudes giving honor to the dead Clemenceau; the Graf Zeppelin passed right over our heads, as it were, the hum of motors, the workmen bringing the ship into the hangar, the crowds cheering and brief welcomes and messages from Count Zeppelin, his son, Lady Drummond Hayes and others; we took in the world series baseball games, the tennis championship, and some of the best football games the season afforded in all parts of the counry. Our Little Town is in touch with the world, hears the world speaking and sees the world in action. This has helped greatly to give our people a broader vision, a clearer understanding, and a wider sympathy with so many situations and conditions. It has banished a lot of intolerance, bitter prejudices and narrow hatreds.

3. People are thinking more and thinking better these days. They read and see more. They travel more. They are developing a popular artistic and spiritual appreciation never before known. The demands thus found are being met by the talkies. There is educational benefit from them. They are satisfying this urge and Our Little Town will turn out today to see and hear attractions that would have been ignored a decade ago as being "too highbrow." Practic aleducation is receiving impetus from the talkies and one of the biggest benefits comes in the possibility for perfect English. Our Little Town will utilize every opportunity of this kind.

4. Of course the above reasons are important but to my mind the greatest gift of the talkies is the gift of music. We have always been proud of our local orchestra and many have been the times we have enjoyed hearing it. It was the best we could supply but now the folks of Our Little Town see and hear the largest symphony orchestras of the world—those of the movie companies and the big city symphonies. Powerful in numbers, magnifying the themes of play, thrilling with the harmony of situations and molding perfect rhythm with action these giants of music entrance us. Hundreds of instruments all in action, the leader confronts us and explains the number, we see his baton guiding the score and we see and hear the orchestra bring from the printed pages exquisite harmonies. It is all there before us as I saw and heard it with you last year in Carnegie Hall.

5. Many times I have wanted to hear certain artists and a number of my favorites have come to us lately. The talkies have brought us the world's best singers and instrumental artists. Our Little Town has enjoyed Bori, Gigli, Alda, Lauder, Kreisler, soloists of the large orchestras and many other celebrities. The management has booked some of the leaders for future engagements. Within a short time Our Little Town will have had the privilege of seeing and hearing as many prominent leaders in this field as you enjoy there in the Big City.

6. Now some of our folks have objected to the drama, or lack of it, in the current musical revues, but this one feature of the talkies has brought a real enthusiasm and zest in the life of the whole community. Every morning the community abounds in the tunes of the revues,—whistling along, singing away, humming about or patting at them—these tunes have carried the day. So many of them and all direct from Broadway or Hollywood. All of them have been to Our Little Town and there are promises of others. We have Broadway in Our Little Town—color, sound, and picture—what better can we ask for along that line?

7. One of the most remarkable effects of the movies has been the ardent hero worship we have developed for the actors of the screen. Our Little Town feels that it owns many of them. Each inhabitant has his or her pet actors. In the days of the silent drama I often wondered what sort of voice my favorite possessed. If I could hear it would it make me worship more or less. The talkies have brought to us the voices of our actors and in most cases have increased our interest in them.

8. All of us love a good joke. The comedy has many times proven the feature and always attracts and keeps movie fans. Perhaps one of the best contributions of the talkies has been the sound addition to comedy. The good joke, the wise-crack, the witty saying, the satire, the freak noises and the unusual situations have all been perfected through the talkie. The comedy has reached a new level of presentation.

9. There are a number of minor benefits that I, and a number of the folks in Our Little Town, are enjoying. Three of these will suffice. The talkies have hushed the voices of those who always read the titles aloud either to themselves or to assure their neighbors that they could read. The talkies have improved the general morals of the picture-audience. It demands the best of attention. It calls for silence. It creates respect. Too, I am sure you will agree with me that we all have a better time. There is something about it all that makes for a good time, wholesome hours spent in enjoyable entertainment.

10. Our Little Town happens to be a University community, and we feel that the picture show is almost a part of the University. The pictures exercise a tremendous influence over student life—for good. There is no telling how much devilment the entertainment from good pictures prevents. The boys must have some kind of recreation and diversion, so why not give them the wholesome kind? Those who have lived here long enough to contrast conditions on the campus now with those that existed before the movies came will quickly tell you that the community is a tame place as compared to the old days when it was not considered safe for outsiders to go on the campus after dark. The movies now take care of that overflow of energy.

Records Show Increase Of 45 Over Fall Quarter 1928; 143 Honor Students In School Of Liberal Arts.

COMPLETE LIST ISSUED

Dr. G. K. G. Henry, head of the statistical department of the registrar's office, yesterday issued statistics and records concerning the honor roll for the fall quarter of the 1929-1930 school year. 271 students made grades that entitled them to be placed on the honor roll for fall, 1929. This is an increase of 46 over last year's figures. Four out of the five schools increased their number of honor students. The A.B. school had 143 such students, an increase of 22; the A.B. education school had 39, an increase of 3; the school of applied science had 35, an increase of 16; engineering school had 31, an increase of 9; while the school of commerce showed the only reduction, decreasing from 27 in 1928 to 23 in the last year.

In the fall of 1929, 42 seniors, 76 juniors, 60 sophomores and 93 freshmen made the honor list. In the corresponding period of last year, 48 seniors, 59 juniors, 60 sophomores and 58 freshmen had their names placed upon the roll. The following 26 students received the grade "A" in all their courses last quarter:

F. M. Adams, T. H. Barker, B. H. Barnes, A. Benjamin, W. M. Burdett, H. S. Cone, A. K. Davis, H. L. Hirsch, P. K. Kaufman, F. H. Koch, Jr., F. B. Kuykendal, J. A. Lang, J. V. Lindley, F. J. Manheim, W. C.

Hamer And Dungan Elected Officials Of The Dialectic Senate

The regular initiation meeting of the Dialectic senate for the winter quarter was held last night in the Senate chamber in New West building. Subsequent to the reading of the minutes, a message was conveyed to the Philanthropic assembly to the effect that their motion to exchange bills between the two societies met with the approval of the senate.

Under the supervision of Senator Rector, chairman of the initiation committee, the prospective members of the society were subjected to the task of amusing the audience with dissertations on such subjects as "The Christmas Holidays," etc. Large fines were imposed for trivial transgression of rules, but were retracted at the conclusion of the initiation, marked by the signing of the senate roster and the president's words of welcome. The members inducted were: W. R. Hoffman, T. H. Wright, L. C. Wright, J. L. Dickinson, W. C. McCorkle and C. T. Phillips.

The president announced that by the next meeting arrangements will have been effected, each senato rthen having designated to him a definite seat.

The report of the treasurer included the costs of the dance given during last quarter and the general financial conditions of the senate.

Before adjournment, Senator E. R. Hamer was elected president pro-tem and J. E. Dungan was elected sergeant-at-arms.

BONEY'S REPORT CLEARS CHI PSI

Insurance Commissioner Says There Is No Evidence That Students Responsible for Fire.

Dan C. Boney, commissioner of insurance, has issued a statement in which he absolves the members of the local chapter of the Chi Psi fraternity of any blame in connection with the fire which destroyed their house during the Christmas holidays. The statement has been received by the Chi Psi chapter here.

Nothing has been found in the official investigation of the insurance department to indicate that any member of the fraternity should be suspected of having had anything to do with the cause of the fire, Commissioner Boney's statement avers.

Mr. Boney's report says that while the fire seems to have been of incendiary origin, indications are that it was set by thieves, possibly to cover their tracks.

While it is the policy of the insurance department not to make public any of its findings in investigating fires, in the case of the Chi Psi fraternity house fire it has decided to reveal some of its findings because of some of the misleading reports that have been printed about it and implication that some of these reports originated with the insurance department, Mr. Boney said.

Most of the press reports concerning the fire originated in Chapel Hill rather than in Raleigh, and some of them apparently were based on rumor that usually accompanies any suspicious looking fire, Mr. Boney pointed out. He feels that the insurance department as well as the members of the Chi Psi fraternity have been done an injustice by the reports that have been circulated.

Guy Johnston Talks At Cabinet Meeting

Guy B. Johnston, of the University department of sociology, spoke at a joint meeting of the Y cabinets Monday night on the subject of "The Negro." After being introduced by the president of the sophomore cabinet, who read a poem, "The Sword of Lee," Mr. Johnston began by saying, "The way this country treats the Negro is due to the inferiority of that race."

Continuing, the speaker stated that the Negro was in slavery for some 200 years or more, while he has only been free for 65 years. "For this reason the Negro has a right to be a little backward," said Mr. Johnston, "but according to statistics the Negro race has made decided progress."

Mr. Johnston continued by saying that it is believed that the Southern dialect was originated by the Negro. "This, however, is wrong, because if this speech is traced far enough back, it will be seen that it started with the old English," declared the speaker. He also stated that many of the Negro superstitions came from the white race.

The speaker was very hopeful as to the outcome of the Negro in the future. "The Negro will make something out of himself, when he has something to look forward to," he said. "The traits of backwardness of the Negro are due largely to what he has been told and has believed."

Mr. Johnston closed by saying, "The white race should learn more about the colored race, not only for the good of the negro, but also for the good of the white race itself."

Junior Notice

The deadline for pictures of juniors for the Yackety Yack has been set for February 1. No junior pictures will be taken after that date. Photographer appointments may be made at Patterson's.

DANCE OFFICIALS NEGOTIATING FOR LOMBARDO'S BAND

German Club Committee Plans To Secure Famous Orchestra For Finals.

FIRST VISIT TO STATE

(By J. Holmes Davis, Jr.)

Plans are being made for possibly the most brilliant set of dances that have ever been given at the University. Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians have been practically engaged to play for this set.

This will be Lombardo's first appearance in North Carolina. He is at the present time engaged at the Pennsylvania hotel in New York City, and often broadcasts over the radio from there. His orchestra is connected with the Music Corporation of America.

Lombardo's music is quite different from the ordinary jazz-band in the music of today. Pep is not at all lacking from this famous bunch of musicians, but it is combined with a gentle rhythm which displaces that tendency for more noise and less harmony.

Contracts have not been signed, German club officials state, but negotiations have been made to the extent that a written agreement is the only thing that is lacking.

Due to the fact that the date of the opening of summer school is still unsettled, definite dates for finals have not been announced. It is probable, however, that the first dance will be held the day following the commencement exercises.

Several orchestras are now being considered for the mid-winter dances to be held February 21 and 22. However, nothing definite has been decided. This set of dances will be given in Bynum gymnasium.

Five dances are on tap at the mid-winter celebration. The first of these will be held Friday afternoon. Others will take place Friday night, Saturday morning, Saturday afternoon and Saturday night. Hours for the dances have not been announced.

Those desiring to join the German club must turn in their names to some member of the executive committee. Dues may be paid now to Will Yarborough.

Woodhouse-Williams Debate Date Changed

The debate between Howard Y. Williams and Professor Woodhouse of the government department has been moved from the night of February 5 to February 4. This debate, the subject of which deals with the establishment of a third party in the United States government will be held in Gerrard Hall under the auspices of the Di and Phi Societies.

ASSEMBLY PICKS CARR SPEAKER

G. P. Carr Slated To Succeed John Lang At Beginning Of Quarter As Head Of Phi Assembly.

G. P. Carr was elected speaker of the Philanthropic assembly for the spring quarter at the regular meeting of the assembly last night. The speaker for the spring quarter was elected at the meeting in order to have the data complete for the Yackety Yack. Carr will succeed John Lang, the present speaker, at the beginning of the spring quarter.

Speaker Lang read a message from the Dialectic senate reporting favorable action on the proposal of the assembly that the two bodies jointly consider resolutions. Isaac W. Hughes, Thomas C. Worth, G. B. Weaver, J. F. Jackson, H. Winson, J. W. Vann, C. C. Jackson, A. D. Kornegay, A. Nazareno, D. E. Kelly and M. Outlaw were presented for membership in the assembly. Speaker Lang announced that they would be given the privileges of the floor for the meeting, and that the formal initiation would be held at the next regular meeting.

The resolution, "Resolved, that radio station KWKH of Shreveport, La., which broadcasts against the chain store, should be deprived of its operating license," was defeated by a large majority. Representatives Carr, Ferguson and Montgomery spoke in favor of the bill. The oppesition to the resolution was led by Representatives Speight and Baldwin.

The treasurer reported on the condition of the finances of the assembly. Speaker Lang requested that the members pay their dues as soon as possible in order that some obligations might be met. Representatives Haywood, Wilkerson, Baldwin and Speight were appointed by the speaker to serve as initiation committee. Representatives Carr, Speight and Yarborough were named to serve with Speaker Lang as a committee to draft a proposed amendment to the constitution relating to the officers of the assembly.

Speaker Lang stated that ex-Judge Charles R. Thomas, an alumnus of the University and of the assembly, had visited him recently and had expressed his interest in the activities of the assembly. The speaker announced that he would write Judge Thomas in regard to stimulating alumni interest in the assembly.

UNIVERSITY BOYS HEAD DANCE CLUB

In a recent meeting of the Black Cat club, a prominent social organization of Raleigh, two University boys were elected to official positions. John Field Cooper and George London, both Sigma Nu's, hold the offices of vice-president and business manager-treasurer respectively.

The business manager, upon whom falls all the responsibility of handling the dances, has planned a full program for the winter term, planning to lessen as much as possible the monotony of this usually dull period.

The first of this series of dances will be held Friday evening at the Woman's Club in Raleigh, lasting from 9 until 1 o'clock. The Carolina Buccaneers, who have won wide approval over the state this past season, will furnish the music.

Many University students are affiliated with this organization, and a large delegation from Chapel Hill is expected to attend.

SKETCH CLUB MEETING

The art department of the community club has arranged for a meeting of the Sketch Club to be held this afternoon at 3:30 at the home of Mrs. W. E. Caldwell, 412 Rosemary lane.

The music club program to have been held today, has been postponed until next Wednesday, January 29.

An Attempt To Produce Scholar-Athletes

Director of athletics R. A. Fetzer and the Monogram Club are collaborating in an interesting attempt to improve scholarship at the University. Last Monday a study period was initiated in Bingham hall with a large attendance of athletes and other students who were delinquent in scholarship last quarter. Members of the faculty and advanced students assist the delinquents for two hours each evening, five evenings a week.

Scholar-athletes are comparatively rare. There is little doubt that participation in major athletics is detrimental to scholastic attainment, and that the student who devotes a considerable portion of his time to athletics is handicapped to some extent in competing with his classmates for a place in the academic sun. But athletics are an important phase of college life, and they contribute considerably to the physical and even mental development of those who participate in them. The difficulty is that the athlete, in common with the undergraduate journalist, debater, magazine contributor, and actor, all too frequently becomes so engrossed in his extra-curricular activities that he forgets the primary concern of his college career—the job of securing an education.

Supervised study for athletes and other students deficient in scholarship is not unique, but it has been conducted heretofore by academic authorities entirely. The efforts of Coach Bob and the Monogram Club to improve scholarship are especially significant, for they represent an attempt by the directors and participants in extra-curricular activities to prevent over-emphasis of these activities.

The immediate concern of the proponents of the supervised study periods, to be sure, is to reduce the number of those ineligible for participation in athletics on account of scholastic deficiencies, but they are contributing in reality to a movement to swing the emphasis in undergraduate life back to the affairs of the curriculum.

The London Naval Conference

The opening of the five-power naval conference in London yesterday marks another important step toward maintaining the peace of the world. Like the Kellogg peace pact, the League of Nations, the World Court, the Washington arms conference and the Geneva naval conference, this meeting of the great powers will do a great deal toward creating a feeling against war and promoting an atmosphere of peace. Through the various mediums of publicity citizens of every country may follow the conference and share in the effort to secure peace. When a strong public opinion is built up against war, peace will be secure. Anything that points toward the building up of this sentiment for peace is worthy of commendation.

Through the London deliberations efforts will be made to limit the naval armaments of the great powers. In the words of Secretary Stimson, chief of the American delegation, the conference expects to "transform the process of naval armament from a method of competition to one of mutual agreement and limitation. The real aim, he states, "is to remove the secrecy, the rivalry, the mutual irritation, which inevitably attend the precedent of competition in armaments and to leave each nation free to have an adequate national defense which will yet not be a source of worry and suspicion to its neighbors."

The Labor government of England, in its friendly attitude toward peace movements, will do much toward the success of the conference. Mr. MacDonald and his associates, unlike their predecessors of the Conservative ministry, have been very friendly toward every move to cut down armaments and secure peace.

If the London conference is successful, then we may expect a substantial decrease in our building program for the next 15 years, which under present plans calls for the expenditure of two billion dollars, and in the annual cost of maintenance which is now over $400,000,000 Thus aside from helping to prevent future wars the London conference may save the world an enormous sum of money in immediate building programs.

If competitive building can be eliminated much of the friction between nations that contributes toward the making of war will be eliminated. America must be put on a parity with Great Britain, France on a parity with Italy, and Japan on a proportional basis so that none of these nations may menace the peace of the world by building an unreasonably large navy. Obviously, no nation can afford to disarm until every other one does likewise. Only by mutual agreement can we hope to cut the navies to a minimum.

Readers' Opinions

OFFICER BLAKE SPEAKS

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

I have noticed in your paper lately, quite a bit of discussion, about the agency stores operated in the dormitories on the campus. I would like to take this opportunity to express my views regarding them.

My observation of these agency stores has been particularly noticed, as I have occasion to frequent them almost as much as the student body, being employed by the University as an officer, and working on night duty three hundred and sixty-five days to the year; and in my estimation these stores have done more to alleviate conditions in dormitories that must have been very annoying to students, who were trying to devote their time to study, by being continually interrupted by someone calling at their room to offer something for sale or to collect pressing or various other things in that line. The present arrangement eliminates all undesirables who are promenading, or might be, on the pretense of soliciting, when they are merely looking for something to steal.

Last spring quarter there was an epidemic of stealing, from almost every dormitory, every day and night something was missed from some of the dorms. Almost daily there were people from Durham, and nearby cities, canvassing dormitories for various things, such as second hand clothes and shoes for instance. They claimed to represent firms from these towns, whether there were any such firms or not, or whether they were reliable people, they had the same privilege as local representatives to canvass dormitories between the time of 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Under the present arrangement only one man is responsible, everything is delivered to this service room from outside.

The conduct in these stores since beginning operation has been very good with possibly one exception, and the sanitary conditions of these places are equally as good as any places operated in the city as I see it.

I have had occasion to hear it discussed by the student body, and I don't believe there are very many that doesn't approve of them. And I believe that the present arrangement has brought about a decided change in dormitories, with better living conditions. They can study without the continual interruption of someone knocking on their door soliciting or collecting. Another thing — these agency room stores bring the occupants of the dormitories in contact with each other almost every day and night, thereby affording them an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with each other.

And I would like to take this opportunity to say for the benefit of the entire student body, that the conduct of the student body as a whole, has been the best this year, of any year since I have been connected with the University as an officer which has been since 1923.

J. D. BLAKE.

THE "UNQUIET SEX"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

It is very interesting to note that "the Ordinary Man" has succumbed to the temptation to rally to the rescue of the said "longhaired, soft eyed animals" on the basis of his acquaintance with certain ladies who evidently were the cream in man's coffee in the deep dark past.

It is quite apparent that the type of woman which the Scribe discusses as representative of said species is practically extinct today. If not—then they have become extremely adept at the art of concealment—seemingly a paradox. The "Ordinary" one's portrayal of the other sex fails to click because of insufficient elaboratiom. We hesitate to investigate the circumstances surrounding the association of "Catherine" and "Peter" because of certain memories we entertain from History 1 of another Russian Peter who was unceremoniously ejected from his boudoir by a shocked Catherine, his bride of a night. It must be very distressing to present day Englishmen when they think of what miracles Henry the Eighth might have accomplished if there had only been more units of "inspiration" available. Sad, very sad.

Far be it from us to belittle the efforts of our journalistic friend, but he has apparently adopted a distinctly romantic and idealistic view with a noticeable disregard for the practical phase of the question. We too delight in reading glamorous tales of the chivalrous past, but it is difficult to attune this to an age where our "inspirations" drink whiskey, smoke our cigarettes, and in general behave in such a fashion as to bring sadness and despair to those sensitive souls who long for some dainty goddess "destined to be mine and who shall strengthen me in virtue." O for an Aspasia.

H. L. Mencken suggests that these lovely parasites enforce their will upon the short haired animals by pretention of weakness. Some have dared to neglect even this delicacy. The dainty Lucretia Borgia delivered her inspirations through a liquid medium, varying it occasionally with powder for effect. In fact, there was general consternation when sometimes she would absent mindedly forget to shove a bit of arsenic into the evening broth. The many recipients of her attention negligently failed to give an account of the effects of her dreamless "inspiration." Naughty Lucretia.

Of course we can't compare the modern girl to Lucretia to any great extent. Lucretia had brains. The modern girl has the right idea, but she lacks the master's finesse and humaneness. The prevailing method now used in the best of families is of a continuous punitive nature, combining the best elements of verbal assault with the worst of intolerance.

For the benefit of those simple souls who depend on woman for their spiritual success in life, we sincerely hope that the evergrowing tendency of woman to usurp the place now held by man will not affect her ability to produce inspiration in wholesale lots. We, from the less orthodox ranks, would welcome a reversal of the situation that would permit us to dose out inspiration in return for daily sustenance.

Called Home

Mrs. H. S. Andrews of the Alumni office, was called yesterday to the bedside of her husband, Dr. Harry S. Andrews, in Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Andrews is an alumnus of the University, having graduated in 1925. He followed his work here by taking a two-year medical course at Vanderbilt University in Nashville. He obtained his M. D. degree in 1929, serving as an interne in the Vanderbilt hospital for some time.

IN THE WAKE OF NEWS

J. E. Dungan

O Blight! O Education where is thy sting? Here is this altogether charming young unsophisticated Jane Maybe speaking in the Ope Forum in tones unmistakably cynical. To wit:

"When fifteen minutes once a day
Will make us wise in every way
There's little left to know—
When one is twenty years or so."

There are many things one never knows, Jane, and there are some things we never know completely. Love may be simple, silly rot, but still it's something you never really know. Why even I may be able to teach in my own small way.

On the subject of feminine intelligence and the woman problem scientists are of the opinion that women are becoming less and less useful. It is altogether dogmatic to shut out the possibility of artificially creating life in chemical laboratories. Useless, irritating, and provoking they are nevertheless, quite natural and necessary for man's happiness, if but to reflect man's lesser nature.

John Patric from out of the West is well on his way to make an A in English Bagby's class. Unfortunately, we are not all so gifted as to be able to write plays on psychological subjects. However, Patric says one A is as good as another.

The Tar Heel has it that there were 4,932, 905 illiterates in the United States in 1930. Needless to say they were not all enrolled in colleges.

Walter G. Lowery, new addition to the staff, writes in a news story "Everybody's on the fence." He has made no explanation as to whether the reference is to the campus political campaign which is raging round our heads or not. Editor Holder has come out for open politics, but so far hasn't named any men. After a consultation with President Chase, Billy Arthur, Dean Paulsen, and Dixie (Professor Koch's dog) we have determined to support the following for various campus honors: For the presidency of the student body, Dr. Chase on account of his long experience and connection with the University.

On the student council an all-star selection will be put in the field, picked on the basis of efficiency and past experience—Ray Farris, Ed Hudgins, Charles Jonas, Syd Chappell, Jeff Fordham, and Obie Harmon. The name of Frank Graham is included because of his being an authority on constitutional affairs.

Billy Arthur already has signified his attention of running for the presidency of the senior class and says that his slogan will be "A little man for a big job." Billy, who is a friend of ours, explains, although he is a freshman this year, that since he is first in his family to be christened William he must then, of necessity, be a senior. The reasoning is more or less true.

We offer for the editorship of the Tar Heel J. Willis Posey, who has well earned the right to take his stand with "the Baby Radicals" of our collegiate history on the basis of his many critiques.

The presidency of the Athletic Council is still open to a good man who can "get the votes." However, Art Shires has intimated that if a good offer were made him he'd come here to take over football, wrestling, boxing, swimming, tennis, golf, checkers and croquet coaching and give up playing baseball for Commissioner Landis.

The student body will have none other than Leo Skeen as editor of The Buccaneer on account of his extraordinary repertorie of highly flavored jokes, and friends will make it impossible for anyone to defeat Professor Koch for the editorship of the Magazine, according to "Dixie," so we will probably endorse these two.

Maryon Saunders, rather an expert in publications, will be the one man whom we will support for the editorship of the Yackety Yack.

On the debate council we will have in the field—George McKie, Collier Cobb, and Archibald Henderson.

No better P. U. Board could be found in any university than that which would be composed of Howard Mumford Jones, Mrs. Howard Mumford Jones and Mrs. Howard Mumford Jones senior.

Our candidates will campaign on the following platform—

1. Rebuild Memorial hall by 1970.
2. Establish a Playmakers' organization.
3. Build the co-eds a new dormitory instead of a new gymnasium for the University.
4. Hold classes on alternate days only.
5. Build a swimming pool between South and the Library for the use of the student body.
6. Raise Coach Collins' salary: raise everybody's salary.
7. Secure a new automobile for Dougald McMillan.

This platform is incomplete and will be added to from time to time. Anyone having a suitable plank will do well to bring it to us. We issue this warning, though; we'll have no planks with splinters.

EXTRAVAGANT SETTINGS USED IN C. B. DE MILLE'S PRODUCTION "DYNAMITE"

Once called by critics the "bizarre Cecil B. DeMille," it appears that the producer-director is about to reclaim that title in "Dynamite," which comes today to the Carolina Theatre. It is his first talking picture.

It is his first picture in four years to present girls, gowns and gayety of the frivolous sort, although his early reputation was made with this type of material.

"Dynamite" is said to have food for the eye in two particular sequences, one at a country club, the other in the home of Cynthia, the feminine lead. The country club sequence finds Kay Johnson and Julia Faye racing in the sensational new "aero-wheels" to determine whether Miss Johnson shall pay $100,000 or $200,00 for Miss Faye's husband, Conrad Nagel!

To provide the dramatic leavening for this highly modern situation, DeMille shows Charles Bickford being condemned to death and, later, a marriage of Bickford to Miss Johnson on the eve of his execution. How Bickford escapes death, and what happens afterward, at a party in Cynthia's home, and in the coal mine of which the lead is gang boss, completes the dramatic framework of Jeanie MacPherson's latest original.

It is evident, therefore, that "Dynamite" is of the type of "Manslaughter," "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?" rather than "The Ten Commandments," "King of Kings" and "The Godless Girl," more recent DeMille productions.

Star Guard Is High Scorer For Tar Heels With 7 Points.

PURSER LEADS WITH NINE

Following Slow Start Carolina Gets Going In Second Half To Defeat All Star Outfit From Charlotte 23 - 19.

Displaying a snappy offensive in the last stages of the game, the Carolina Tar Heels last night defeated the fast Charlotte Monograms by the score of 23 to 19. The game was played in the Tin Can before a large, but unenthusiastic crowd.

Artie Marpet, acting captain for the Tar Heels, was high scorer for Carolina and played one of the best floor games of the evening. Johnny Purser, fast Monogram guard, was high scorer for the Queen City aggregation with nine points to his credit.

The game started off slowly with neither team showing advantage. In the first half both teams passed cautiously, but the shooting was way off. The score at the end of the half found the Tar Heels leading by a one-point margin, 10-9.

In the second half the Tar Heels played a smoother and more careful game with the result that the final minutes of the game found them beyond reach of the Charlotte cagers.

Tar Babies Down Durham High 41-25

The Carolina Tar Babies added the Durham high school Bulldogs to their growing list of victims when they defeated the Bull City lads in a fast game at the Tin Can last night by the score of 41-25.

The freshmen started off early, Beale sinking two beautiful goals in rapid succession. Lineberger, guard, bagged a long one to make the score 6-0. Edwards, Durham star, broke the ice for the visitors by caging a shot from the sidelines. The quarter ended with the score in Carolina's favor, 12-9.

Durham staged a rally to open the second quarter and as a result pulled up to within one point of the Tar Babies. Coach Enright shoved in his reserves and they provided the punch to enable Carolina to maintain a lead of four points at the half time —20-16.

The Tar Babies started the second half rather slowly and at the end of the third quarter the score stood 28-22. The freshmen staged a rally to open the final period, which netted them 13 points before Durham could garner a marker. The game ended with the score 41-25.

BAUCOM TO LEAD CROSS COUNTRY TEAM NEXT YEAR

Cliff Baucom, of Marshville, was elected captain of the 1930 cross-country team at a meeting of the members of last year's Southern Conference Champions yesterday afternoon. Baucom placed fourth in the Conference meet held here last November, finishing first man for Carolina. This will be his third year as a member of the squad.

Dekes Take Lead

The strong Deke fraternity team nosed out a victory over the Sigma Phi Epsilon team Tuesday afternoon to win 23 to 15. The first half ended with the teams tied at nine all, but at the opening of the second period the Dekes came out of their slump, and led by Fenner, varsity football player, scored 14 points in short order. Odell Sapp, former all-state football star, rang up 8 points for S. P. E. to be high scorer for the game. Chatham and Fenner, Deke players, each made 6 points, and Reading and Magner for S. P. E. played bang-up games.

FROSH COURTMEN SET FOR DEACONS

Tar Baby Team Will Meet Wake Forest As Prelude To Varsity Encounter.

The Tar Baby basketball squad is drilling intensively for its Saturday night game in Raleigh with the Wake Forest frosh, which will precede a varsity tangle between the Tar Heels and Deacons, and will mark the first appearance of the Carolina freshmen against freshman competition.

The Tar Babies have shown class and power in opening games with Leaksville Y, Oak Ridge and Durham high. Teamwork has been consistently good, and several of the men appear to be varsity stars in the making.

Reporting of Stuart Chandler, star forward, for winter football left a temporary gap, but Wilmer Hines, converted center, looked good in the berth against Durham high, and once more the freshmen are coming along well.

Hines, southern junior tennis champion, with his angular form, his height and his fast gait, is one of the most promising of the youngsters, and Beale, another center, is another up and coming star.

Dunn has shown well at forward, and likewise Riggs except that the latter has been handicapped by a bad ankle. Henry and Lineberger have been showing best of the guard material, but there are several other men pushing these boys hard for their posts.

More promising of the other candidates are Moore, Markham, Ferebee and Grant, forwards; Royster and Hamlet, centers; and Davis, Walck, Barnett, Connor and Peree, guards.

Old West Beats Grimes

The Old West basketball team had an easy time defeating Grimes dormitory Tuesday afternoon 33 to 18. Hinton, Old West substitute, scored 18 points to lead his team to victory, while Allen chalked up 8 markers for Grimes. Morrison and Dellerger, Old West players, and Justice and Curl for Grimes, turned in good games for their respective teams.

Lineup:

Old West (33)		Grimes (18)
Woodley (3)	R. F.	Long (2)
Davis (2)	L. F.	Allen (8)
Volk	C.	Justice (3)
Clarke (1)	R. G.	Curl (3)
Sherrill (1)	L. G.	Hodges (3)

Substitutoins: for Old West, Morrison (4), Hinton (18), Dellerger (4).

Phi Gams Down Pikas

The Phi Gamma Delta intramural basketball team completely vanquished the Pi Kappa Alpha quint in a fast game yesterday 30-16. The game was very close at the beginning of the game, the score being 9-9 at the half. Paul Boucher was the outstanding star of the game, and played all over the floor besides ringing up 14 counters to be the high point scorer of the day. "Bub" Patterson was the outstanding Pika man.

Lineup:

Phi Gam. D. (30)		Pi K. A. (16)
White (3)	R. F.	Brady (2)
Howard (5)	L. F.	Worman (7)
Hubbard (2)	C.	Patterson (5)
Boucher (14)	R. G.	Lowrance (2)
French	L. G.	Ashcraft

Substitutions: for Phi Gam, Henry (6), Dozier, McCleod; for Pika, Clark.

SIDELIGHTS

by "Heinie"

In a recent issue of the N. C. State Technician we find that the basketball situation in North Carolina is thoroughly discussed and much mention is made of the fact that the Tar Heels and the Wolfpack are fighting it out for second honors in the Big Five basketball league. Duke has been conceded the leadership of the basketball clubs in North Carolina thus far this season, but their recent showing against W. & L. may bring their average down somewhat. However the three leading court aggregations of the state lost by good margins to the Generals when they made their N. C. tour.

Although at the first of the season Duke and W. & L. were conceded to be among the most prominent favorites in the Southern Conference, the odds have been shifted more in favor of the Generals as a result of their recent victory. However, it will be remembered with regret by the Carolina students that after a Tar Heel victory over Duke in the Tin Can the Blue Devils eliminated U. N. C. in the S. I. C. tournament last year in Atlanta. The Blue Devils went to the titular match with N. C. State, in the Southern Conference meet, with the odds to win but this time lost. Now we again note that the Blue Devils will enter the conference tournament with a defeat to mar their chances for an S. I. C. title, and as they seem to be North Carolina's best chance for a Southern Conference title it is hoped that they come through with a win, if we don't.

The following article is a summary of the N. C. State basketball situation as it appeared in the N. C. State Technician:

"Coach Tebell is centering his attack of both offense and defense around the last of the all-southern material, Captain Johnnie Johnson. With the graduation of Goodwin, Bob Warren, and Captain Hank Young, not much old and experienced material is left. The state champion freshman team of last year saved the day somewhat as Jimmy Brown and Woodward were advanced to the varsity. Both are forwards and went like a house afire before the Christmas holidays, but since then Brown has failed to show up. Also, big Gus Wright, a letter man from last season's squad, has failed to report for practice. Each of the men left for their respective homes for the holidays, and nothing has been heard of them since."

Another article in the same issue shows us what others think of the Tar Heels' prospects for the rest of the season and how many are judging us:

"At Carolina, Coach Jim Ashmore has just about found his long-awaited quintet in the persons of Edwards at center, Neiman and Cleland at forwards, and Tom Alexander and Brown at guards. Illness kept Neiman and Edwards from the squad before Christmas, but since then, with plenty of floor work and scrimmage, the two have shown considerable ability.

"The real truth is that Carolina is short of cage material this year, but Coach Ashmore has put such a finished touch on the material available that real things are looked for from U. N. C. this season. And, too, many subs are on hand, with eagerness for basketball that will make it hard to keep them off the team."

Further comments on North Carolina basketball, from the Technician.

"Davidson and Wake Forest. —Younger states that the Wildcats are anything but tame on the hardwood, and he has centered his playing around Captain Frontis Johnson. This lad performs at center, forward, or guard. The latest change has been to move Johnson to center, with ex-Captain Carl Pritchett and Bill Goodson at forwards; and Proctor and Jimmy Moore at guards.

"Rusk, Shepard, and Milton, and Mathis have all been showing up well and are fighting to be made first choice.

"Turning to the west in Wake county, Wake Forest is found with an indefinite per cent Demon in the Old Gold and Black.

"The mentor is handicapped by lack of material familiar with his mode of attack. Jones, letter man and center, Hutchins and Quillen, both forwards, form the season's nucleus around which Coach Pat Miller is building his team, with Edwards and Newsome seeming the most likely candidates for the guard berths.

"A soph, up from the freshman team, has attracted much attention at forward, and with his fast floor work and accurate shooting it will be hard to keep Jimmy Brogden off the first called."

Golfers Preparing For Coming Season

A driving net is being installed in the Tin Can for the use of the golf team, it was learned yesterday from Coach Kenfield. The net will be used in an effort to improve the stance and the swing of the older members of the team as well as teaching the aspirants the correct way in which to drive.

Much time will be spent indoors developing the drive, together with the practicing of putting. Then the men will be taken to Hope Valley golf club, which will be to the golf team what Kenan stadium is to the football team.

Coach Kenfield, who divides his time between the coaching of golf and tennis, declared yesterday that the golf team this year would be somewhat on a par with the team of last year. He has two experienced men in Meade Willis and Charlie Chatham, members of the team last year.

Captain Allen Leads Conference Champions To Victory Over W. & L.; Frosh Lose.

The hard-hitting and scrappy Carolina boxing team, Southern Conference Champions last year, defeated the Washington and Lee team 5 - 2 in Lexington Saturday night. However, the W. and L. freshman boxers whipped the Tar Babies by the same score.

The results of the bouts in the varsity meet are as follows:

175-lb. class—Warren (C) decision over Heaps (W. and L.).

Heavyweight—Faulkoner (W. and L.) knocked out Koenig (C).

Most of the freshman fights were very close, but the W. and L. team had a decided edge on the Tar Babies.

The results of the freshman meet are as follows:

115-lb. class—Carolina forfeited to Gunter (W. and L.).

175-lb. class—Cowans (W. and L.) got decision over Landis (C).

Students Leave Room In Order And Return To Find It Flooded

The occupants of 108 Mangum leaving their room in perfect order Monday morning, returned from dinner to find water gushing madly from beneath their door and flooding the hall. Upon entering the room they discovered water three inches deep upon the floor. Gazing around the room, they saw that someone bent on destruction had broken off the little "doohickey" at one end of the radiator, and apparently frightened at the size of the stream gushing forth, had plugged the hole with a rag and pencil. It had run long enough, however, to thoroughly wet all the books of both boys, an expensive table cover, a folder of Geology V maps which had taken hours of preparation and work, and several photographs, all upon a table adjacent to the radiator. The water had splashed and surged joyously over the room, wetting handbags, trunks and their contents, rugs, bedclothing, clothing, shoes, and everything else on or close to the floor.

The buildings department and the janitors were immediately notified. The scene of the catastrophe soon drew a crowd of interested onlookers. Someone suggested in all seriousness that the two boys go into the public bath business, charging a quarter a throw. It was also recommended that soap flakes be thrown into the water and Dean Paulsen's monopoly on laundry service be broken up.

After many uncomplimentary remarks concerning the doers of the dastardly deed, the representatives of the buildings department and the janitors got to work to repair the damage. It is reported that the guilty ones have confessed and offered to pay for the damage, which is estimated at twenty dollars.

This flood is the climax (we hope) of a series of disorders which have been going on in Mangum dormitory since the first of the quarter. Dumping has been rife; bloodcurdling yells have been heard in the small hours of the night. One room was completely emptied of furniture. A boy on the first floor wakes up in the middle of the night with eyes and nose smarting with pain to find his bed full of pepper. And if reports are true, every one of the happenings can be traced to one person. Retaliation is certainly in order.

During the last two days of the convention the group made observation and inspection trips to several new bridges near New York and also visited the sites of construction of the new Eighth Avenue subway in New York City.

Dean Braune stated yesterday that the meetings were very successful and that the attendance was quite large.

314 MEN FAIL TO RETURN TO STATE

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 21.—A report given out by the Registrar's office at State college shows that 314 men and co-eds who were registered last term were lost to Old Man Scholastic, Hoover Prosperity, and Dan Cupid, through the Devil called Transfer.

While no official figures have been announced for the total, indications are that the enrollment for the winter quarter will be about two hundred less than that of last fall.

The registration of freshmen shows a large decline in the number that returned for the second quarter's work. But the new men who will take freshman work will swell the total for freshmen to about 550, compared with the 774 for last term.

A very conservative estimate would place the total registration at 1,600.

Leavitt To Return

Dr. S. E. Leavitt, Professor of Spanish at the University, who has been doing research work in the libraries of Madrid, Spain, will return to Chapel Hill in time to conduct his classes for the spring term.

LATIN AMERICAN VOLUME ISSUED BY LOCAL PRESS

The Life Of Miranda Is A Romance With Southern Setting.

A foremost student of Latin-American history, William Spence Robertson, a workman with a reputation for painstaking and exhaustive labor, has written a book for the University Press. The first copies of his work, The Life of Miranda, were received here last week.

Appearing in two volumes, it is most attractively bound and printed. The illustrations include over thirty excellent portraits of Miranda and many of the world figures which he encountered in the course of his extraordinary career.

Following a policy that it has adopted in publishing other valuable works, the Press will offer a special edition of the book, of which 90 copies will be for sale, signed by the author. Printed on Alexandre Japan paper, the copies are bound with imported sheepskin parchment and buckram sides.

The Life of Miranda teems with the glamor, romance and high adventure fiction, and has, still, all the authenticy and clarity of facts that Professor Robertson's careful research and arrangement of subject matter can give it. A statement from the officials of the Press gives a lively account of the book in brief, revealing a bit of the lively human interest that predominates the tale:

"It would be difficult to imagine a more spectacular or romantic career than that of Francisco de Miranda, Precursor and Knight-Errant of Spanish American liberty. The years that spanned his career include an era which for revolutionary changes is unique in the history of the world. He took part in the struggle for the independence of the United States, in the French Revolution, and in the emancipation of South America. Scarcely a personage of his time did he fail to meet or captivate, apparently at first sight, and his travels took him all over the world.

"Not the least interesting part of his journeying was his tour of the United States, of which, like most of his experience, he kept voluminous records. Arriving at a strategic moment—the close of the Revolution—he obtained passage for the Carolinas, landing at Newbern, where he admired Tryon's Palace, complained that his rest was disturbed by huge insects and frogs, praised the mockingbirds—and traveled on.

"In his progress up the coast he met the leading lights of Charleston, of Philadelphia, of New York. Washington invited him to dine and was somewhat unfavorably written down in the diary as of "demeanour circumspect, taciturn, and inexpressive, but a suave manner and great moderation make it endurable." In New York he met Alexander Hamilton, too, and—alas for the poor Colonel—Colonel Smith.

"All this time Miranda was attempting to spread the flame of liberty to South America by enlisting in its cause the soldiers and statesmen he met. But little official encouragement came his way, and he went on to England, toured Europe with Colo-

Mr. Boss Hill Delineates Life's Odyssey For Feature Writer

(By J. P. Tyson)

"How are you Mr. Boss Man, how are you today? Got anything for me. Any clothes to be mended, any pants to be pressed?" Thus you are accosted by a dignified gentleman with a very dressy black derby hat. Now you have met one of the outstanding characters on the campus, Mr. Boss Hill.

Boss' life story reads like that of one of Horatio Alger's heroes. Boss was originally from Scotland and from there he and his parents journeyed to and settled down in Hillsboro, N. C. His life was that of an ordinary youth until he reached the age of seventeen. Then young Hill became infected with the wanderlust germ. At that tender age he shook the historical dust of quaint old Hillsboro from his soles and went to Birmingham, Ala. He arrived there with 35 cents in his pockets and he says that he lived on that sum for two weeks. After a two weeks' loafing spree he got a job as a clean-up boy in a tailor shop.

He there learned the tailor trade and has stuck to it ever since. After an eight years' stay in Birmingham he then went to the University of Richmond. From there he wandered to the Navy Yards at Norfolk, where he worked for a while. Soon becoming tired of Norfolk he immigrated to Camp Jackson. From there he went to Baltimore where he obtained his masters degree in a Hebraic tailor shop. After a short stay in Washington he got the "Tar Heel blues" and came home to Durham.

He spent twenty years at Trinity college and then decided that Carolina was "the place." Boss has been here nearly two years and says that it is the best place yet. At present he is working on his Ph. D.

He is married; has no near relatives; and, with the aid of his wife, runs an altering and repairing shop on East Franklin street. Although Boss is completely satisfied with Chapel Hill he wants to follow the example of the Carnegie athlete and go to the Pacific Coast, where, according to his assertion, he has an uncle who is the president of a large and well known university. This uncle has offered Boss a pretentious home on the campus if he will but come renew family ties and turn out a neater crew of collegiates. Boss is at a great loss to know whether to go or not.

Although Boss is of pure Scotch blood his name is just plain MacHill without the Mac. He says that of the two things that his mother country is famous for, he prefers the jokes second best. His favorite writer is Peter Dawson, who writes his name on tall green bottles labeled "Purest Produce of Scotland."

Boss says that he likes a derby because it is a mark of his profession, and, too, he says that it is much more formal.

All great men have a hobby—some collect rare books, some hoard rare old manuscripts and some gather Indian relics, but Boss' hobby and vocation is gathering unpressed and torn clothes.

Diseases Declined In County in 1929

Reportable communicable diseases declined in number in Orange county during 1929, according to Dr. S. A. Nathan, county quarantine officer.

Whooping cough and German measles headed the list with 79 cases each, 75 per cent among white children. Syphilis cases numbered 44, chiefly among negroes. Gonorrhea cases were 14 in number, nearly all of them white.

There were 20 cases of diphtheria, 3 of pellegra, 22 of scarlet fever, 22 of chicken pox and but one case, that of a negro, of small pox. Influenza, which became a reportable disease in October, has numbered three cases since that time.

Debate Squad Meeting

The debate squad will hold its regular meeting tonight at 7:30 in 201 Murphey hall. Dean F. F. Bradshaw will address the squad on the subject of modern science and its relation to theistic faith, this being the subject which will be debated in the coming debates with Emory and Georgia Tech. The team will be selected February 6.

Glee Club To Give Contest in Durham

The University glee club will appear in concert tomorrow night at 8:15 in the junior high school auditorium in Durham under the auspices of the Durham high school music clubs.

The group appearing will consist of 35 men, including those members only recently added.

As in previous concerts, Professor Nelson O. Kennedy will offer two groups of piano solos during the program.

Included among the selection to be sung by the glee club are the three songs to be used in the national contest. They are: the 1930 prize song, "Hark! Jolly Shepherds" by Morley; the Carolina choice song, "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt; and the new alma mater, "Hark the Sound" by Arthur Edward Johnstone.

U. D. C. To Entertain

Mrs. G. K. G. Henry announces on behalf of the United Daughters of the Confederacy that that organization will entertain the public Saturday at the Carolina Inn with a benefit bridge and dance from three to five o'clock in the afternoon and from eight to twelve o'clock in the evening.

Tea will be served at five. Admission for the afternoon portion of the program will be fifty cents, while the evening entertainment will cost a like amount.

Dancing, a fashion show, vaudeville stunts, and other forms of entertainment will be offered in the evening.

Arrangements for attendance can be made with Mrs. Blanche Patterson before Friday night.

Dr. McKay To Speak

Dr. R. W. McKay of the McKay Urological Clinic of Charlotte, will speak to the medical society of the University in Caldwell hall Friday night at 7:30 o'clock. His address will be of much interest to those students who expect to enter medicine as well as to the medical students. Everyone is cordially invited. The lecture will be illustrated with lantern slides.

Hypnotized Student Gets Into Trouble

It seemed, according to the psychology lecturer, that a student in a far away college had learned hypnotism, and had practiced upon his roommate, finally achieving such proficiency that a snap of the finger would put the subject into hypnotic coma.

"You have just come from your class. The professor lectured upon . . . phases of the atomic theory. I'll read you the points he made. He told a funny story about the Pullman porter who didn't understand the law of gravity. Frank Finker was late as usual, and John Duncan dropped his book in his hurry to reach his seat . . . the prof ran short of chalk and sent Mike Ryan after some," said the roommate of the dazed student, carefully.

An hour before the preceding one-sided conversation had taken place, the humorous-minded hypnotist, walking to the campus with his roommate, had put the latter into a hypnotic state, hidden him in the basement, attended his class, made careful note of the proceedings and narrated them to his subject, and then, after instructing him to forget that he had been hypnotized, brought him "out of it."

The erstwhile absentee, who hadn't any cuts to spare, received a notice from the office of the registrar asking about his absence on the preceding day, and the climax of the story takes place in the registrar's office where the argument staged there has become a classic.

Der Deutsche Verein

Dr. Caldwell of the history department has consented to make a short talk before the members of the German society on the "First German Hero." Dr. Caldwell, according to R. S. Matthews, is an entertaining speaker and his talk should be interesting especially to students in all German classes; all are urged to attend. A part of the meeting will be given over to a short musical program with the singing of German songs. There will be group singing for those who care to participate. After this refreshments will be served closing the meeting. The society will assemble in the regular Kiwanis room in the basement of the Methodist church Friday evening at 7:30, January 24. Visitors are welcome and everyone is requested to arrive on time.

GRADUATION DAY JUNE 10

New Schedule Is Effort to Secure Larger Alumni Attendance at Annual Exercises; May Hold Open Air Exercises In Kenan Stadium.

Plans for commencement, although not yet complete, have received several changes from those of the past five years. The exercises will extend from Saturday, June 7, through Tuesday, June 10, this being a specific change from prior "week-end" commencements, which opened on Friday and closed on Monday.

President Chase suggested this alteration to the alumni board with the view of procuring a larger alumni attendance at the graduation exercises with the alumni day set for Monday instead of Saturday. The suggestion was recently accepted by the faculty.

There will be ten graduation classes in reunion at commencement this year. In addition to the eight classes, composing two college generations as regulated by the Dix plan, there will be a meeting of two additional classes.

The Baby class, of 1929, will have its first reunion at the University then. The officers of this class are: Bowman Gray of Winston-Salem, president; Walter Spearman, former editor of the Tar Heel and now a student at the University of Lyons, France, secretary.

There will be the regular meeting of the class which graduated 25 years ago—the quarter of a century reunion—which will call together the class of 1905 this year. Judge N. A. Townsend of Dunn is president and W. T. Shore of Charlotte, secretary.

The Dix plan, which provides for the convening of four consecutive classes as one college generation, will bring together this spring the graduates of '14, 15, 16, '17 and of '95, '96, '97, and '98.

The secretaries of the various classes, together with the commencement marshals appointed by W. T. Shore, president of the alumni association, constitute the reunion committee. There is a meeting of the committee to be held in the near future for the purpose of planning the details of the reunions.

So far no place for holding the commencement exercises has been decided upon. Since the completion of Memorial hall in 1895, all graduation exercises have been held there. But the condemnation of this structure by experts late last fall necessitates the choice of another place. Open air exercises in the Kenan Memorial stadium are being considered.

The program of the Commencement exercises is as follows:

Saturday, June 7—Class day; senior exercises.

Sunday, June 8.—Baccalaureate sermon.

Monday, June 9.—Alumni day; general alumni meeting, alumni luncheon, and alumni ball.

Tuesday, June 10.—Graduation exercises.

The commencement speaker has not yet been selected.

NATHAN REPORTS ON DORM STORES

Dormitory agencies, from the standpoint of the city health department, are in fair condition, says Dr. S. A. Nathan, who inspected all the college dormitories Wednesday.

Three of the agencies were using sandwich toasters, and another was preparing hot drinks for sale. Instructions were given to discontinue all cooking, since fire regulations prohibit it.

About half the agencies were not swept and dusted properly, and in many of them empty soft drink bottles were found. These collect ants, and orders were given that they be removed.

Dormitory radiators and walls were not properly cleaned, says Dr. Nathan, who suggested more care in this matter. No vermin whatever were found, the report concluded.

Dean Rankin of Duke To Speak In Goldsboro

Dr. Robert S. Rankin, assistant dean of the graduate school of Duke University, will be one of the principal speakers at the school of citizenship to be held in Goldsboro next month, according to announcement yesterday by Mrs. Mary O. Cowper of the League of Women Voters and Morgan Vining of the University extension division, who are arranging the program.

The school of citizenship will be held in conjunction with the annual convention of the League of Women Voters. The meetings will be under the auspices of the league and the extension division.

Dr. Rankin will address a joint session of the two groups on Tuesday night, February 11, in Goldsboro. His subject will be "Election Laws in North Carolina." Demonstrations of the new election law will be another feature of the same program.

Dr. Rankin is regarded as an authority on government, and is especially interested in the state and local units. He won his A. B. degree at Tusculum College and his doctorate at Princeton. At Duke he is associate professor of political economy and assistant dean of the graduate school. He is the author of numerous articles on political science, and has addressed a number of organizations on this and allied subjects.

Sketch Club May Organize Juniors

The Sketch club met yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. E. Caldwell, 412 Rosemary lane. A costumed model was used as the subject for drawing.

The next meeting will be held Wednesday Januar,y 29, at the same place. The regular monthly discussion of American landscape painters will be resumed at that time, the subject being "Winslow Homer."

Members of the club have been seriously considering the formation of a junior sketch club. Inasmuch as there is no art taught in the schools of the community, such a club would be especially beneficial to the children, it is believed.

The Business Man Grins Again

Secretary of Labor Davis revealed a highly encouraging nationwide increase in employment in a report to President Hoover Tuesday. According to the report, the steel, iron and automobile industries, along with virtually every other major industry in the country, have shown increased activity since January 6.

The upward trend in employment during the last two weeks, marks the termination of a continual decline since the stock market deflation last November.

Secretary Davis' report of an improvement in the labor situation closely follows an announcement by Secretary Lamont that a record year in construction and maintenance of public work and by public utilities is apparently assured, with an outlay of seven billion dollars in these fields probable during the year. A highly optimistic note is evident in the business news this week, aside from the Davis report. Applications were filed by two railroads Tuesday for permission to issue $30,000,000 in bonds, a large part of which is to be spent for new equipment and improvements this year. Secretary Davis declares that "we can expect a great deal of business in 1930, and the present year should see us well on the way to complete recovery."

Mob psychology is an important factor in business fluctuations. Disturbances such as the stock market collapse, even though they do not reflect the real business conditions of the nation, almost inevitably produce depressions. Temporary price declines create the impression in the buying public that the general price level will continue to fall. Merchants refuse to restock in the expectation of lower prices, and the consumers hold their purchases to a minimum. Thus demand is decreased and an actual depression frequently results from comparatively insignificant changes in the business structure. During the past few months business has been in the throes of a depression of this type.

The principle works both ways, however, and there is every indication that renewed confidence in the soundness of the basic industries will result from the favorable news of the past few days. Cheerfulness will beget cheerfulness, and all lines of business activity will feel the influence of a favorable psychological reaction, in all probability. Smiles are appearing again on the countenances of business men who have been decidedly "down in the mouth" since last November.

Simmons Vs. Bailey

Politics, favorite sport of the masses, received great impetus when Josiah William Bailey recently announced that he would oppose Senator Furnifold M. Simmons when the latter stands for re-election to the United States senate. Senator Simmons' right to a continuation of his seat is being seriously questioned by the "Old Line" Democrats of the state.

From now until the primary in June we may expect to witness a campaign replete with strife and bitterness, in spite of the fact that Mr. Bailey has stated that his campaign will not be a personal one. Many people have already declared that they will stick by the aged Simmons, while many others have minced no words in telling the world that they will never again vote for the man who deserted his party at the time when it needed him most. Politically-minded citizens of the state seem to be firmly divided into two categories with reference to the Simmons-Bailey controversy. One group looks upon Simmons as a martyr to his convictions. This they offer as justification for his stand in the last presidential campaign. The other group looks upon the present senior senator from North Carolina as a traitor to the party which has honored him and kept him in the state's choicest office for the last thirty years. Such are the two conflicting points of view around which the Simmons-Bailey controversy will hinge.

As we see the issue, Simmons has forfeited all right to ask the voters of the state of North Carolina to return him to his position in the party which he deserted in the grim fiasco of 1928. What can be his appeal now, when the people of the state vividly remember his stand on that occasion? Can he forget the manner in which he walked over the prostrate form of the body which made him what he is and has been for the last thirty years? In the face of the late unpleasantness (which the Democratic Party will not soon forget) can he have the audacity to ask for the political support of his people?

As for Bailey, there are many people who neither love nor admire him, although they will vote for him because of the treachery of Simmons. In the case of the last national election many North Carolina voters sided with Simmons simply because of their dislike for Al Smith. In spite of this fact, however, there is no risk in prophesying that the senior senator will not be able to hold these votes when his own seat is at stake, for the elements of opposition to Smith were not, and are not, to be found in Bailey.

Yet it would be manifestly unfair to close this discourse with a mere statement of the facts which will undoubtedly form the framework of the coming senatorial controversy in North Carolina. It must be said that Simmons has represented the state very well during the long time that he has been in the United States senate. His ability as a senator cannot be doubted. Borah, Reed, and Simmons are names which will stand out in the records of the senate for many years to come. Simmons' age, however, renders him incapable of performing the duties of the office as effectively as he once did. The old order must pass away and give place to the new in every line of endeavor. The United States Senate is no exception to this statement.

Strictly speaking, Simmons has violated the trust which his party placed in him. If present gossip means anything, that aged gentleman must pay the price of such conduct. Josiah William Bailey looms up as the most logical successor to the present senior senator from North Carolina.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

THE CO-ED OPINION OF COLLEGE MEN

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

It seems universal for the college men to express their opinion of the co-eds, and they are not usually very complimentary either. Here is an article that I picked up recently, issued by the co-eds in another university, that seems to express their ideas of college men. And some of them strike pretty close home. It is entitled "Helpful Hints for College Men."

"Don't think that because a girl looks at you or speaks to you that she is in love with you—99 cases out of a given 98 she is not," they advise.

"Don't try to become popular by growing a mustache on the front of a babyish face. Your youth is even more noticeable, and you look so funny.

"Don't intimate that you have lived a pretty fast life; we don't believe it, and it would not add to your manly attractions if we did.

"Don't consider a girl empty headed because she never says a serious word to you. She is trying to meet you on your own level.

"Don't expect to gain popularity by establishing a reputation for taking a girl out only once. We can't get excited over a date with a man we never expect to see again.

"Don't think that an invitation to a sorority dance is a result of your overwhelming charm. It probably means that she considers you harmless.

"Don't believe every girl who intimates that she thinks you are wonderful. She is just giving you what is necessary in order to keep you amiable.

"Don't be surprised at your lack of popularity if you persist in smoking in a car the windows of which are closed.

"Don't be afraid that every girl you favor with a 'hello' is trying to kidnap you. You may be disappointed.

"Don't consider a girl dumb because she is not eager to neck you the first time that you go out together. She may not have had time to realize your singular charm.

"Don't hold it against a girl if she treats you like a high-grade moron. It is just possible that she has reason to believe that you are one.

"Remember that:

"It never hurts your popularity to arrive on time instead of an hour late or half an hour early.

"A little genuine consideration and thoughtfulness goes farther than all your sex appeal.

"Too-evident conceit does not enhance your charm.

"You are not necessarily the most desirable thing on the face of the earth.

"And a final piece of advice:

"Don't think that even if you mind all these rules you'll come up to our specifications. We have our own private lists of what men should do."

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Harry Woodburn Chase

(By F. J. M.)

Editor's note: This is the third of a series of thumbnail sketches of prominent University men.

HARRY W. CHASE

HARRY WOODBURN CHASE: For more than 300 years, the Chases of Massachusetts have moved not more than five miles from their original settlement . . . with the exception of Harry W.'s uncle, who ran off to become a sailor at an early age and sailed the seven seas. Harry Woodburn, his middle name is that of his mother's family, was born in Groveland, Mass., on April 11, 1883. At Hanover, New Hampshire, where he attended Dartmouth College, he studiously pursued philosophy . . . and continued his formal studies at Clark University, where, after he had obtained his Ph. D. degree, he stayed for a year, working in abnormal child psychology. A new chair had been created at that time at the University of North Carolina. Professor Herman Harold Horne at Dartmouth, who was a Carolina alumnus, suggested Dr. Chase for the professorship. He came. And the rest of his educational career is well known. After June of 1919 friends of H. W. C. commenced receiving letters from him which were written on stationery marked, "University of North Carolina—Office of the President."

His life, like many another good man, has not at all been a bed of roses. His height has caused him often to mutter imprecations in the general direction of the Pullman company . . . it is no fun to have to sleep in a berth on a train, with one's knees obstructing a free and easy passage for the aberrations of the chin, as the head is moved from side to side. His devotion to detective stories is well-known . . . he once collaborated on the writing of one . . . and for a long time, he used to go to Durham in order to purchase the Detective Story Magazine. And all too frequently, the worthy book-seller tried to divert Harry's taste from the thrillers to the more weighty periodicals that apparently are published. Things came to such a pass that it was found necessary to have Mrs. Chase subscribe to the magazine rather than continually run the fire of the Durham bookman. Committees may be fine for committeemen and the like, but all too often must the prexy listen to many reports of committees . . . committees that grow more boring as the day goes by. Another dark spot in his bright life is his distaste for brown bread and boston baked beans. What would you serve a real native of Massachusetts if he were a dinner-guest? Boston baked beans and brown bread. It is easy to see his hardships. "Boiled New England dinner" means cabbage. But in spite of his being a New Englander, don't serve him cabbage. If you must please him, bring on some nice fresh lobsters . . . he doesn't get them here very often.

He likes New York and Chicago equally well. Perhaps Chicago better, for there, in Marshall Field's, he can obtain shirts that approach his sleeve-length. He'd rather be in Paris, than London. He travels more than he stays at home. Nevertheless, when he's home, not playing a friendly game of bridge, which he likes, or entertaining guests, he delights sitting in a soft . . . he likes soft chairs . . . chair, with a good fire and an interesting detective story book. Or if he doesn't feel like straightening pictures, he doesn't care for them to be too high, he likes to sleep and stay in bed. He claims he's very lazy and that one of his pet aversions is work, but his secretary, Miss Vann, insists that he is very industrious and even his wife admits that he works in spells. If he had another six months' holiday, he would take a sea-voyage . . . probably to Europe or the Orient . . . which he would like to see. The ocean serves as an efficient pick-you-up for him. He rarely is seasick, even when everyone else is prostrated . . . some outcroppings of his uncle's influence may be noticed here.

Everyone testifies to his excellent sense of humor and general even-temperedness. Even his conversion to the talking-pictures . . . especially the comedies and melodramas . . . hasn't spoiled him as an excellent dictator of letters . . . witty, interesting and not too fast for Miss Vann. He corresponds in spurts . . . thirty letters one day—none for several days following. According to authorities, he writes a good letter. And they go to many countries . . . the bulk of the foreign ones to England and France. Although he frequently reads both French and German books, he doesn't correspond in those languages. His desk and papers! . . . as someone in a position to say it said, "he has an orderly mind and a terribly disorderly desk." Which may account for his desire to work in bed. His annual report to the board of trustees he works on at home . . . and he writes all his speeches in longhand, and they are then typed. His best recent speech was one for which he had but a day or so of preparation, at Commencement 1928. He receives many requests as a "speechifier" and although he must refuse many, he accepts as often as possible.

He smokes Lucky Strike cigarettes exclusively . . . which are bought by the cartons in a local cash-and-carry . . . and certain letters cause him to smoke more than others . . . although on the whole, he is a moderate smoker.

His tastes in book are catholic but in ties . . . his wife long ago stopped purchasing ties for him because he likes fancy and colorful cravats—preferably red—and those that Mrs. Chase bought were usually too sombre and quiet.

His insistent assertions that he's lazy may be true after all—he hates cold baths (all energetic people delight in them), he never gardens and doesn't want to, likes golf but detests exercise, although he occasionally does setting-up exercises which last for a day or so, and he drives an automobile and likes it, but he is terribly dumb . . . about the engine and repairs. He even rests in bed in the afternoon . . . sleeps late in the morning if appointments permit . . . and revels in hot, languid weather, disliking the cold.

President Chase is known to be a modern educator but the phonograph and the radio haven't as yet entered the Chase home. In time, Mr. and Mrs. expect to succumb to the "fad." And if you think he is old because of his lily-white hair, you are mistaken. He has been grey since his high school days, when he had an attack of typhoid, which left him with the venerable-looking hair. While musing over some ponderous thought, such as "If Diamond Dick did not kill Mr. Higginbotham, who did, then?" he has the habit of walking up and down the length of the room. As a boy he collected postage-stamps but today omniverous reading is his only diversion. He is very interested in the South and carefully reads many of the state papers, in addition to the New York Times, in order to keep in contact with this section of the country. There are people who intimate that he doesn't return mystery story books as soon as he could.

Reminiscences

(From Tar Heel Files)

10 Years Ago This Week—

William Blount, giant Tar Heel varsity center, was recently placed on the mythical all-South Atlantic team by the Richmond News- Leader.

Nine fraternities on the Hill have recently initiated a total of 23 men.

Davidson College beat the Tar Heel basketball team 31-20 at Greensboro.

5 Years Ago This Week—

The University varsity wrestling team easily defeated the Raleigh "Y" team by the score of 21-5.

The varsity basketball team beat Wake Forest 22-18 in a tight game in which the Tar Heels came from behind to win.

Coach Fetzer announced that winter football will start next Monday morning.

DRAMA ALONG WITH JAZZ IN TED LEWIS TALKIE

What of the son who fails to follow the footsteps of his doting father, in spite of a lifetime of preparation?

There is poignant drama in the story of Victor Molnar, Old World musician proud of his past greatness, who expected that his son Ted would carry on the torch laid down by his father, and become an interpreter of the world's beautiful symphonies, only to find that he had capitulated to the Spirit of the New World and had become a devotee of the hated "jazz."

This is one of the situations in the Warner Bros. and Vitaphone production, "Is Everybody Happy?" now playing at the Carolina theatre that brings real tragedy into the life of a proud and aristocratic Hungarian immigrant. He discovered his son playing syncopated melodies in the hectic confusion of a New York cafe.

"Is Everybody Happy?" marks the film debut of the famous Ted Lewis, vaudeville's most popular and merriest entertainer, and presents him as the star of a pretentious production which traces his eventful career after coming to America. The culmination of the story shows him just as he is in real life—an outstanding vaudeville singer appearing with his own band in a type of music that has served to elevate him to the topmost ranks of variety performers.

The role of Ted's father is played by Lawrence Grant, and other prominent members of the supporting cast are Ann Pennington, Alice Day, Julia Swayne Gordon, Otto Hoffman and Purnell Pratt. Archie L. Mayo directed.

Paulsen Will Equip Heelettes With Pants

"Dean" Paulsen, genial czar of the laundry department, has announced his intention of backing the co-ed basketball team by furnishing them with navy blue trunks, it was stated to the Tar Heel last night.

These new uniforms will make the Tar Heelettes the best dressed feminine team in the state, and according to one of the co-ed athletes, improve their game considerably.

It was also said that the "Dean" has signified his intentions of not only providing the Tar Heelettes with appropriate trunks, but that he will also furnish at least one car for transportation to game outside the village, and will aid in providing additional transportation.

And to top matters off, it was said that the "Dean" is seriously considering giving the Heelettes a banquet in connection with the varsity banquet at the close of the season. While not definitely promising this banquet, he is said to have stated that he was seriously considering it.

SLUSH HOLDS UP GRID PRACTICE

Coaches Busy Working Out Schedule for Winter Teams; Players Doing Light Work.

Weather that was fit only for ducks prevailed yesterday, so there was a slight retard in winter football.

Should the weather permit, practice will be resumed today in full force. Coach Collins has been hard at work mapping out a schedule for the round robin games, which will be released in a few days.

Coach Bill Cerney and the remainder of Coach Collins' assistants have been putting the boys through light calesthenics the first part of this week, together with some kicking and passing, and then a few laps around the field. Heavy workouts are expected to take place the latter part of next week. Then the division of the teams for the mid-winter games will be made.

The number of men out is increasing every day and it is estimated that it is the largest number ever to contend for winter football.

Mitmen To Meet V. P. I. Saturday

The Tar Heel boxers, with veterans available for six of seven posts, will meet one of their toughest opponents in their opening meet here Saturday night.

V. P. I. is to furnish the opposition. The Gobblers are very much in the limelight as a result of a 5-2 win over Virginia. Virginia was previously rated as one of the south's best outfits.

The Tar Heels presented six veterans to Washington and Lee last week-end and opened their season auspiciously with a 5-2 win.

Harry Sheffield, 125- pounder, lost a close decision, and Bill Koenig, heavyweight, went down as a result of a collision with the floor, caused by a wild haymaker, after he had his opponent all but out.

Both men will be fighting hard for comebacks, and the other five will be striving to keep up their winning records.

Coach Crayton Rowe is working the squad unusually hard this week, obviously expecting one of the hardest meets of the season.

Best House Scores

Best House defeated Ruffin dormitory 28 to 17 yesterday in a fast game. The first half ended with the teams tied at 11 all, but the Best House five let loose a rapid fire scoring attack in the second period which put them 11 points ahead of their opponents. Every man on the team contributed largely to the victory, although Leonard, Powell, and McKinney led the scoring with 6 points each. For Ruffin, Brooks scoring 6 tallies and Parker with 4 were outstanding.

Ruffin (7)		Best House (28)
Aycock (3)	R. F.	Leonard (6)
Parker (4)	L. F.	Powell (6)
Greer (2)	C.	McKinney (4)
Brooks (6)	R. G.	Cordle (2)
Loften (2)	L. G.	Bryce

Substitutions: Best House—Harper (4), McKinney (6); Ruffin—Biggs, Baird.

Golf Notice

Coach Kenfield desires all men who are interested in golf to report at the Tin Can this afternoon at four o'clock. Freshmen as well as upperclassmen are urged to come out.

TAR HEELS DRILL FOR WAKE FOREST

The Tar Heels' second big five contest will take place next Saturday night, when the Wake Forest cagers will be met in Raleigh. The Deacons are reported to have a fast team this year, and Coach Ashmore is grooming his proteges in readiness for a hard struggle.

The remainder of this week will be spent in ironing out rough spots and perfecting the defensive and offensive work of the squad as a whole. Though the defensive work of the Tar Heels has been excellent in their past games, the offensive has been lacking the necessary punch which is an essential factor in the winning of games.

Ashmore is still hard at work in at effort to find a dependable and consistent pair of forwards. Johnny Greene, fast forward of last year's frosh aggregation, did not live up to all expectations last Tuesday night in the game with the Charlotte Monograms. He has been practicing with the team, however, only a week, and with more practice may secure as his own one of the hotly contested forward positions.

Charley Brown Will Fight In Greensboro

Charley Brown, captain of the Tar Heel boxers last year, is scheduled to go 10 rounds with Buster Newberry in Neese hall, Greensboro, Friday night. It was originally intended that Newberry should meet Joe Smallwood. Smallwood developed a case of flu and then Billy Schwartz, who was to take his place, sent word that he would not be able to fill the bill. K. O. Conway, promoter of the bout, got Charley on the telephone Monday and arranged for him to come. He had planned to card the former Carolina middleweight later in the season.

Brown, who hails from Charleston, S. C., was graduated from Carolina last June and is now studying medicine at the College of Charleston and donning the gloves at odd times to make his school expenses. This will be one of the hardest scraps Charley has ever had. He hasn't been in the pro ring so much as Newberry, but the classy style of fighting he displayed in his college career gives promise of a good scrap in Greensboro.

Paul Smith, a Duke man, will meet Little Boy Safrit of Kannapolis, in a six-round preliminary.

Co-eds Not To Play

The basketball game between the Carolina co-ed team and the Apex high school girls' team scheduled for tonight has been cancelled by Apex. The co-eds are trying to get a game with Durham or Chapel Hill high school to take the place of the scheduled game, but so far they have been unable to get in touch with Durham and have not yet arranged a game with Chapel Hill.

WRESTLERS OPEN WITH NAVY TEAM

Five Lettermen Will Oppose Strong Annapolis Team Saturday.

The University wrestling team will make its 1930 debut Saturday night in a meet at Annapolis with the strong Navy outfit.

The Tar Heels will wrestle without an outstanding heavy, since George Thompson was called away from college on engineering co-op work, but will have lettermen available for five of the remaining seven weights.

The team has been rounding into shape fairly well, and supporters are expecting a good show against the Middies.

Fred Stallings, a letterman, looks good to keep his 115-pound post, although Usher and Bell are both coming along rapidly.

Captain Wayne Woodard has his old 125-pound berth sewed up from all appearances. J. W. Stallings is second man in this weight.

In the 135-pound class Mayne Albright and Bob Zealy, both reserves from last year, are waging a hot fight for the honor of meeting the Navy's 135-pounder. The men rate just about even now.

Tsumas, Sanders and Taylor, all rookies, are showing best for the 145-pound berth.

The 155-pound weight shows a letterman in Moore, and Spell and Park have been showing well also.

Marion Cowper, a veteran, is showing best in the 165-pound class, with Sam Spitzer following close behind.

Fred Ferguson, a letterman, looks due to keep his 175-pound class. Hunter and Houghton are looking good in this weight also.

Tryouts will be held according to usual custom on Friday to determine who will make the Navy trip.

Local Highs Defeat Bragtown Team 47-21

Chapel Hill high had little trouble in disposing of the Bragtown boys here Tuesday night, 47 to 21. After getting off to a rather slow start and accounting for only 15 points in the first half, the local boys developed a consistent style of play in the last period and were able to break through the defense and connect with the basket almost at will. The floor work of Council, together with his scoring of 16 points, classed his playing distinctly above that of any other man on either team, while Prouty, speedy forward, also showed up well with his accurate shots. Crabtree, forward, led the Bragtown offense with 12 points.

C. H. (47)		Bragtown (21)
Prouty (12)	R. F.	McCoy (2)
Council (16)	L. F.	Bowling (2)
Lawrence (9)	C.	Browning
Reynolds (2)	R. G.	Shaw (5)
Williams (8)	L. G.	Flinton

"The scene beggared description."
"Never mind," said the editor, "borrow a few adjectives and go on with it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

(By Billy Arthur)

An athlete was approached with the question as to how long it would be until school was out.

He paused a minute, as if to give the impression that he was thinking and finally said. "You want to know how long it is until school is out? Well, let's see. Basketball, track and baseball—five months."

Everyone was pleased.

Happened to drop around the old Tin Can the other night and see the proteges of Coach Ashmore hold the furious Washington and Lee team to a comparatively low score. This all goes to show that the Tar Heel team has a stronger defense than the Duke five or other teams that the W. and L. team has encountered.

Now, if our scoring power picks up, everything will be all right.

Mention has been made of the heat in the Tin Can. I suggest that the coaching staff go to Hollywood and bring one of those "Turn on the Heat" girls back and put her in the Tin Can. Nuff sed.

The boxing team, under the guidance of Crayton Rowe, resumed workouts yesterday to prime themselves for V. P. I., fighting here Saturday night. There's plenty of material out, and a good coach to handle 'em. Here's hoping.

Coach Collins, we're glad to have you back.

You're welcome.

Eligibility. Oh, what a word. It sends horror into the coach's office. Was down there the other day, and in the office there was a low buzzing sound, and all of a sudden voices arose, "He's eligible.—He is not.—He is—." I got scared and made myself scarce. And how . . .

Yesterday was consumed in light workouts down at Kenan stadium, but the boys are expected to get down to real work today. The fact that the weather man was right in ONE of his many predictions that a cold wave was headin' south made ideal football weather—, and the boys are all enthused. (Maybe I'm wrong.)

And we've heard of the guy that thought fencing was a part of a carpenter's job.

Nuff sed.

CORRECTION

It was stated in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel that Cliff Baucom, captain of the 1930 cross-country team, finished first for Carolina and fourth in the southern conference meet last November. It was R. F. Lowry who finished fourth. Baucom came in sixth.

Joseph P. Chamberlain, professor of social legislation at Columbia university, was named president of the American Association for Labor Legislation at the annual convention at New Orleans.

TAR HEELS ARE MENTIONED FOR ERSKINE AWARD

Receive Two Votes Along With Yale, Dartmouth, and Colgate In Preliminary Ballot.

In the preliminary ballot which served to select the teams to be voted on in the final ballot for the championship football team of 1929, Carolina received two votes and was ranked alongside Yale, Dartmouth and Colgate. In this preliminary vote each member of the jury of leading sports writers of the country named three teams which it considered the logical recipient of the national title award. Notre Dame, Pittsburgh and Purdue with 777, 442 and 210 points respectively, were chosen to receive the final vote of the jury and Rockne's team was named the leading eleven of the country.

The final ballot shows Notre Dame leading with 179 votes, Pittsburgh second with 41 and Purdue third with two. The vote of the committee of award, composed of nationally known patrons of football, gave Notre Dame 11 additional votes, making her a total of 190. Pittsburgh and Purdue received no votes in the committee of awards.

Analyzing the jury's voting by states, it is found that the majority in every state except six voted on the first ballot for Notre Dame. These six were Missouri and Nebraska for Pittsburgh; Alabama and Kansas, both divided between Notre Dame and St. Marys, and Oregon, which hesitated between Notre Dame, St. Marys and Purdue. On the final ballot, however, every state turned its majority to Notre Dame.

The award, which is sponsored by Albert Russel Erskine, automobile magnate, consisted of a huge silver cup which was presented to the Notre Dame team, and a Studebaker President eight sedan which was given to Knute Rockne, coaching genius of the South Bend eleven.

Public approval of the award has been so wide spread that, according to W. O. McGeehan, chairman of the committee, it has been decided to renew it in 1930.

Valuing the votes at 5 for first place, 3 for second, and 1 for third, the rankings on the first ballot were as follows:

Notre Dame 777, Pittsburgh 442, Purdue 210, St. Marys 48, Tulane 22, Southern California 21, Texas Christian 10, Tennessee 8, Yale 2, Dartmouth 2, North Carolina 2, Colgate 2, Utah 1, and Stanford 1.

Pascual Artiz Rubio, president-elect of Mexico, has been awarded an honorary degree of doctor of laws by George Washington university.

The coaching staff of the University is invited to attend and also several members of the football squad, among whom are Captain Farris, Captain-elect Nash, Erickson, Magner, and Branch.

The address by Mr. Hart, which will be illustrated with slides and models, is being given under the auspices of the University student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and will be the main part of the regular bi-weekly meeting to be held at that time.

During much of Mr. Hart's association with the Western Electric Company for the past twenty years he has been prominently identified with the progress made by that company in the development of machinery and methods used in cable manufacture. At the present time the new Baltimore plant of the company is being built and manned under his supervision.

Education School May Have Largest Class In History

According to a recent compilation of data concerning the standing and courses of seniors in the school of education, 50 members of the class are planning to graduate in June, while 25 hope to complete their work by the end of summer school session. If these expectations are fulfilled, the school of education this year will have the largest graduating class in its history.

nel Smith, snubbed Lafayette, was entertained by the composer Haydn—then on to Venice, Greece, Turkey, and Russia. Here Catherine II, lady of many favorites, took him under her expansive protection (causing thereby dark and scandalous rumors) but the wanderer went further—to Sweden, to Denmark, to Switzerland—the first civilized South American to appear in Europe.

"Revolutionary France lured him next, where he promptly got into the midst of things, only to be balked. But Napoleon thought the fire of genius was in the man, and Pitt was afraid to let go of him altogether lest England lose something Miranda seemed capable of bringing.

"His subsequent adventures are as varied and as unbelievably romantic, climaxed by the famous filibustering expedition, betrayal by that other flame of liberty, Bolivar, and final ignominious death in prison. The full story is told for the first time in this biography, for it was only recently that Professor Robertson unearthed some new documents, on which he draws heavily here."

The author has written a number of books on South America. He has just recently edited Miranda's Diary in Spanish, and is one of the editors of the Inter-American Historical Series to be published by the University Press.

From Who's Who in America it is found that Professor Robertson is native of Glasgow, Scotland, and is 58 years old. He is a graduate from the University of Wisconsin and Yale University. Previously teaching in Western Reserve University and Indiana University, he is now a professor of history at the University of Illinois. His extensive research work and writings on Hispanic-American relationships have been mentioned. Numerous home and foreign historical and scholarly bodies, especially those of the South American republics, have honored him with awards and honorary memberships.

ALUMNUS WITH WESTINGHOUSE

J. M. Labberton, University alumnus, who received his degree of S. B. in electrical engineering with the class of 1913, is now electrical engineer for the Westinghouse Electrical Manufacturing Company. While in college, he received the scholastic distinction of a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Mr. Labberton has been continuously employed by the Westinghouse since his graduation from the University. After completing the Westinghouse Graduate Student Course, he entered the Railway Motor Design department. Mr. Labberton remained in this capacity until his promotion in 1929, and is now Special Railway Motor Engineer engaged in general consultation work.

The tooth form of the helical gear and special spur gears are developments for which Mr. Labberton is responsible. This helical gear is in almost universal use in railway service. He has also assisted in the design of nearly all the modern single phase railway motors in use in this country, and to him is due the credit for the design of the WN street car drive.

Mr. Labberton resides at 227 Avenue B, Wilkinsburg, Pa.

The demand for college trained men and women is increasing each year, according to Lawrence W. Zimmer, acting director of the New York university employment bureau.

DEBATE ON THIRD PARTY QUESTION HERE FEBRUARY 4

Howard Y. Williams Will Support Third Party; Professor E. J. Woodhouse To Oppose Plan.

TO BE IN GERRARD HALL

Howard Y. Williams, executive secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, and E. J. Woodhouse, professor of government in the University, are to meet in Gerrard hall on Tuesday, February 4, in open debate on the question, Resolved: That there is need for a Third Party in the United States. Mr. Williams is to support the affirmative side of the case, and Professor Woodhouse will oppose the question.

Mr. Williams, born in San Francisco, is a graduate of the University of Minnesota and Union Theological Seminary. He took graduate courses at the University of Iowa and Columbia University, working intermittently as a miner to defray his expenses.

Decorated for War Services

Finishing his work at Union Theological Seminary just at the outbreak of the World War, he enlisted as a chaplain and served two years in France, first with the Tenth Engineers and then as a senior chaplain with thirty chaplains and 50,000 soldiers under his care. He was decorated by the French government and cited by General Pershing.

Following the War, Mr. Williams was for ten years in charge of the Peoples Church of St. Paul, where he distinguished himself for effective moral and civic service to the people. In 1926 he was the candidate for Mayor of the Labor-Progressive forces, receiving over 26,000 votes and coming within a few hundred votes of election. In 1928 he was the Farmer-Labor candidate for Congress and again received a large vote.

Mr. Williams has travelled extensively in this and foreign countries, meeting personally many of the social, political and labor leaders of Europe. He has also studied Mexico and interviewed there the President of the Republic, members of his Cabinet and various outstanding personalities. He is now travelling over the United States organizing, stimulating and cooperating with local third-party political movements that will eventually unite to create for this country a critical opposition party comparable to the British Labor Party. Mr. Williams has a keen insight into political and economic institutions and problems.

Professor Woodhouse is a graduate of Randolph-Macon College, the University of Virginia law school, and has studied at Chicago and Yale Universities. For several years he was professor of government at Yale and later held the same chair at Smith College. For several years he practiced law.

Mayor Coolidge's Home Town

When Calvin Coolidge was elected President of the United States on the Republican ticket, Mr. Woodhouse was elected mayor of their home town, Northampton, Massachusetts, on the democratic ballot. After a few years of political life he returned to teaching and research work in government.

He came to the University in the fall of 1926 and has since

E. J. Woodhouse

Professor E. J. Woodhouse of the department of government, will support the negative side of the Woodhouse-Williams debate in Gerrard hall, February 4, on the question "Resolved: that there is need for a third party in the United States."

WORD ARBORETUM PRODUCES STRANGE EFFECT ON CO-ED

(By John Patric)

"Dr. Jung, of Vienna, invented a list of 100 words, which contain references to every conceivable kind of emotional activity, such as hate, fear, rage, love, and many other things. It is possible," continued the psychology lecturer, "to touch off definite reactions within the human system that may be measured by instruments which record the flow of electricity through the human body.

"Of course, here at Carolina, our key words are slightly different than the Vienna list. They meet, as it were, local conditions."

It seems that two students were being examined. One was a co-ed, the other was just an ordinary student. But the time was summer school and the room wasn't unattractive—nothing was said about the co-ed, but we suspect maybe she wasn't so pretty.

"In our list of 100 words we included 'arboretum.' When the blase masculine subject was given the test, he passed over the list without a quiver of the galvanometer needle at that point, but when the girl heard 'arboretum,' the needle jumped clear off the record paper!"

Of such are the wonders of psychology.

Finally ! ! !

Playing their steadiest game of the year Carolina's Tar Heelettes broke into the victory column last night, trimming the Chapel Hill Basketeers 22-17.

The Basketeers got off a 7-0 lead early in the game, but the co-eds rallied late in the half, which ended with the Chapel Hill aggregation holding a three-point lead.

Successive goals by Lee and Way put the co-eds ahead early in the second half. After this they were never headed, the game ending 22-17 with Way leading the attack.

Way and Thacker, forwards, and Hill, guard, starred for the Heelettes. M. Parker and Ethrydge led the high school team. Parker and Way led the scoring, each having 8 points to their credit.

DORMS TO HAVE 'BULL SESSIONS'

Y. M. C. A. Sponsoring Discussions On Topics Of Interest To Students.

TO START MONDAY NIGHT

Dormitory discussions will be re-introduced Monday night at 9 o'clock. These discussions, sponsored by the Y cabinets, are being tried for the first time since 1927-28, when Walter Spearman, secretary of the Y at that time, conducted them.

The discussions this year will be led by some upperclassman assisted by a member of one of the Y cabinets. The meetings of these groups will be held in a designated room in each dormitory. The room number will be posted on the bulletin board in each dormitory sometime before Monday night.

It is the plan of the Y for these discussions to take more of the form of an ordinary "bull session" rather than a formal talk. The topics to be discussed will be those of most interest to the students present. The meetings are to be led by some leader who is expected to hold the discussion to the original subject.

Y officials request all students to be present at the first meetings in the dormitories in order that they may not only help to get the meeting off to a good start, but also that they may take part in the discussions.

For the first three Mondays in the month these discussions will be conducted in the dormitories, and on the fourth Monday a mass meeting will be held in Gerrard hall. This gathering will be led by some member of the faculty selected by the Y. At this meeting some of the subjects discussed in the dormitory groups will be discussed by the group.

LOCAL KIWANIANS IN NATIONAL CELEBRATION

The Chapel Hill Kiwanis Club yesterday joined with the other 1840 clubs throughout the United States and Canada in celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of Kiwanis International.

J. Maryon Saunders, district trustee for the Chapel Hill Club, told of the history of Kiwanis International, pointing out that it was founded in Detroit in 1915 and that the first regular meeting was held January 21 of that year. Kiwanis International now has a membership of more than 102,000, he said.

John S. McDonald of Raleigh, Lieutenant-Governor of the fifth division of the Carolina District, was the speaker for the occasion. He was introduced by Russell M. Grumman, president of the Chapel Hill club. Mr. McDonald spoke on the under-privileged child and the responsibility which Kiwanis owes to these children. Music was furnished by the Carolinians with "Red" Wood in charge of the musical program.

Since its organization here almost two years ago the Kiwanis club has been active in movements looking to civic betterment. Among other things it has sponsored the Red Cross roll call, held a dental clinic for the public schools, and cooperated with the public welfare officer in alleviating needy cases.

RUSSIAN CHOIR TO SING HERE SOON

Committee Completes Plans To Have Famous Group Here February 10.

PERFORM IN SWAIN HALL

The Russian Symphonic Choir, under the direction of Sergei Kabalchich, has been definitely booked to appear at Swain hall, Monday night, February 10.

The student entertainment committee yesterday voted unanimously to secure these singers in place of the Ben Greet Players whose scheduled appearance was cancelled due to lack of proper facilities.

The organization is composed of 24 men and women, most of whom are from the Russian nobility. All have excellently trained voices, many having been soloists in the Russian cathedrals for years.

Ten years ago, when the political crisis in Russia made life almost unendurable for these people, Sergei Kabalchich decided to organize the choir. He brought his singers to America, and since that date they have remained on this continent. During these years the personnel has varied only slightly.

The success of the organization has led to the establishment of a repertoire which includes over two thousand numbers. These selections cover a wide field, including cathedral music, music from the Russian operas, various folk songs, and vocal transcriptions of the leading orchestral symphony movements.

The director of the group is responsible for a great many arrangements used exclusively by them.

The choir has crossed the continent at least twenty times, and it is the general opinion of critics that it has established a standard of choral perfection which has earned for itself the name, Symphonic Choir.

H. S. Dyer, head of the music department, knows Mr. Kabalchich personally, and has requested a copy of the program. Before the date of the choir's appearance Mr. Dyer will make comments on the program for the Tar Heel readers.

Village Population Shows Increase Of Births Over Deaths

Chapel Hill's population was increased by 40 and decreased by 33 during the year of 1929, according to a report made public yesterday by the local department of vital statistics of which Dr. S. A. Nathan is health officer.

Actual figures are much larger, however, than the figures presented, since 50 per cent of the white births and many of the deaths occur in Durham hospitals. Whites accounted for 17 births and 13 deaths, and negroes 40 births and 33 deaths.

In the list of causes of deaths, parentheses indicate whites. Causes were: apoplexy, 1; arterioscersis, 1; cancer, 1, (1); cardio dilitation, 1; cardio renal disease, (1); cerebral hemorrhage, (3); colitis, 1; diphtheria, (1); endocartitis, (1); epilepsy, 1; essential eypertension, 1; hypertension artriosclersis, 1; mitrial regurgitation, (1); murder, 1; myocardis, (1); nephiritis, 2; paralysis, 1; pellegra, 1; pneumonia, (1), 3; pulmonary embolism, (1); senility, (1); suicide, (1); syphilis, 1; and tuberculosis, 2.

H. Y. Williams

Howard Y. Williams, executive secretary of the League of Independent Political Action, will present the affirmative side of the debate with Professor Woodhouse on the third party question to be held in Gerrard hall, February 4.

Durham Junior High To Hear Glee Club

The University glee club, under the direction of Prof. H. S. Dyer, will present a full program of songs tonight in the Durham junior high school auditorium, at 8:15, appearing under the auspices of the high school music clubs of Durham.

With a few additions, the program will be that regularly used by the glee club on its tour this year.

Prof. Nelson O. Kennedy will give two piano groups on the program.

The committee decided, among other business matters, that the next meeting of the College Conference should be held in Durham sometime in October. The exact date is to be fixed later by the committee. Dean N. W. Walker, of the University school of education, who is secretary-treasurer of the Conference, attended the meeting of the committee from Chapel Hill.

BENEATH TROPIC SEAS IS TOPIC OF BEEBE'S LECTURE

Noted Sea And Jungle Explorer Will Give An Illustrated Talk Under Auspices Of Student Entertainment Committee.

TO BE HERE JANUARY 31

William Beebe, noted scientist and lecturer, will give his latest popular lecture, "Beneath Tropic Seas," when he appears here January 31 in Swain hall. His lecture will be the first number on the entertainment committee's program for this quarter, since the engagement with the Ben Greet Players was canceled.

The lecture is an account of the wonders and beauties of life in the ocean depths, and will be accompanied by underwater motion pictures in color. He has with his explorations in the depths of the seas opened up a new field of investigation. He has incorporated his first trip to the Galapagos and his second to the Sargosso Sea into English literature in his popular books which he has written on the subject.

In his trips to Nonsuch Island last summer and to Haiti a year ago he has made even more wonderful discoveries and was able to record them with a newly perfected cast steel camera for making pictures beneath the the surface of the ocean. It is of these trips that he will speak in his lecture here.

Before he became interested in deep sea life, Mr. Beebe had devoted his investigations to jungle dwellers and in that connection wrote several books which give a picture of jungle life and the romantic atmosphere contained in the dark recesses of the primeval forests.

Mr. Beebe not only is a painter and etcher of considerable talent, but he has the ability to paint with words the color, the life, the vividness of those strange lands above and below the surface of the water that he has seen. Little was known of the strange life at the bottom of the limitless tracks of ocean depths, of the blaze and glory of weird and fantastic denizens of the deep, and of the gorgeous coloring of the surface fish, until Beebe presented them to the world in his admirable writings and lectures.

Der Deutsche Verein

Dr. Caldwell of the history department has consented to make a short talk before the members of the German society on the "First German Hero." Dr. Caldwell, according to R. S. Matthews, is an entertaining speaker and his talk should be interesting especially to students in all German classes; all are urged to attend. A part of the meeting will be given over to a short musical program with the singing of German songs. There will be group singing for those who care to participate. After this refreshments will be served closing the meeting. The society will assemble in the regular Kiwanis room in the basement of the Methodist church Friday evening at 7:30, January 24.

PROFESSOR STAAB ILL

Professor H. H. Staab, of the department of romance languages, is kept from meeting his classes because of illness, but expects to be out again in a few days.

The Chi Psi Fire Investigation

Although a statement issued this week by Dan C. Boney, state insurance commissioner, has absolved officially the members of the Chi Psi fraternity from all blame in connection with the fire which destroyed their house during the Christmas holidays, an ugly taint of suspicion concerning the incident will continue to persist in the minds of those not familiar with the facts.

Investigator W. A. Scott of the state insurance department is said to have investigated the fire and to have reported to Commissioner Boney that the house, which was insured for $9,000, had a value estimated at not more than $5,000. Wide publicity was given to the report throughout the state, and the chapter was placed under considerable suspicion. A few days later Dr. Robert E. Coker, a faculty member of the chapter, issued a statement refuting the facts contained in Scott's report. According to Dr. Coker, the value of the house was estimated at around $12,000. Commissioner Boney's latest statement in connection with the affair has assisted materially in reducing the suspicion cast upon the Chi Psi chapter, but the publicity given the original report has made it virtually impossible to remove all doubts from the public mind.

The state newspapers have been placed in the position of advancing the interests of the insurance companies by the unfortunate affair. An overambitious reporter interviewed a loquacious insurance department official; the result was an immense amount of premature publicity which worked a decided injustice upon the Chi Psi members, as later developments have proven.

Newspapers are not tribunals of justice, fortunately. And their columns should not be utilized to cast suspicions upon individuals or groups until careful investigation of the facts has demonstrated that there is ample justification for these suspicions. When persons in official capacities release information concerning criminal investigations, the newspapers are forced to print the stories because of their news values. Suspicions become news as soon as they are voiced by police officials, insurance department investigators or other persons invested with similar authority.

Someone pulled a boner by releasing the Chi Psi fire investigation story, and this time the major portion of blame can't be shoved upon the already sin-burdened shoulders of the newspaper gang. Igniting of a hot fire under the state insurance department is in order.

New Entrance Requirements

The action of the faculty of Wake Forest in changing the entrance requirements of that college so that a student may enter with only two years of foreign language instead of the usual four is highly commendable although it breaks the tradition of the college and is contrary to the rulings of the majority of colleges of the country.

Many are the students who, having no knack for foreign languages, must labor over them for four years in high school. It is time wasted for them, as they immediately forget all they have learned and never make any effort to use or even enjoy their knowledge. If their efforts are concentrated on two years of one language, then perhaps better results may be obtained.

Changing the requirements for college entrance from four years of foreign languages to two will relieve many students of unnecessary burdens and handicaps of entrance conditions, while it still permits those who have an aptitude for language to continue their studies. The new ruling by the Wake Forest faculty is another indication of the changing methods in college education; requirements are being made to suit the students and to meet their needs rather than to carry out any pre-conceived idea of what a college education should be. —J. D. M.

Our University's Reputation

Last fall the student body of the University of North Carolina boasted one of the greatest football teams in the history of the institution. This team brought no small amount of recognition and glory to our alma mater. But now our athletic prowess seems to have faded into the ranks of the mediocre. Reference is hereby made to the varsity basketball team, which does not compare favorably with those of former years. The writer feels that students are generally prone to criticize a poor team without giving consideration to the fact that no college or university can produce a championship team every year. The short life of the college generation prevents such a desire from reaching maturity.

Form the time that the University of North Carolina entered the ranks of intercollegiate athletic competition down to the present, she has ranked well up toward the head of the list in point of victories. Her teams have been consistently good; and that, moreover, is what counts. What the weak team needs is support. Give our present basketball team adequate support and another state championship is by no means impossible.

But let us consider another phase of the matter. We are guilty of over-emphasizing the relation which championship teams bear to the reputation of an institution of collegiate rank. May the day never come when the University of North Carolina will be known in the educational world chiefly because of great football and basketball teams! May the time never arrive when Carolina students will boast of their alma mater chiefly because of its athletic prowess! There can be no doubt that famous football teams do spread the name of the institution whose colors they wear, but the situation is a deplorable one when the academic standing of the institution in question does not compare favorably with the great showing of its football team. Officials of the University have long held that the two should go hand in hand. Although their viewpoint has not been altered, there seems to be a tendency on the part of the student body to think that the reputation of the school of their choice has lost a great deal of its prestige because of the mediocre showing which the basketball team has made to date. The idea underlying such an attitude is manifestly unsound.

In the South and elsewhere there are colleges and universities whose reputation in the realm of athletics forms the goal for others to strive to reach, but whose academic rating when compared to the leading "scholarship" institutions is very low. The writer feels that there is no risk in prophesying that this condition was caused by students' placing too great an emphasis upon athletic achievements. Although the names of the colleges in question are here withheld (for sane reasons), the argument is a valid one. When athletic prowess is stressed too heavily, academic matters are the sufferer. A school may lose its athletic reputation and regain it in two or three years, but it requires many a decade to reestablish a fallen "scholarly" reputation.

Our basketball team needs nothing quite so much as support from the student body. Even though our season may turn out to be an unsuccessful one, the reputation of the University will remain intact unless hampered by some other factor.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

A PLEA FOR LABOR ORGANIZATION

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Having noted with great interest the controversy between your publication and the Southern Textile Bulletin, relative to the rights of labor to organize, it is my earnest desire to commend you most highly for the fearless, sensible and humane attitude displayed by you, in presenting for the information of your readers some vital facts concerning this greatly discussed problem.

It is the further opinion of the writer that the editor of the aforementioned Bulletin displayed a distinct lack of gentlemanly traits, human principles, and complete ignorance of the economic situation that is affecting materially the future prosperity of this nation, when he resorted to the remarks that the great educational leaders of this commonwealth are "crack brained" and are raising "Baby Radicals," and also when he referred to the intellect of our students, in which is embodied the material of our future business, social, educational, legislative leaders as "plastic."

In a recent issue of the Manufacturers Record, which is the mouthpiece of the industrial Barons and autocratic mill owners of the south, an editorial appeared, in which was advocated the expenditure of an unlimited amount to suppress the labor movement by the use of their rotten propaganda, and the apparent prosperity (?) of the workers of this section, and it is evident to me that the editor in question is a participant in this procedure, and by his published statements he has proven that the machinery for this purpose is already functioning for the purpose as outlined.

If the "Octupuses" of industry did not realize that this section of the country has borne the burden of low starvation wages, and long hours that wreck the physical being to the breaking point, and the good red blood of the Anglo-Saxon race was revolting at terrible conditions existing at present, there would not be any occasion for this controversy.

When you remove the camouflage from the merging of big business enterprises, affecting the banks, railroads, public utilities, chain stores and other similar enterprises, you readily detect the facts that they united for the same identical purpose, for which we, as workers, are organizing: the right for collective bargaining, and when you fully investigate the manufacturers associations, medical associations, bar associations, and all the different associations, societies and other similar organizations, you find that the same idea prevails "that in unity there is strength," and "united we stand; divided we fall." Yet they consider it a manifest crime if labor strives to avail itself of an opportunity to produce better working conditions, and an adequate wage to enable them to educate their children, maintain decent living conditions, and elevate human standards.

Why should we be denied the privilege of uniting for the purpose of obtaining freedom from industrial slavery, protection of our womanhood, enforcing the child labor law, educating our children, assisting materially in lowering crime conditions by providing employment at an adequate wage, and in conformity with the desires of all patriotic Americans, to produce conditions that will have a tendency to create and maintain a higher type of citizenship than that which exists at present, under the rule that capital pays labor any amount they desire, regardless of whether it is adequate or inadequate to meet the standards outlined?

The organized labor movement policy as practiced by the conservative American Federation of Labor, with which all progressive, patriotic and fair-minded Trade Unionists are affiliated, is not to destroy harmonious relations of employee and employer; create industrial strife; jeopardize the future safety of stabilized conditions, or in any way retard the progress of this great nation; but, to the contrary, its aims and ideals are in accord with that which is previously stated.

The great problem of economics has been the subject of concentrated study of our leading professors of economics, and others similarly interested for many years. The only solution offered to this time for the remedy of economic ills is that the producer of the commodities of life be paid wages sufficient to absorb that which is produced. If low wages and long hours were the real basis of prosperity, China would be the richest nation in the world. Consider for a moment the poverty, grief, suffering and chaos that exists among their people at this time. Lowering the purchasing power of the people is a positive menace to future prosperity.

With the expressed hope that the south will develop more men of your caliber, with the moral courage to face an issue squarely, and with vision and intelligence sufficient to recognize a just demand when evident, and again assuring you that your work is worthy of the highest commendation, I beg to remain

By Joe Jones

The typical university village is a town of eating establishments, and Chapel Hill is a typical university village. That part of it adjacent to the University campus is essentially a community of kitchens, boarding houses, coffee shops, restaurants, dining halls, cafes, grills, lunch counters, soda fountains, sandwich shops, and cafeterias.

Every morning this district is cloaked in the conventional aroma of coffee and bacon. Noon brings to it the steamy incense of boiling soup and vegetables. Its dusks are heavy with the fragrance of freshly baked bread and frying meat, and far past nightfall it is noisy with the sound of clattering dishes.

Each day an army of delivery men and produce venders visits its back doors, bringing fresh merchandise to replenish the larders eaten clean by 2500 college boys. Another's big yellow truck brings meat and eggs from far away packing houses. The Hill Bakery truck comes with its savory cargo. Dairy trucks bring milk miraculously rich, considering Orange county's scrub-pine pastures. The grocery delivery boys come with sundry fresh groceries brought to Chapel Hill from the four points of the compass—lettuce and grapes from California, oranges and grapefruit from Florida, oysters from the coast, and apples from the famed Apple Pie Ridge of northern Virginia.

In season, local farmers bring roasting ears, peas, tomatoes, snap beans, greens, turnips, and potatoes. Colored children come peddling greens they have gathered in the fields: dandelion, lamb's quarter, cress, and mustard. Poulterers and farmers bring the Sunday chickens and the Thanksgiving turkeys. Hunters, from the backwoods come selling rabbits and squirrels.

At night the back-yards and alleyways of this culinary community, rich with a harvest of filled garbage cans, are pillaged by foraging cats and bands of hungry dogs. By day, these same environs are visited by the municipal garbage truck, by a farmer's team which triumphantly bears off all legitimate hog food, and by colored Robert Durham, veteran trash man who, with his pitchfork and shovel, his bony old horse and his rattling dead-bed wagon, still manages to keep up a waning competition against the more modern agencies.

Whoever would successfully manage an eating place in Chapel Hill must not only know how to talk and bargain with all these folk, but must also learn how best to satisfy the collegiate appetite. College boys, being young, are as a rule healthy, and being healthy, are generally hungry. But this does not mean that they are tolerant of poorly cooked food or an unvaried diet. Anyone who has fed a bunch of them will tell you they are slow to praise and plentious in condemnation.

N. C. C. W. Announces Winter Music Program

Greensboro, Jan 23.—The concert program under the auspices of the Greensboro Civic Music association, the numbers of which are being given at Aycock auditorium, North Carolina college, includes for the rest of the season three regular numbers and a special additional attraction recently arranged for.

The next offering is the special number, the St. Olaf Lutheran choir, of Northfield, Minn., an organization composed of 33 women and 27 men under the direction of F. Melium Christiansen. That concert is scheduled for Tuesday, February 4. The attraction has the reputation of being the pioneer a capella choir in America and achieved success before many audiencies in this country as well as in Europe since 1911. The organization sails for Europe June 28 to participate in festivities which commemorate the 900th anniversary of the establishing of Christianity in Norway.

Mischa Levitski, pianist, appears in this city February 13 to give the next number of the course. A joint concert by Margherita Salvi, soprano, and Antonio Cortis, tenor, follows the piano recital. That engagement is March 17. Jacques Gordon, violinist, gives the last number of the course April 28.

The percentage of students who withdraw from college before the completion of their college course has decreased from 30 per cent in 1920 to 12 per cent in 1928-29, statistics show.

Varsity Boxing Stars May Be Out Of V.P.I. Meet

Allen And Warren Ill; Team To Meet Strong Gobblers Tomorrow

Virginians Hold 5 - 2 Victory Over Cavalier Mitmen.

TO FIGHT IN TIN CAN

Rowe Faced With Tough Problem In Replacing Allen, Conference Champion, and Warren, Light-Heavy.

Possibility of the loss to the team of Archie Allen, captain and Southern Conference champion, and John Warren, light heavyweight, for their engagement with V. P. I. Saturday in the Tin Can, was being faced today by Coach Crayton Rowe. Both of these men have been suffering from colds during the past week, and either or neither may see action Saturday.

Allen complained of a cold soon after his return from Washington and Lee last Saturday where the team administered a 5-2 defeat to the Generals. He spent two days in the infirmary. Warren's cold has not necessitated hospital treatment, but may be serious enough to cause his withdrawal from the meet.

Goodridge, 135-pound scrapper, is looking better than at any previous time in his career, and can be counted on for a good fight. Obie Davis, hard-hitting 160-pounder, is gradually getting back into his last winter's championship form, and looks better every day. Sheffield and Koenig, who lost their matches last Saturday night by narrow margins, are training especially hard and are out for revenge at the cost of V. P. I. Clarke, a reserve, is giving Sheffield a hard fight for the featherweight position, and Coach Rowe may give him a chance tomorrow.

Several boxers who were showing up well before the first meet have dropped off the squad, and Coach Rowe urges these men to come back, inasmuch as they all have a good chance to participate in several meets and to win letters. One lineup alone is not going to uphold the Carolina boxing honor for the whole season, but, according to Coach Rowe, new teams will be started against both South Carolina and Florida.

The freshman 115-pound class is open and any man who comes out for this position and shows up well will get a chance to make the trips with the team. Freshman heavyweights are also urged to come as there are very few men out for this post.

Sigma Zetas Win 23-17

The Kappa Sigma intramural basketball team went down in defeat before the Sigma Zeta quintet in a close game Wednesday 23-17. Eagles, Kappa Sigma forward, was the star of the game, and was high-point scorer with 12 counters. N. L. Bryan, Sigma Zeta sub forward, led the winners with 6 points, followed by Parks and Parker of the same team who has 4 each.

Lineup:

Sig. Zeta (23)		Kap. Sig. (17)
Griffin (3)	R. F.	Eagles (12)
Parks (4)	L. F.	Davis
Farrell (2)	C.	Geitner (2)
Parker (4)	R. G.	Finch (1)
Flynt	L. G.	Satterfield (1)

Substitutions: Sigma Zeta—Whisnant (2), Bryan, N. L. (6), Bryan, N. E. (2).

By J. G. Hamilton, Jr.

THIS COLUMN is not given to expressing opinions about many things. But a letter from a friend got us to thinking about something and we just can't keep quiet about it any longer. This friend is coaching at a high school in a neighboring state. Among other things, he expressed his regret that his school was lacking in proper gymnasium equipment. That high school has, to our certain knowledge, a gymnasium which is slightly larger and much better equipped than the edifice known as a gymnasium which stands on our own campus. In spite of this, our friend finds reason to growl. And it's a safe bet that he growls with good reason.

BYNUM GYMNASIUM was erected a quarter of a century ago at a time when the student body of the University numbered around five hundred. It was undoubtedly adequate for the demands of that time and, quite probably, for those of the next fifteen years. But the last decade has witnessed an amazing growth in the size of the student body. The University as a whole has kept pace with this growth. The faculty has increased in size and more and better buildings have been erected. Mental development is well provided for. But what about this physical development that is talked about so much. Where is it to be obtained? Certainly the present building offers little opportunity or encouragement for this invaluable training which is so necessary to our complete well being.

THE PRESENT BUILDING is the only thing on the campus that we are wholly ashamed of. What little equipment it contains is hidden by freshman gym classes which, apparently, occupy almost the whole of every afternoon. Little room is left for the upperclassman who happens to want a work-out. We don't begrudge the freshman his gym class. On the contrary, we are heartily in favor of them. But we do think it would be fine if the gymnasium were large enough to accommodate all the students who wanted to use it. As far as we can see, there is absolutely no excuse for the condition existing at present. Washington and Lee, Virginia, Duke, State, V.M.I., and any number of other institutions of our size and standing have excellent plants. We have never seen a college with a student body of over five hundred which has as poor equipment as we have. And we know of a number of high schools that have better equipment.

IN OUR OPINION this issue has been neglected too long. A new gymnasium is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, need of the University. Back in the dim past a new library, a stadium, and a co-ed building were greatly needed. They are here now, but they came only after a lot of talk. Now the air is filled with a lot of noise about a new auditorium.

TAR BABY QUINT SET FOR DEACON FROSH SATURDAY

Game Will Be Staged In Raleigh City Auditorium; Varsity Game Will Follow.

With five successive wins and a clean season record to protect, the Tar Baby basketeers are all set for the encounter with Wake Forest frosh in the Raleigh City Auditorium tomorrow night. Immediately after the frosh game, the varsity will take the floor against the Wake Forest Deacons. Coach Rex Enright is expecting a hard battle and has been driving the boys hard, and as a result every man is in tip top shape for the contest.

The Baby Deacons have a very strong outfit, losing a hard struggle Wednesday night to the N. C. State frosh by the score of 21-19. Although the Tar Babies have not played any freshmen teams, they have shown a great deal of scoring power in overcoming their opponents.

Coach Enright lost a valuable asset to his club when Stuart Chandler answered the call of Coach Collins for winter practice. This necessitated the shifting of Wilmer Hines from center to Chandler's forward position, and leaving Beale in undisputed possession of the center post.

This year there will be no lack of good reserves, Coach Enright having as fine a squad as has come up in the last five years. Last Tuesday the reserves played an important part in downing the Durham Bull Dogs. Among the most promising of the substitutes are Mike Brown, Riggs, Red Connor, Moore and Grant.

The men who will probably start tomorrow's game will be Henry and Lineberger, guards; Beale, center, and Hines and Dunn, forwards.

FENCING OFFICIALS WANT RECOGNITION

An attempt is now being made to have fencing recognized by the Athletic Council as a regular varsity sport, according to those interested in the sport. Last year there was a fencing team, which, however, was not officially recognized by the Athletic Council and whose expenses were not paid by the Council. This team competed only with South Carolina, conference champions. The Tar Heels by winning this meet copped the Southern Intercollegiate Fencing championship. This year practically the entire team has returned to school, but they are unable to defend their title because of lack of funds. A plan is underway to secure an appropriation from the Athletic Council with which to support fencing as an intramural sport. If enough interest is shown by the student body, an attempt will then be made to have fencing recognized by the Athletic Council as a regular minor sport.

Horses Outnumber Cars In Wyoming

Old Dobbin is making his last and most protracted stand in the state of Wyoming.

A recent government survey shows that while automobiles outnumber horses almost two to one over the country, the situation is reversed in Wyoming.

Records of the board of livestock commissioners show the state's horse population to be 147,988, while the number of automobiles is only 56,698.

Chatham Leads Golfers

With the election of Charlie Chatham as captain of the 1930 golf team, the Tar Heel golfers started heavy practice in preparation for the hardest schedule ever undertaken by the Carolina golf team. The schedule calls for matches with three of last year's most powerful teams in the Southern Conference, namely, Georgia, Georgia Tech and Alabama; these matches will be played a few days before the Southern Conference tournament to be played over the Shade's Valley Country Club course of Birmingham, Ala., on May 1, 2 and 3. A week previous the team will defend its state title on the Sedgefield Country Club course of Greensboro on April 25, 26. In addition to the varsity schedule, the freshmen, for the first time, will also have team matches with the various teams of the state.

The election of Charlie Chatham brings to the helm one of the foremost players in the state. During the summer Charlie played the Roaring Gap C. C. and won one of the big tournaments held at that club. Chatham is a junior, last year being his first year on the squad.

The University has installed a new golf net and the boys have been whaling away at the ball. Practice will be held at the Tin Can until the weather permits outside play. Coach Kenfield is fortunate in having all of last year's state champions back. They are Captain Chatham, Meade Willis, the present holder of the intercollegiate state title, Luther Stewart and June Adams.

The freshmen will have a strong team, and Coach Kenfield will give all newcomers instructions in the art of golf. New men report at the Tin Can at 4 p. m.

The state of Minas Geraes, Brazil, is soon to begin construction on a state university.

VARSITY WORKS FOR GAME WITH DEMON DEACONS

Hard Contest Expected In Raleigh; Ashmore Seeking Scoring Combination.

Another session of practice in the rudiments of basketball was handed the University basketball squad yesterday by Coach Jim Ashmore in preparation for the game in Raleigh Saturday with Wake Forest. The contest will be the second Big Five engagement for both teams.

Interest in the Raleigh game is expected to be high because both teams dropped their debut engagements in the Big Five during the past week. Carolina lost to Davidson by a two-point margin last Saturday. Wake Forest lost to Duke.

The White Phantoms made up for their defeat by Davidson in a spirited last half rally in the Washington and Lee game. Tuesday night they defeated the Charlotte Monograms 23-19.

The failure of the Tar Heel squad to show form of past teams is causing no little worry on the campus. In three college contests, the University five dropped two.

The lineup for the contest Saturday is still unknown. Experimenting for a regular five seems to have not gained Coach Ashmore anything. The line-up may be drawn from any number of men on the squad who have seen service in the contests this year.

In all probability, Tom Cleland will be found at one of the forward positions. The holder for the other forward position is still in doubt. The fight at center has narrowed down to Harper and Dameron. Either of them may start Saturday.

Only at guard do the positions seem to be anywhere certain. Marpet and Brown will probably get the call here. Choate presents the opposition to these two regulars.

Free-Scoring Contest

The fast and tall Kappa Alpha five overwhelmed Phi Alpha Wednesday afternoon in a free scoring game 34 to 21. "Sugar" Allen, former Virginia prep school star led the scoring with 16 markers, while his teammate, "Gene" Wells, followed him with 11 points. The floor work of Morrison, K.A. guard, was one of the high spots of the game. For the losers, Leiberstein, scoring 8 points, was outstanding, and M. Cohen and Kushner also showed up well.

Players Wanted

According to the Daily Kansan one of its reporters recently interviewed Steve "Windy" Hinshaw, freshman football coach there, on the subject of grid material, and asked the coach if he had anything to run in the paper for the next morning.

"Yea," drawled the frosh mentor, "run this want-ad in your paper for me:

"WANTED: Eight husky lads willing to play football for $75 a month and cakes; must be good apple-polishers or possess brains. No flunkers need apply. Also complete back-files of The Dove, the glibberal journal of percussion, and an enlarged photograph of Mr. LaVerne Munte suitable for framing."

FORENSIC SQUAD HEARS BRADSHAW ON NEXT DEBATE

President Williams Of Debate Council Announces Debate With Emory February. 6

The session of the debate squad Thursday night in 201 Murphey hall took the form of an open discussion of "Resolved: That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." Dean F. F. Bradshaw directed the discussion and lectured for a short while, pointing out the main issues in the question. This was the second of a series of lectures which were designed as preliminary preparation for the coming intercollegiate debate with Emory University.

Dean Bradshaw contended that science is inherently, and of its own nature, hostile to faith in God (Carolina has the affirmative side of the question). He advised that the affirmative should build an argument around the fundamental contention that modern science is contrary to the underlying principles of theistic faith. He stated that science rests on mathematics and light, the element of faith being minimized to the extreme. Science deals with the material side of life; theistic faith, with the spiritual. They move in very remote and antagonistic realms. These contentions he cited as the premises of the affirmative side of the controversy.

J. C. Williams, president of the organization, announced that the tryout for the Emory-Carolina debate would take place in 201 Murphey on the night of February 6. The date for the Carolina-George Washington debate tryout was set for February 13. In addition to the announcement that Dr. Swartz, of the department of geology, would deliver the final lecture on the subject of modern science and theistic faith at the next regular weekly meeting, Williams stated that the regular eligibility rules would apply to both the debates. Aside from good scholastic standing, no member of the squad is eligible to try for a place on the team unless he has attended two-thirds of the lectures on the particular question under consideration.

University Employees Rudely Awakened Yesterday By Wreck

Imagine yourself retiring some night in a Pullman berth with everything in its normal order, and then picture yourself awakening suddenly the next morning to find yourself using the ceiling of the car for a bed, and with your clothes, bedding, mattress, and two or three pieces of luggage piled on top of you. Such was the situation two Chapel Hill men, Eddie Thompson and Morris Hill, found themselves in about 8 o'clock yesterday morning. This was the part the two men played in a wreck which occurred yesterday on the Southern railroad between Greensboro and Durham, caused by a broken rail overturning three passenger cars, while a fourth jumped the tracks and was dragged about 70 feet without turning over.

Investigation revealed that, despite the fact that three cars turned turtle, no one was injured. Outside a little shaking up and a rude awakening from early morning dreams, none of the passengers was the worse for the mishap.

Thompson and Hill are employed by the University Consolidated Service Plants and were returning from Norfolk when the wreck occurred.

Vacant Houses

Since the recent building of several new fraternity houses at Carolina, a few old ones have been standing unoccupied and open, full of newspapers, old books and furniture.

Last week police discovered that gangs of high school boys and parties of negroes were using them as club houses, building fires in the fireplaces with chairs, picture frames and various articles of temporarily abandoned furniture. Games of chance provided amusement for the uninvited guests.

A survey by the police and fire departments revealed that many houses, private residences as well, were abandoned and unlocked, and in two cases, because of combustible material lying about, constituted fire menaces.

Owners have been warned to either lock or nail shut all the doors and windows.

Professors Attend Engineer Meeting

G. M. Braune, dean of the school of engineering, and Thorndike Saville, professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering, attended the annual meeting of the North Carolina engineers held in Raleigh yesterday. The meeting was under the auspices of the North Carolina Society of Engineers and the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Holder Commended

Glenn Holder, editor of the Daily Tar Heel, has received several communications from editors of collegiate newspapers commending him for his stand of the unionization of textile mill workers in North Carolina. These letters express admiration for the stand the Tar Heel's editor has taken and state that the editors of the various dailys are supporting Holder in his stand.

Milton A. Abernethy, president of the State College Democratic Club says: "Thank God that one editor in North Carolina has the real man power to say his honest, sincere, and courageous opinion of this horrible textile revolution in the South."

"Glenn, you are a real rebel—as if it were yesterday—I can see the fine young Paul Porter urging the College editors to fight against the social injustice in this country, Fight. Fight. Fight. State College will back her sister institution."

Abernethy states that in the current issue of the Wautaugan, student publication of the Raleigh institution, he is making an attack on the mill bosses of North Carolina by the use of statements from Senator Burton K. Wheeler, James O'Neal, Arthur Garfield Hayes, Roger N. Baldwin, H. L. Mencken, Harry W. Chase, Broadus Mitchell, Ellsworth Farris, Claude G. Bowers, Edgar W. Knight, and Upton Sinclair.

Joe Moore, assistant secretary of the State College Y. M. C. A., also writes to express gratification at the stand of the Tar Heel's editor. He states that no person can fail to appreciate the courage of Holder in defending the students and professors at Carolina and other institutions for their stand in regard to the textile situation.

FRATERNITY JEWELERS TO BROADCAST TODAY

The program will consist largely of fraternity songs and will be of especial interest to the fraternities on the Hill.

Remsen Undergoes Operation

Tony Remsen, a junior in the University, is recovering rapidly after undergoing an operation for acute appendicitis. Remsen was rushed to Watts Hospital some few days ago in a dangerous condition. Dr. Foy Roberson reports, however, that he is rapidly recovering and will return shortly.

Fraternity Notice

According to an announcement by John Bullock, president of the Inter-fraternity council, the period of silence for the winter quarter begins midnight, Sunday, January 26, and ends with the pledging Tuesday, January 28, at 6 o'clock. All pledges should be made through the office of F. F. Bradshaw, dean of students, in South building.

All other rules for rushing will continue as in the fall quarter.

HART AND WELLS ADDRESS SOCIETY

Western Electric Company Officials Tell Of Construciton Of Lead Covered Cable.

C. D. Hart, superintendent of the Baltimore cable plant of the Western Electric Company, and John Wells, development engineer of the same company, spoke at a recent meeting of the local student branch of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. In their talks they explained the methods of construction employed in the new building of the company at Point Breeze, Md., and told of the manufacture of lead-covered cable.

With the aid of a model showing the new plant which covers about seven acres, Mr. Hart traced the course of the material through the plant from its arrival in the train shed on one side of the building until its final testing and shipping from the opposite side.

Mr. Hart also showed several slides showing stages in the construction of the Point Breeze plant from the beginning of the removal of the old recreation park that was on the site until the building was complete and being used.

In explaining the problems to be met in the manufacture of cable, Mr. Wells told of the circuits used in telephone conversations, showing the origin of "cross-talk" and other interferences. He then told what steps could be taken to remove these interferences and how the cable was made to remove them.

Mr. Hart also used slides in his talk, and with their aid he explained the operation of the many machines used in making, testing, and shipping the cable.

After the speakers of the evening had finished, a business session of the branch was held. At this time it was voted to have the organization purchase indirect lighting fixtures to be installed in the senior electrical engineering room.

It was announced at this time that the picture for the Yackety Yack of the local branch, which consists of all students of electrical engineering, will be taken Monday afternoon at 1:30 on the steps of Phillips hall.

Magill Visits Here

O. R. Magill, executive secretary of the Southern Student Conference, was here yesterday afternoon to see Dean Bradshaw on business regarding the Blue Ridge Conference. Dean Bradshaw will be among the leaders who will be at the Blue Ridge conference next summer. Mr. Magill was accompanied here by E. S. King, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at State College in Raleigh.

Buccaneer To Be Delivered Tonight Says Editor Edson

New System Of Delivery Will Be Tried By Humorous Publication.

"ALL TALKING NUMBER"

Issue Will Carry Reviews Of Shows To Be Shown At Carolina Theatre; Also "Who's Who At Carolina" Feature Added.

Cy Edson, genial editor of the Buccaneer, stated yesterday afternoon, that the January issue of the Buccaneer will positively be out tonight.

This issue, the fourth of the year, according to Editor Edson, will be the "All Talking Number;" and will contain, besides the usual puns, jokes and drawings, all advance information on the hot shows that are coming to the Carolina theatre this winter, and an entirely new feature, "Who's Who at Carolina."

Campus rumor has it that this issue will the the wittiest of the year.

A Tar Heel reporter called on Editor Edson to verify the rumor, but the sterling editor only hung his head and blushed.

A new system of delivering the magazines will be attempted this issue. One boy will have charge of deliveries for each dormitory, several boys will take charge of the fraternity and town houses, each boy to take a certain designated district, and each one is responsible for the deliveries in his respective dormitory or district.

Staff Meeting

The regular Sunday night meeting of the Tar Heel reportorial staff will be held Sunday evening at 7 o'clock in the Tar Heel office. Five vacancies will be filled from new men reporting and several changes will be made in beats.

All reporters and city editors are expected to attend this meeting unless excused by the editor, Glenn Holder, or the managing editor, Will Yarborough, in advance.

Regular tryouts will be held for all new men attending this meeting.

ATWOOD SPEAKS TO CAIN SOCIETY

At the regular bi-weekly meeting of the William Cain student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers held Thursday evening in Phillips hall. T. C. Atwood, of Atwood and Nash, the University engineers, spoke on the method of approach to actual problems, describing the construction of a twenty-five million dollar destroyer plant at Boston in 1917 which was erected in less than nine months.

G. M. Braune, dean of the school of engineers, spoke briefly on the national convention of the A. S. C. E. held at New York about ten days ago.

In his talk Mr. Atwood described the methods of construction used in erecting this plant which was designed to build a destroyer every week. The erection of the plant was an excellent example of rapid construction, for from the time of authorization of the plant to the time of the beginning of actual construction of a destroyer was about nine months.

The talk was illustrated with slides, which showed the steps in the contsruction. One remarkable piece of construction. was the erection of a four story office building in six days. In the words of one of those who heard the lecture, "In the slides you could almost see the building grow."

Chief Lloyd Loses First Prisoner In Nine Years' Work

Although Chief of Police L. B. Lloyd has held his present position for a year, and was Orange county sheriff for eight years previously, he had never lost through escape any prisoner he had arrested.

But when the shief yesterday apprehended Bradshaw Massey, colored, for possessing liquor, and invited the negro to enter his car, the culprit tore loose from the officer's grasp and fled.

Chief Lloyd believes, however, that Massey will eventually be recaptured and will do penance for his shortcomings.

NO ARRESTS MADE FOR USE OF 1929 PLATES

No one has been arrested so far, police report, for driving automobiles with 1929 Carolina plates, although the police have been vigilant since January 15 to apprehend any who had failed to procure them. This record is without parallel here since the early days of auto licensing.

Mr. Hollett will be one of a series of speakers who are taking part in a vocational program to be given at the regular luncheon meeting of the Rotary club. Speakers will represent several different professions, and Mr. Hollett will explain the purpose of the cooperative work during the junior year as well as the plan followed in carrying out the program of having the junior engineers spend half their time in actual work in some industrial firm, and the other half at the University.

CLARENCE ADDISON HIBBARD. He never liked the name Clarence and was given nicknames early in life. While at Wisconsin, he was called "Hungry Hib, the Hard Hiker" . . . Hard Hiker because he was in the habit of taking long, long walks alone through the woods. Once he was gone for such a long time that his fraternity brothers started to drag the lake for him. He never did know how to swim. When he took a class of sixty students out on a boat in Japanese waters, the boat capsized and the entire student body swam to shore—with the exception of Addison, who straddled the capsized boat, waiting for help to come.

He snores. Which serves as a key to his habits. He doesn't wear shoes in his home . . . slippers. And he doesn't care to have a jacket on. Clothes have never taken much of his time; and until a year ago, grey and black were the predominant colors of his life but recently friends and family have taken him in hand and bedecked him with gayer raiment. When he's home he writes, which is his chief avocation. At present he is busy with a book that will comment upon the southern short story. For this work, it was necessary for the venerable dean to read more than 80 volumes of short stories and between 100 and 200 single stories. His idea of a swell holiday would be one in which he would be given every convenience to write. He does not like idle conversations nor gatherings that consist of nothing but prattle. Louis Graves' smokers are just what he cares to attend—

Athletic Co-eds

Those who follow the fortunes of the co-ed basketball team were mightily pleased when the local sextette gained their first victory of the season Thursday night. Although the team has lost quite a few more games than it has won this year, it has an ambitious schedule and has attracted more attention than any Spencer hall athletic aggregation since the feminine element first appeared in a Carolina classroom.

It is barely possible that the trunks donated by Dean Paulsen have been responsible for most of the interest recently exhibited by Jack Tar Heel in the feats of the team, but the fact remains that co-ed athletics at the University have reached a point of development much higher than any they have attained heretofore.

Before this fall and winter the average man about the campus was unaware that the Spencer hall contingent engaged in athletics other than the parlor variety. But in the past few weeks the co-eds have diverted some of the athletic spotlight from the mighty he-men and have crashed into sizable sports page headlines under the tutelage of Coach Carl Farris.

Although a really and truly Woman's Athletic Association exists in the environs of Spencer, the co-ed teams receive no financial support other than the proceeds from the games. A tennis team is now being formed; Coach Farris has made tentative plans for the opening of a swimming pool in Bynum Gym and the formation of a co-ed acquatic aggregation. If present plans materialize, co-eds will dash around the track at Emerson field next spring for the first time in the history of man and woman. The Spencer hall inmates will also be initiated into the mysteries of fencing and archery this spring, according to recently formulated plans.

Intercollegiate athletics for women are unknown in North Carolina. The attitude assumed by most of the college administrations in this state concerning participation in athletics by female students is narrow-minded and puritanical. Every effort is expended to encourage intercollegiate athletics for men, but games between representatives of the girls' schools are frowned upon and officially banned. During the mauve decade participation in sports more strenuous than croquet was considered unladylike, but such notions passed into oblivion with the side saddle. There is no logical reason why the much-discussed and universally admitted emancipation of women should not extend to athletics. Within the near future women students all over the state will begin to clamor for the privilege of participating in intercollegiate athletic contests, and their requests should be granted.

Every encouragement should be given the University co-eds in their efforts to establish organized athletics for women on a sound basis here. Numerous benefits, both physical and mental, are derived from proper participation in organized sports, and it is only just that the female students here should be given opportunity to engage in them.

Self-Help Vs. Education

Not only is this an age of mass production; it is likewise an age of mass education. Education, once the exclusive possession of wealthy Americans, is now within the grasp of the masses. In the course of time and with the appearance of the "Education for All" fad, attempts have been made to help those students whose financial status would otherwise make it impossible for them to surmount the pecuniary barriers of a college education.

Unfortunately, the University of North Carolina has been accorded the reputation of being a haven for self-help students in the University at present is far in excess of the demand. Quite a number of these have come to Chapel Hill from other states. To develop the relation which the self-help situation bears to the educative process employed by this institution is the purpose which the writer has in mind.

When considered aside from other factors, is it good business policy for a student to work three hours per day for the sum of twenty-five cents per hour instead of spending this time in pursuit of academic matters? This is the question which must be answered. There can be no doubt that three hours of study (or even three hours spent in some extra-curricular pursuit) will mean more to the Carolina man in the long run than seventy-five cents will ever mean to him. This is the conclusion which results from a purely mechanical consideration of the problem. But unfortunately there are large numbers of students who cannot possibly secure funds enough without working for part of their expenses. Self-help should by all means be the last resort. The only remedy which can be found for the present self-help situation which exists at this university is more and larger loan funds. We wish to call careful attention to this outstanding need.

Among the people of the state who are interested in educational matters there is a large group who are prone to say, "Work your way through college, son; it'll make a man of you." Many go so far as to contend that even students of considerable wealth should work their way through college. Our opinion in this connection is utterly antagonistic to such holdings. In the first place, the fact that many of the so-called self-help students have succeeded in college and in business is not proof that self-help is a good and sound principle. Is it not logical to contend that these same persons would have become accomplished business men sooner had they been able to devote to their studies the hours which they were forced to spend in some money-making pursuit? Furthermore, students who are hampered by financial and other difficulties are often seized by such an intense desire to succeed that nothing can thwart their intentions. It must be remembered, however, that these are in the minority. Such persons if given sufficient funds to make self-help unnecessary would achieve even greater things in the same length of time. The contention that students who can afford to pay their bills should work in order to defray part of their expenses is so obviously invalid as to warrant only passing consideration. Under the present situation of few loans and a relative scarcity of jobs it would be unfair for a student of means to deprive a poor one of a job. Although these arguments will not "hold water," there is a startlingly large number of North Carolina citizens who adhere to them.

Let us consider another phase of the question. Using as a starting point the statement that there are not enough jobs to supply the demand furnished by natives of the state and in consideration of the glaring inadequacy of loan funds, the writer does not hesitate to state that self-help work should be given only to residents of the state.

More and larger loan funds form the only apparent solution to the "education without money" demand of the present order.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

MR. MEBANE AND HIS MORONIC ILK

In regard to the squabble about the Carolina co-eds that has been raging in the Tar Heel for the last few days, I only say, "Sour grapes, Mr. Mebane, Frank and Ernest, and others of your moronic, insipid, ungentlemanly, uncultured and unrefined ilk."

Personally, I have been in contact with co-ed students of the Universities of Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, Illinois, and South Carolina, and the student bodies (are you pseudo-gentlemen acquainted with the colleges below that allow women students only?) of Vassar, Smith, Hollins, Agnes Scott, Wesleyan, Bryn Mawr, Sophia Newcomb, and Sweet Briar.

To keep you quasi-gentlemen from thinking, as your totally imbecilic reactions would probably tend you to think (am I flattering you?) that I draw my deductions from only knowing girls at the above mentioned schools, I might state that I have been in personal contact with representatives of and on the campus of all the above mentioned schools.

In all I find that the girls in these institutions are of quite superior intelligence and not as moronic as you might imagine for it is evident that you do not know.

Also, I might state that you, Mr. Mebane, and you Mr. Frank and Ernest, and you Mr. Unknown, who have the same disgusting, or at least disgusting to any male who has left in his body a sense of decency and honor, would find yourself sadly in the background in the selection of students for Vassar, Smith and Bryn Mawr.

A Defender of Faith.

A CURE FOR THE "ONE-EYE" EVIL

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Some time ago an article was published in a local newspaper emphasizing the annoyance and danger—at night—of highway vehicles with but one headlight. Evidently few measures have been taken by authorities to better the situation, for there appear to be just as many around as ever. To the pedestrian these automobiles are not particularly objectionable, but to inexperienced drivers—myself, for example—they are very annoying and confusing. Now, many drivers are willing to take the risk as long as one light remains burning. So I have one suggestion which, worked out by some inventor of electrical apparatus, might aid society considerably against these highway pests. In each car an electrical system should be installed which would cause all lights to be extinguished, should one cease to burn.

Only last week a friend of mine had a rather disagreeable experience along this line. Driving around a long curve late one moonless night, a "one-eyed" vehicle appeared ahead. As many of us have already noted, it is difficult to determine which side of the approaching vehicle the light is on, except on straight highway, when our own lights are then of some use. As it was, he misjudged the distance, and narrowly missed striking the other auto.

Sincerely yours,
D. M. RICHTERFELD.

IN ANSWER TO "SIMMONS VS. BAILEY"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Coming from a state in which it was once stated that a baboon could be elected governor if only he had been nominated by the Republican party, I am somewhat amused to find Mr. Williams taking the same vicious viewpoint; namely that the members of a party should follow blindly the shibboleths of the party, harmful as they may be, and not be allowed any thinking on their own part. Because Senator Simmons had the courage to have his own convictions and stick by them, Mr. Williams and other rabid so-called patriots accuse him of deserting his party. Every man has the right to his own opinion, and surely just because a man happens to be a senator he is not to be deprived of this right. And perhaps Senator Simmons was right in taking the stand that he did. He has been in public life for a long time and perhaps knows a little more than many of his constituents do about the sort of a man who would make the best president for this great country of ours. A senator should be a leader of his party, not a mere slave to hearken to the will of a few rotten politicians at home.

Furthermore, Senator Simmons is to be commended highly on the fact that he is bigger than his party, for he could see far-

The Columnist's Position

Most of what is said in the special columnists' section of this publication (in Campus Snapshot, most certainly) is meant to be taken in the spirit in which it is written; namely, lightly. Far be it from the intentions of this assistant-editor to offend any group, or part thereof, by the exercise of the scribal art. We, personally, have been accused of heightening the truth by overstatement in the last issue of this column which, for the lack of a better term, we chose to call the Co-ed Issue. Lest some act of violence should descend upon our honorable (and Red) head, we must recant.

What Is a College Anyhow?

The auburn Plainsman adds two definitions to the collegiate dictionary: "College—a group of buildings behind a stadium." "College president—one who is paid with the funds that are left over after the coaches have received their checks."

'Tis Ever Thus

Three weeks ago an industrious freshman by drawing a pair of fives and a couple of sixes in a poker game won his expenses for an entire quarter. The very next day this same freshman by drawing a pair of fives (F's) and a couple of sixes (F's) from the registrar's office lost a quarter's work.

We Write a Verse

My thoughts soar high,
My thoughts sink low;
But where my money is,
Thither will I go.

My heart aches West,
My heart aches East;
But where my money is,
My heart aches least.

I've wandered near;
But where my money is—
My home is there.

Learning vs. Sleep

We understand that experiments were made recently by a professor at the University of Minnesota with a view to determining whether learning can be acquired in sleep. His apparatus consisted of a telephone, an electrically-run phonograph, and a set of head phones.—My word! Carolina profs have been making such experiments for years, and they don't use much apparatus either. They make their experiments and record the results thereof in their classrooms on eight-thirty classes every day in the collegiate year!

Whither Student Energy?

A few nights ago, about 10:30 o'clock, we happened down town. The hectic swirl of late supper was over, and the gay chatter of midnight toast had not begun. The lights from the shops blinked dismally through a cold drizzle. The village street was deserted, save for here and there a hurrying pedestrian with his coat buttoned tight around his throat. But on the opposite side of the street from us, in striking contrast to this setting, a sight of very peculiar significance arrested our attention. A neophyte, dressed in attire all out of proportion to the atmosphere, was being led hither, thither, and yon by a goose, to which he was bound by a very substantial cord. Such experiences as these are, according to the generally accepted code, fitting preliminaries for neophytes who are about to be inducted into the dignity of a fraternity. We take occasion, however, to disagree with such holdings.

"Moods and Changes Ever"

The strings of the human heart are curiously strung. Tight and loose they are, sometimes crosswise and out of tune. But sometimes they are strung straight and true, and there is no discord when they are struck. Our lives become strangely translated into materialism all around us. There are days, as we flunk a quiz, when our souls wander off into dreary wastes, over marshes bleak and dreary; and the strings struck by the heavy hand of time give off only discordant notes. Yet on other days, as when we pass a quiz, or get a package, we sing a song of good cheer. The merriment of the song varies as tyrant moods hold the governing whip over our inner nature. We are ready to admit that humans are all essentially alike. The strings of the human heart are strangely strung, indeed.

Allen And Warren Are To Be In V. P. I. Meet

Varsity Faces Gobblers In First Local Bout Tonight

Shefield Likely To Be Replaced By Clark Due To Injuries He Received In Last Match.

FRESHMAN ALSO FIGHT

Virginians Boast Strong Varsity And Freshman Outfits; Rowe Working Hard On Substitutes.

Despite illness during this week both Captain Allen, Southern Conference 135-pound champion, and John Warren, star 175-pound ringman, are likely to face the hard-hitting V. P. I. boxers in first boxing meets in the Tin Can this year. Allen has been battling a cold in the infirmary all week, but Coach Crayton Rowe stated yesterday that he though Allen would be ready if he was needed. Warren has also been ill with the same malady, but he has been able to get in a couple of days of work this week.

Sheffield, scrappy little 125-pound ringman, may be held out of the matches. He suffered an injury to his shoulder in the matches with Washington and Lee and unless more rapid improvement is shown Rowe is likely to shift Clarke to this division. Clarke has been doing good work lately and the coaches are anxious to try him out against good competition. Otherwise the boxers are in good condition.

V. P. I. boxers hold a 5-2 victory over Virginia, long a contender in conference circles. Carolina won over W. & L. last Saturday night by the same score. However, in scoring their win the Gobblers showed a harder punching group than the Carolinians. The Gobbler boxers won as follows:

In the featherweight division Fishburne, Virginia boxer, lost a decision to Towler of V. P. I. The bout was close and the decision could have been given to either man. Captain Bob Rainey of the Cavaliers won the decision over Jones in three rounds. Mehaffey of V. P. I. and West won decisions over Carter Meyers and Buck Luning, both of Virginia, in close bouts. McCue fighting his first varsity fight for Virginia got the decision over Chapman in three rounds. In the final bout Gerry Webb lost a decision to Stark, Gobbler star.

The Virginia freshman team found little difficulty in defeating the yearling Gobblers. McNeil, scored a K. O. over Culp in the 115-pound class when the referee stopped the fight in the first part of the third round. Geer lost to Goldstein of Virginia. Nunnally, also of Virginia, scored a technical K. O. over Lewis in the third round. Nunnally showed cleverness in flooring his man. Payne, former A. M. A. star, now wearing Cavalier colors, had little trouble with Taylor and K. O.'d his man with a left hook to the body and a right uppercut to the chin. Stevens won the judges' decision over Thomas in three rounds. His left gave the techman a terrific beating. Barber also won the decision over his man in a very clever exhibition. Bronner won the heavyweight fight over Grinus with a knockout in the third round.

Substitutes are being groomed and shifts in the Carolina lineup planned if worst comes to worst and neither Allen nor Warren get to box.

Jack Farris, scrappy 135-pound brother of the Tar Heel's fighting football captain, will probably get the call at Captain Allen's post against the V. P. I. 145-pounder. Farris has been showing well all year, but will be at a 10-pound weight handicap.

Obie Davis, star 160-pounder, may be shifted to Warren's light heavy post, with Smathers or Avery to succeed the veteran Davis in the 160-pound class. Davis fought out of his weight similarly last year and accounted for himself well against the big boys.

The rest of the lineup will probably show Evan Vaughan, 115 pounds; Harry Sheffield, 125 pounds; Noah Goodridge, who is looking the best of his career, 135 pounds; and Bill Koenig, heavyweight.

Golf Notice

Golf practice is being held in the Tin Can daily. All newcomers will be welcomed by Coach Kenfield. Individual instruction will be given to all new men who come out for the team. All candidates report to Coach Kenfield at the Golf net in the Tin Can at 4 o'clock.

VIRGINIANS ARE LEAD BY HARRISON

Captain Harrison is pacing the Virginia cagers in scoring, with Mayo a close second. Harrison sank twelve field goals and four free throws in the four games to total twenty-six points. Mayo, playing at a forward berth, has accounted for twenty-four points, having made eight goals and eight free tosses.

The standing in individual scoring is as follows:

Player	Games	G	F	T
Harrison	4	12	4	28
Mayo	4	8	8	24
Delafield	4	5	2	12
Thomas	4	3	5	11
Stouder	3	4	1	9
Merle	4	1	0	2
Manley	4	1	0	2

Chi Phi Wins

The fast Chi Phi basketball team yesterday overcame the Zeta Beta Tau's to the tune of 18 to 14. Abrams, a Zeta forward, was high scorer for the game with a total of 11 points. There were numerous fouls by both sides.

The lineup:

Zeta B. T. (13)		Chi Phi (18)
Abrams (11)	R. F.	Wilkin (4)
Spiegel	L. F.	Haywood (1)
Pachmann (2)	C.	Upshaw (5)
Perlatin	R. G.	Hudson (2)
Weil	L. G.	Benoit (2)

"F" Defeats "I"

"F" dormitory basketball team yesterday defeated "I" by the score of 22-9. Hooks, left forward for "I," was the heavy scorer of the game. There were numerous fouls by the "I" team.

The lineup:

"F" (22)		"I" (9)
Johnson (1)	R. F.	Levitt (3)
Hooks (10)	L. F.	Winnig

Says Us

by
Browning Roach

We always did like blue panties—especially on blondes—and brunettes—and titians. And now that Dean Paulsen has put the Tar Heelettes in navy blue basketball trunks—we don't mean that Dean personally assisted the basket-tossers into their uniforms; so far as we know the fair ones are well capable of going through that performance themselves — but, as we were saying, since the co-eds, through the cooperation of Mr. Paulsen, are in their little blue so-and-so's what are we going to do about it? More games in Bynum gym won't suffice.

A co-ed is a co-ed and a black horse isn't white—do you get the analogy? Well, here's the layout: If the Tar Heelettes grow torrid and begin to glow on the basketball floor by reason of these same little shorts of blue, then why not add a bit of color to the campus by adopting them as the official uniform of the species femina scholaris? Shall we put that into the form of a resolution, to go into effect when the ole southern sun gets a little more regularity into putting on his daily act?—We could call them beach pyjamas—if we had a beach.

You've heard of signals? We thought we had too, until the other night down at the Little Tin Can, when a youngster by the name of Shaw impressed upon us our lack of enlightenment on the subjct. Heretofore we thought the chief signal for plays used in basketball was the finger signal of the center just before the tip-off, but this lad ups and pulls the vocal numeral signal on us in an out-of-bound play. He was guarding for Bragtown in the game with the local high and the ball had just been returned to him from out of bounds by a teammate down under the Chapel Hill goal. He slams the ball on the floor a time or two in the general direction of the opposite end of the court, then slows his pace, gently dribbles and yells: "Four—three—one—two!" He dribbles to center court, pivots, passes to the other guard at his left and slightly to his rear. Guard No. 2 passes to a forward near the foul line, who turns it over to the center to the right of the goal and then goes in and takes the ball and shoots. Another out-of-bounds play. Shaw yells: "Four—one—two—three!" and the ball goes down the right side of the court. The play didn't work so well as it sounds, however. Among other things, competition from the gallery cramped the signal caller's effect. And again, the basket didn't seem to be in exactly the right position when the forward made his shot, and the referee didn't favor the custom of giving the player two points for his admirable intent. And Bragtown lost.

Anyone interested in further development of week-end sports consult with Ellis Fysal or Haynsworth Jones, the high school football coach. Special attractions on Sundays. Meets staged in Orange and adjoining counties. Headquarters Sutton's Drug store. (adv.)

State Lacks Veterans

The Tar Meels will face N. C. State's Southern Champions in Raleigh Tuesday night without a veteran forward. The champions will have only Larry Haar, forward, and Captain Maurice Johnson, guard, from their title winners.

VARSITY TEAMS FACE HARD WEEK

Basketball Contests With State And Duke Headline Week Of Activity In Sports.

Basketball contests with N. C. State and Duke, counting in both Southern Conference and Big Five standings, head a tough schedule when the athletic teams will face during the the coming week. The freshmen basketeers play State and Duke frosh the same nights as the varsity, and will probably also have a return meeting Thursday night in Durham with Durham high. The varsity and freshmen boxers go to Lexington Saturday night to meet V. M. I., and the varsity and freshman wrestlers will meet V. P. I. in Blacksburg the same night.

The basketball game with N. C. State will be played in Raleigh Tuesday night. The only home event of the week will be the varsity and freshman basketball games with Duke's flying Blue Devils in the Tin Can here Saturday night.

The varsity basketball games will probably hold the spotlight of interest. The Tar Heels, without a veteran forward, are counted anything but favorites to carry on their record of seven State and four Conference titles in eight years.

The week's engagements promise to make or break Tar Heel chances and to answer the question of whether the Tar Heel rookie forwards can carry on this year. They will also give a fine line on the relative strength of State and Duke.

State has only Haar and Captain Johnson back from last year's Southern Champions, but judging from early season records, has another strong team. The Duke team that beat State in the Big Five race, only to lose out in the Conference, is virtually intact this year. The Tar Heels, who beat both teams out in the State race only to fall in the Conference, have veterans back at center and the guard posts, but are without a veteran forward.

The Daily O'Collegian, campus paper of A. and M. collelge, is expanding its program by installation of a new and larger press.

Harper-Croson Battle To Feature Duke Tilt

The Harper-Crosen battle at center promises to be one of the high lights of the Carolina-Duke battle here next Saturday night. Both boys stand around 6 feet 6 and top all other players on the floor. In one of the Carolina-Duke games last year Harper had Crosen covered like the dew and the victory went for Carolina, and in the other Crosen ran wild and led Duke to a victory.

Game Tuesday Recalls 1929 Basketball Games

The Carolina-State basketball game in Raleigh Tuesday night recalls the curious basketball situation of last year. Carolina beat State twice in the State championship race and won the state title. Duke eliminated Carolina from the Southern Tournament, and along came State to beat Duke for the Southern title.

Mrs. Lawton To Talk Here

Mrs. W. L. Lawton, president of the National Society for Roadside Planting, will give a talk, illustrated by lantern slides, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, February 5, at the Carolina Inn. Her talk will follow the weekly meeting of the Rotary Club, and the Rotarians and other men of the village, as well as all the women, are invited. Mrs. Lawton comes to Chapel Hill under the auspices of the Jefferson Davis Highway committee of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

A.A.U.W. Benefit Supper

The American Association of University Women will have an informal bridge supper at 7 o'clock Thursday evening, February 6, at Mrs. Chase's home, for the benefit of its student loan fund for graduate women students. Tables or places may be engaged by notifying Mrs. Urban T. Holmes, telephone 6641. The fee is $1.

QUINT TO PLAY DEMON DEACONS IN CAPITAL CITY

Varsity And Freshmen Will Meet Wake Forest Teams In Raleigh Tonight.

The Tar Heel cagers will leave this afternoon for Raleigh where they will meet the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest in the Raleigh city auditorium at 8 o'clock tonight. This will be the second big five contest for both teams, and since each has lost one game in the state title, the Tar Heels to Davidson, and Wake Forest to Duke, indications point to a nip and tuck affair in the Capital city tonight.

Coach Jim Ashmore, Tar Heel mentor, has been setting his proteges through some stiff paces this week and as a result of much intensive practice the Tar Heels should show the best form of the season. The forward positions, which are being hotly contested by a large number of candidates, have been secured by no one candidate as yet, although the outstanding forward stars in past games have been Cleland, Dameron, Neiman and Hutchinson. Johnny Greene, another of the forward candidates, is due for an appearance tonight, and may meet the expectations of the dopesters.

The Deacons will present a strong outfit tonight, their roster including Mills and Quillen, well-known gridiron stars. Their season thus far has not been very successful, and tonight they will be fighting to retrieve their position in the state basketball world.

As a preliminary to the varsity affair, it has been announced that the Tar Babies will meet the Baby Deacons.

Tar Heels Preparing For Milrose Games

The relay team that will run in the select Milrose Games in New York is fast rounding into shape. Showing best of a long roster of candidates are Track Captain Dave Nims, letter quarter-miler; Dick Garrett, letter quarter-miler; Minor Barkley, letter miler; and Charlie Farmer, freshman sprint star last year.

Hines Is Leading Freshman Scorers

Wlimer Hines, Southern junior tennis champion, is leading the scorers in the freshman quint, which plays State's Wolfcubs in Raleigh Tuesday night, Durham High in Durham Thursday night, and Duke's Blue Imps here Saturday night.

Gripping, startling, amazing is this talking production of the United States Cavalry—you'll enjoy every foot of this film.

Lee's Birthday Recalls Story Of Fourth North Carolina Regiment

(By Elbert Denning)

This is an old story to North Carolinians, but one which will be ever new and fresh so long as memory treasures the devotion of gallant men at home and fireside, to kith and kin.

It is the story of the Fourth North Carolina Regiment which followed General Robert E. Lee through the Civil War to the jumping-off place, and there took only his word before leaping. The Fourth repulsed the last attack made on army of northern Virginia, fired the last volley of Marse Robert's individual command, and stacked its arms only after repeated commands from leaders who saw that further fighting was hopeless.

The tale is borrowed, in spots filched outright, from more distinguished and exhaustive historians. It is offered for print under a Chapel Hill date-line because the two leaders most closely identified with the Fourth North Carolina regiment were graduates of Carolina, and here daily, until Memorial Hall was closed for repairs and perhaps for destruction, youthful Tar Heels have for two-score years been reading the marble tablets commemorating these two great generals.

The Fourth North Carolina Regiment was organized at Camp Hill, near Garysburg, in May, 1861, with George Burgwyn Anderson as its colonel and Bryan Grimes as major.

Ordered To Yorktown

On the 20th of July the regiment proceeded to Richmond, Va., staying there nine days and then moving to Manassas Junction, where it spent the summer and winter drilling and preparing for the coming campaigns. The eighth of April, 1862, the regiment was ordered to move to Yorktown; on the way it did picket duty during the battle that took place there. The battle was short and the Fourth soon resumed its march. On the 13th of May it arrived at the Chickahominy River, where it remained until the battle of Seven Pines.

There the regiment received its first real taste of enemy shell fire, May 31. Colonel Anderson was still in command and Major Grimes was acting Lieutenant-Colonel by reason of the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel John A. Young, who had been disability, and who, being a sent home because of physical clothing manufacturer, offered the Fourth many articles of clothing at his personal expense. Major Grimes watched the conflict from astride his iron-grey horse, with one leg nonchalantly thrown over the saddle bow. In the charge the Major's horse was killed under him, pinning its rider to the ground. While unable to rise, Major Grimes waved his sword and shouted "Go on, boys! Go on!" Then gaining freedom from his temporary prison and finding that the color-bearer had been killed, he seized the flag and rushed forward, waving his men on into the fight.

His Gallantry Recognized

Major Grimes showed in this, his first serious battle, those instinctive qualities of soldiership that won for him through successive grades promotion to major-general. His brigade commander, General Anderson, said of him in 1862: "Colonel Grimes and his regiment are the keystone of my command." His division commander, General D. H. H. Mill, said of him in 1863: "He has been in many pitched battles and has behaved most gallantly in them all. His gallantry, ripe experience, admirable training, intelligence, and moral worth constitute strong claims for promotion." His corps commander, General J. B. Gordon, said of him in 1864: "General Bryan Grimes has already distinguished himself among the illustrious sons of a state prolific in a soldiery unsurpassed in any war, and his record as chief of this stalwart command (Major-General of the Army of Northern Virginia) added to his high reputation."

On the 26th of June, 1862, the Fourth took a minor part in the battle of Mechanicsville. Colonel Anderson had so distinguished himself that he was promoted to brigadier-general, and in this capacity was assigned by General Lee to a newly-formed North Carolina brigade made up of the Second, Fourth, Fourteenth, and Thirtieth Regiments.

At Cold Harbor

The Fourth's next real fighting was at Cold Harbor. Again Major Grimes had a horse killed under him, but he led his men on foot until another horse was captured. Immediately after the conflict he was promoted to the colonelcy.

The regiment encountered the enemy at Boonsboro, September 14, 1862, but intense fighting did not last very long, although General D. H. Hill with a small force of about five of six thousand men had held in check all day a force of probably ten times as many men, and enabled General Lee to organize his troops at Sharpsburg. Colonel Grimes was wounded that morning.

The battle of Sharpsburg, which occurred Wednesday, September 17, is considered by historians as one of the great battles of the Civil War, and in this fight General Anderson, heretofore scarcely mentioned in other battles, played a prominent part. Colonel Grimes was unable to participate because of wounds.

Anderson Mortally Wounded

General Anderson was mortally wounded and the Fourth lost its first and much-loved colonel. Three months later the regiment engaged in the battle of Fredericksburg and afterwards went into winter quarters on the south bank of the Rapidan River.

The regiment saw its next hard fighting at Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863. Led into battle by Colonel Grimes, it charged the enemy. Colonel Grimes received a severe contusion, and after the charge fell fainting to the ground, but reviving a few moments later, led his men throughout the remainder of the day. General Jackson, who watched the drive of the Fourth, was highly pleased therewith.

The regiment was under fire again at Brandy Station, June 9, but took no active part in the battle, merely supporting Stuart's cavalry. The regiment's next real taste of enemy fire came on the first day of July at Gettysburg. The Fourth, still under the command of Colonel Grimes, entered the fight in the middle of the afternoon of the first day and drove the enemy before them, but took no further part in the great battle.

Spottsylvania Court House

May 9, 1864, the Fourth engaged in the battle of Spottsylvania Court House. Skirmishes lasted for three days, and in the 12th the Union army launched a furious assault and broke the Confederate line. An order was given to Rhodes' division, of which the Fourth was a part, to retrive the loss. Ramseur, with his brigade, led the charge. The men were dropping thick and fast, but foot by foot they were steadily gaining ground. Resolutely they pressed on toward the enemy until they were only a few feet away from them, and the struggle would have been a hand-to-hand one if the Federals had not shrunk from the deadly fire of the Southern soldiers.

On the 18th of July the regiment encountered the enemy at Snicker's Gap. The battle was short and the next day the Fourth reached Winchester where they met and engaged the Federals in another fight. Fighting was intense for several hours and General Rhodes fell in the struggle, and Ramseur took command for a month, when he fell at Cedar Creek. General Grimes was then given the command of the division which he retained until the close of the war, being indirectly in command of the Fourth.

April 1, 1865, General Grimes' division, while covering Lee's retreat, met the enemy at Sailors' Creek. Superior numbers drove the Confederates back across the bridge, but not until General Grimes with a small number of men, who remained on the bridge after the division had got safely across, destroyed the bridge and swam the creek to safety. General Grimes plunged across the water on his horse and rejoined his men.

Lee Surrenders To Grant

Six days later the division passed through Appomattox and engaged in the battle there. The enemy were driven back and many prisoners were captured, General Lee congratulated the men for their brave showing. In the night heavy firing was heard and General Grimes rushed his men in that direction. On the way to the firing Grimes rode up to General Gordon and asked where he should place his men. "Anywhere you please." answered Gordon. Grimes was puzzled and demanded an explanation, only to learn that General Lee had surrendered to General Grant.

Grimes had gained an advantageous point through, and was unwilling to give it up upon hearing of Lee's surrender. He sent a messenger to General Gordon, announcing his success, and that the road to Lynchburg was open for the escape of wagons. To his great surprise he received orders to retire, which he declined to do, thinking that Gordon did not understand the commanding position that he held. Gordon still continued to send orders, which Grimes still disregarded, thinking Gordon ignorant of his position, until finally an order came from General Lee himself. Slowly and sullenly Grimes' men began to retrace their steps over the ground they had driven the enemy. The retreat was orderly, although in the immediate front of a greatly superior force. One time the enemy made a dash as if to overwhelm the Confederates; but the brigade of General W. R. Cox (which was bringing up the rear) faced about and with the steadiness of veterans on parade, poured such a sudden and deadly volley into the astonished Federals that they hastily retired in confusion. This was the last volley fired at Appomattox, and the last fired by the Army of Northern Virginia.

To commemorate the life of General Anderson, a marble tablet was placed on the walls of Memorial Hall at the University of North Carolina which reads:

George Burgwyn Anderson, Born 1831, Died 1862, Matriculated (U. N. C.) 1847, Graduated United States Military Academy 1852, Resigned from the United States Army 1861, Colonel Fourth North Carolina Troops 1861, Engaged at Seven Pines, Brigadier-General 1862, tally wounded at Sharpsburg Wounded at Malvern Hill, Mor- 1862.

The tablet honoring General Grimes, also on the walls of Memorial Hall, reads:

Bryan Grimes, Born 1828, Died 1880, Class (U. N. C.) 1848, Planter, Member of Convention of 1861, Major, Lieutenant-Colonel, and Colonel Fourth Regiment of North Carolina Troops, Brigadier-General Army of Northern Virginia. The roll of his battles is the roll of the battles of the Army of Northern Virginia.

ther than the narrow horizon of party lines. He was not afraid to support a man whom he thought would be the best president merely because he was of the opposite party. Rather than condemning him, North Carolina should be proud of being represented by a true patriot like Senator Simmons.

Mr. Williams is talking like a grade-school debater when he talks about the "treachery" of Senator Simmons, and the "prostrate" form of the body that had made him what he was. Mr. Williams uses a lot of that kind of "bosh" to cover up the fact that there is no real reason for the movement on foot to deprive Senator Simmons of his seat.

Personally, I know nothing whatever about Mr. Bailey and so have nothing to say about him. On the contrary, I have read much about Senator Simmons and know quite a bit about his long and very honorable career in the senate. Even Mr. Williams admits that his career has been honorable. Then he goes on and gives the old "gag" about Senator Simmons being too old to perform his duties capably. Poor excuse to offer in order to rob a man of an office that he richly deserves. A man is never too old to serve his country. And until Senator Simmons states that he desires to be relieved of his duties, in my opinion, it is the duty of the voters of North Carolina to reelect him, for in so honoring Senator Simmons, they are honoring their state and themselves.

The recent speeches that were made in the senate about Simmons show clearly the fine opinion that friend and foe alike have of him. They were not made as mere rhetorical flourishes but were expressions of genuine admiration. Surely, North Carolina would do herself a great injury if she were to deprive such a man as Senator Furnifold Simmons of his seat in the senate, which he has held with so much distinction for so many years.

DELTA SIGMA PI FRAT ENTERTAINS AT SMOKER

The local chapter of the International fraternity of Delta Sigma Pi, commerce order, held its first smoker of the quarter at its chapter house Thursday evening January 23. Dr. E. W. Zimmerman, of the faculty spoke to the group.

Dr. Zimmerman gave an account of his recent research in Porto Rico. He has accomplished a considerable task in preparing his report for the Tariff Commission. Governor Roosevelt carried a copy of this report with him when he left to take over the gubernatorial post at Porto Rico. A reception followed the speaker's remarks.

Student problems of national importance such as athletics and national eligibility rules, fraternities, sororities and the relatin of students to the city in which which the college is located were discussed in the opening meeting of the fifth annual congress of the national student federation of America, held at Stanford university.

Thomas Hunt Morgan, professor of zoology at California Institute of Technology, was elected president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at the annual meeting at Des Moines.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Addison Hibbard

a thing in which he can take his coat off, light a Chesterfield and say something and listen to something. With so much noise about him at the office and on the campus, it is natural that he sometimes values quiet highly and what with three children, all younger than 10 in the house, he needs must, of course, occasionally work at the office. And there he types his manuscripts. At this moment, he is busy writing 10,000 words for a brochure that will be published by the Institute of Current Literature at Harvard University, of which he is contributing editor.

As soon as he finished with his four years at Wisconsin University, he proceeded to Nagasaki, Japan, where for five years he was Dean of Foreign Languages at the Imperial College of Commerce in that city. He liked the Orient immensely. And if he were forced to move from Chapel Hill, U. S. A., he would proceed to Japan. While there, he even took a hand at managing a newspaper, which served as some preparation for the journalism courses he taught at the University when he first came here. He is a past master of the chop-stick, as is Mrs. Hibbard. While in the East, he umpired baseball games. He doesn't play anything like it himself, except golf—which he plays well but contrary to all laws and regulations.

When finally he decided to leave Japan, he went about it in an indirect manner. For four months a tramp-steamer carried him around the Malay Settlements, past the tips of India and through the Canal. And for about two months he wandered all over Europe, finally arriving in New York. He was sure he was back in America when he heard a policeman reply to a question with "How the hell do I know?" Traveling holds no powerful appeal for him—he doesn't want to leave Chapel Hill, which he greatly likes and where he delights to work.

Back in the United States, he proceeded immediately to teach. 1918 is a memorable year for him. In June of that year he was married at Racine and three days afterwards he enlisted in the Navy. The Navy life did not prove very successful. For some time he was occupied, as all other "gobs" were, in picking up chips, cleaning dishes and other things. Later he served as a camp-paper editor in a training camp in New Jersey. He never was on a battleship.

Cranberries and raw-oysters are among the dishes he likes. But pancakes are his affinity. He loves them. He also has a sweet-tooth; that is, he likes bitter sweet candy. If he had his way in educational methods, he would have classes of only four or five students, and have them read a great deal more than they do now and have the professor do a great deal less lecturing. He likes cold showers. And he reads the Nation and the Outlook religiously and faithfully. When he reads, he carefully adjusts the light, puts his feet up and places an emptied ash-tray by his side. If he is feeling very frivolous, which is rarely, he will read a sea-story. He very rarely laughs out loud but is heard to chuckle. He is very even-tempered, rarely gets annoyed, except when there is too much unnecessary noise. At one time, he smoked a pipe, but since he lost a tooth and could not very well hold a pipe in his mouth comfortably, he gave up the pipe altogether. He dislikes to travel on a train, and uses an old-fashioned razor.

As a young boy; that is, long before he became the general editor of a series of books on the old and new south to be published by the University of North Carolina Press, he used to mimeograph poems that he had written and sell them for a penny a piece. The milkman occupies a soft-spot in Hib's heart, for that benevolent distributor of milk, which even today Addison likes, payed him five cents for his brain-children.

When in New York, he makes sure that, even if he sees but one show, he will see Ziegfeld's Follies. His early desire to be an architect probably has nothing to do with his distaste for cities. He is now a movie fan. After seeing Disraeli, he thought that there may be something after all in that great American pastime. And now he is a regular fiend. He goes about twice a month. As a pastime, he occasionally plays checkers with his son . . . he liked to play chess but he hasn't played in years. He believes in exercise. He's a bit worried now about his snoring and his recent gain of fifteen pounds in weight.

LAW SCHOOL AND GRAIL WILL GIVE DANCES IN FEB.

First Series Of Dances For Winter Quarter Will Be Held By Lawyers And Honor Society.

TO BE IN BYNUM GYM

(By J. H. D. Jr.)

Two dances are in order for the week-end of February 7. The first of these will be held Friday night in the Bynum gymnasium by the members of the Law school. The Order of the Grail has announced that its second dance of the quarter will be held Saturday night in the gym following the Law school dance. Both dances are to begin at nine o'clock.

Due to the fact that the previous Grail dances scheduled to begin at nine o'clock have rarely begun on time, a plan is being tried this time in an effort to start the dance promptly at nine. The first five girls to arrive on the floor will each receive a box of candy. However, this will not be carried out if the first five girls to arrive are not on the floor before nine-thirty.

These two dances differ in the respect that the dance to be given by the Law school will be by invitation, while the Grail will be by subscription as usual. The price of admission to the Grail will be one dollar. The price was raised at the last dance. Only a limited number of stags will be allowed to attend.

Everyone expecting to attend these dances is urged to invite a girl from somewhere. Strange as it may seem, dances are usually very boring affairs when members of the fair sex are very scarce. Officials urge that "If you are afraid to bring your own girl—invite some other guy's. It's being done. If worse comes to worst, invite a co-ed."

Farrington Falls Into Trap Set By Prohibition Agent

Just a year ago a stranger on the Hill walked into a Carolina fraternity house. His name, he said, was Brandeis, and he was thirty. Obviously a good fellow, he was allowed to accompany several of the boys to the home of J. B. Farrington in Chatham, where, it is said, a quantity of liquor was purchased.

A few days later, January 30, 1929, to be exact, the grand jury's proceedings resulted in a true bill in the case of the United States vs. Farrington, on behalf of information furnished by federal officer Brandeis.

Farrington, for awhile apprehensive, it is said, forgot about the incident, but almost a year later, on Friday, January 24, 1930, he was arrested by Deputy United States Marshall Iva Johnson, and posted bail of $500 to insure his appearance in Federal Court at Greensboro on February 17th to answer a charge of possession and sale of intoxicating liquor.

Freshman Notice

A smoker for the members of the freshman class will be held Monday night at 9:00 o'clock in Swain hall. Nominations for freshman class officers will be made at the meeting. President Chase will address the members of the class.

Amateur Engineers Provide Correct Lighting For $2.48

(By B. H. Whitton)

With an application of the usual engineers' practicallity, which was the subject of so much criticism at one time in the past, members of the senior class in electrical engineering have improvised for $2.48 a set of lighting fixtures which are the equal of any costing at least $15 each.

Just at present the system is only 75 per cent. complete, for the supply house, Pope-Crowder, of the "everything" fame, had only three wash basins when the demand for lighting fixtures arose. However, Mr. Crowder has promised that he will have another shipment of these articles within ten days, and then the room will be completely equipped with modern fixtures, giving an indirect light of absolutely no glare and with an even distribution, which is equal to that supplied by the best commercial fixtures.

Spurred to action by the fact that the glaring light supplied by the fixtures which were installed when the building was built in 1919 had become unbearable, the electricans decided that something had to be done.

The first action taken was to remove the globes from the fixtures, obtain short extension cords, and lower the source of light. At this time the globes which had been suspended about 4 inches from the ceiling by short chains were hung down around the bulbs with strings.

This improved the situation somewhat, but the group was determined to get satisfaction. The next step was to paint the globes with ivory paint. This overcame the glare all right, but the complaint then was that the light was too yellow.

In keeping with the statements of members of the engineering faculty that engineering is essentially a profession where dollars and cents count every day of the year, the class cast aside the suggestion that it purchase a commercial fixture—and anyway the building department reported that the cost of any change in fixtures must be borne by the group.

Driven to desperation by the thwarting of their plans in the first two steps, one member of the class suffered a brainstorm; and when the wreckage was cleared, the idea of substituting

LOCAL TELEGRAPH OFFICE INDICATES LACK OF BUSINESS

(By J. M. Little)

Since October of last year there have been many predictions and actual reports of business depression in all parts of the country. Estimates range all the way from harrowing tales of starvation and famine to the reassuring utterances of the President and others who would have us believe that business is essentially on a sound basis, and the depression only temporary.

An excellent barometer of actual business conditions and buying power of the people is the relative number of telegrams and cablegrams sent and received during a certain period. For the entire country, this factor would seem to point to a substantial buying power of the people. H. L. Hamilton, advertising manager of Western Union, makes the statement that "preliminary reports from our offices indicate a record-breaking file of holiday cablegrams and telegrams which in our opinion, tends to belie reports of restricted buying power." The money spent in sending telegrams and cablegrams falling largely in the category of luxeries and non-essentials, this condition should be accurately indicative of the entire financial status of the United States.

Turning to Chapel Hill, however, we find a difference in the situation. Reports from the local Western Union office indicate a decrease of 12 per cent in the total number of telegrams and cablegrams during December, 1929, as compared with the number sent during December of the previous year.

More in accord with the optimistic views is the report of Post Office receipts. Although there appears a decline of $848 in the last quarter of 1929 as compared with the last quarter of 1928, the figures for December show an increase of $1,185 over the preceding December.

Further evidence of normal business is gained from the report of local bank clearings. An increase of $327,684 is noted.

Waddell Speaks To Engineering Society

Chas. E. Waddell, Jr., president of the William Cain Society (student chapter at Carolina) of the American Civil Engineers, spoke Friday evening in Raleigh before the state society, in behalf of the local chapter.

Three U. N. C. men, Dean G. M. Braune, Thorndike Saville, and Waddell, attended a banquet at the Carolina hotel at which 150 engineers and students were present. Josiah W. Bailey, democratic senatorial aspirant, was an honor guest and principal speaker.

Waddell outlined the work of Major Cain, Dr. Riddick, and other local men whom he regarded as inspirational, and assured his fellow engineers that the Carolina neophytes were doing everything to uphold the traditions of the profession.

Negroes Steal Hog; Prefer Road Sentence To Starving

(By John Patric)

It is probable that even members of Frederick Koch's playmaking class, not excluding Dixie, would know just what to do. "One year on the road."

Not so Judge Hinshaw, who tries to follow the precepts laid down in Portia's "mercy" speech and yet keep Chapel Hill a safe repository for private property.

Lee Headen (under questioning of prosecutor): "Yessuh, ah lives out Pottah's Field way—'bout two yeah, ah reckon—Nosuh, ah don' work much, ah'm too ole—Unine States gives me few dollahs ev'y month—yessah, mah son,—he die in de wah—How ole ah am? RANKIN NAMES CONTEST DATE

Contestants In American Legion Oratorical Contest To Meet Friday.

Mr. E. R. Rankin has announced that the representatives from Orange county schools in the American Legion oratorical contest will compete for the county championship next Friday at three o'clock in the auditorium of the Hillsboro high school. The winner of the contest will be eligible for the state contest to be held in Raleigh on February 14.

This year the topic "Our Flag" was chosen as the subject for all speeches. Jesse Barnes of Chapel Hill will represent the local high school, competing against Raymond Andrews from the Carrboro high school and Samuel Lockhart of Hillsboro. There is a $50 prize and other awards for the winner of the state competition.

Originally sponsored among the schools of Wake county as a part of the Americanization program of the Raleigh post of the legion, the orators' contest was extended last year to include schools and colleges from over the entire state. The college contest is operated under the same regulations as the high school competition.

The Orange county contest is being sponsored by the Chapel Hill post of the American Legion, with Mr. Rankin, of the University extension division, as county chairman.

WOOFTER TO SPEAK AT SOPH Y CABINET MEETING MONDAY

T. J. Woofter, Jr., of the sociology department will speak to the sophomore Y cabinet Monday night on the subject of the St. Helena settlement of negroes, which is off the coast of South Carolina.

Mr. Woofter recently spent several months in studying conditions at St. Helena. The inhabitants of the island number more than five thousand negroes and less than fifty white persons. The culture of the group is quite similar to that of sixteenth century England.

The talk Monday night makes the second the sophomore cabinet has heard on this subject.

Carolina Playmakers Plan February Southern Tour

"The No 'Count Boy," "Job's Kinfolks" and "Magnolia's Man" To Be Presented.

BEGINS FEBRUARY 18

University Organization To Appear In Several Southern Cities In Annual Winter Trip; Same Schedule Of Plays As In Northern Tour Last Quarter.

The middle of next month the Carolina Playmakers will start on another of those tours which have made them known over a considerable part of the United States. This tour, the twenty-seventh, carries them through North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

The bill is composed of three one-act plays, the same three that were presented on the recent northern tour: "The No 'Count Boy," Paul Green's fantastic negro comedy; Loretto Bailey's mill tragedy, "Job's Kinfolks"; and Gertrude Coffin's comedy of the Carolina hills, "Magnolia's Man."

"The No 'Count Boy" was written some years ago, but was first presented by the Playmakers this fall. Of the author, one critic has said, "A poet in the widest sense of the word, a maker of beautiful books rather that a 'literary' man, Paul Green has already, at the age of thirty-four, laid rich gifts at our feet."

"Job's Kinfolks," both in its one-act form, and in the later three-act version, has received wide commendation. The New York Times characterized it as a piece "extraordinary both in the originality of the idea and the courage with which the idea is carried out. It has character, quality, poignancy, as well as rich homely, tar heel flavor."

Loretto Bailey, the author, takes the leading role in the production. Her portrayal of Kizzie, the old grandmother, has won for her much praise. Critics have stated that her ability as an actress, particularly in interpreting the part of an old woman, is "remarkable for one so young."

Of Gertrude Coffin's comedy "Magnolia's Man," the Boston Herald critic said, "It was evident from the outbursts of applause and laughter that enlivened the play that the audience was most thoroughly at home with Magnolia and her friends, and that these amusing persons on the stage, so vividly reminiscent of the Gay Nineties, went straight to their hearts."

The cast for these plays will be practically the same as that appearing on the northern tour. The itinerary includes Albemarle, N. C., Feb. 14; Spartanburg, S. C., Feb. 15; Greenville, S. C., Feb. 17; Atlanta, Feb. 18; Columbus, Ga., Feb. 19; Macon, Ga, Feb. 20; Augusta, Ga, Feb. 21; Wilmington, N. C., Feb. 24; and Greenville, N. C., Feb. 25.

Staff Meeting

The regular weekly meeting of the Daily Tar Heel staff will be held tonight at 7:00 o'clock in the office, basement of Alumni. Editor Glenn Holder and Managing Editor Will Yarborough have requested that new men interested in reportorial work report at this meeting, since five new reporters will be added to the staff.

Changes will be made in several beats and theatre passes awarded to members of the staff doing the best work during the past week.

VARSITY DEFEATS DEACONS, 49 - 18

Marpet And Dameron Feature Game At Raleigh; Tar Babies Lose, 24-34.

Showing their best form of the year, the Carolina Tar Heels swamped the Wake Forest Deacons in a rough game at the Raleigh City Auditorium last night by the score 49-18. In the preliminary game the Baby Deacons snapped the five game winning streak of the Tar Babies by defeating them in a listless contest, 34-24.

The varsity started things going early and were never headed. So rough was the game that four of the Deacons were put out on fouls. Dameron, with 11 points was high scorer for the evening, and was closely followed by Artie Marpet who garnered 10 markers.

The Tar Babies had great difficulty in holding on to the ball and in finding the basket, losing many scoring opportunities by fumbling the ball. For the Tar Babies, Joe Dunn was the most outstanding player, closely followed by Henry, Lineberger, and Hines. Barnes, with 13 points, and Captain Earp were the best players for the Deacons.

STUDENT DRIVES BURGLAR AWAY

Several robberies have been reported here during the last few days, the most recent occurring last night when a burglar entered a fraternity house and a room in which two boys were sleeping. He was going through the boys' clothes in a most systematic manner when one of the occupants of the room was awakened by the cold air coming through the door which the intruder had left open to insure his escape.

The boy saw a man kneeling by the side of his roommate's bed, and thinking it was that worthy individual in the midst of a nightmare, he let out a terrific yell in the hope of awakening him. As he did so, the marauder leapt out of the room and off the back porch in three jumps. The robber left behind him on the floor a pair of pants which he had been relieving of valuables when he was so rudely disturbed. He escaped with about 85 cents in change, but he would probably have added to that amount if he had not been detected. No arrests have been made yet, though there are several characters under suspicion.

Lost And Found

E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre, states that he has a number of books, caps, scarfs, gloves, and pens, found in the Carolina theatre, in his office. Those who have lost any of these articles are asked to come to Mr. Smith's office and identify the same.

Not Worth A Truck-Driver's Damn, Anyway

No more shall we inflict David Clark and the Southern Textile Bulletin upon Daily Tar Heel readers; we give our solemn promise. Already we have devoted far more space than they deserve, even in the Tar Heel, to Clark's insipid attacks upon certain University professors and to his puerile attempts to discredit labor's efforts for organization in the southern textile industry. But we were unable to resist taking advantage of an opportunity for one parting shot at Mr. Clark.

In reply to an recent editorial in the High Point Enterprise, which severely denounced his methods and attitudes, Clark declares that "Largely as a result of turmoil and continual strikes caused by the National Textile Workers, more than 200 textile mills containing 4,000,000 spindles have been dismantled in New England and another 5,000,000 spindles are now idle. . . . During the 30 years that the National Textile Workers have been active in New England, and particularly during the last 15 years, they have kept the New England Textile industry in turmoil. . . In 1921 there were 104,600 members of the National Textile Workers in New England, and now there are only 5,000."

These are Mr. Clark's stock figures; he uses them in practically every article he writes in which the labor problem is mentioned. The chief—and almost the only—argument that he advances against the National Textile Union, branch of the American Federation of Labor, and its attempts to organize southern mill workers is that "its activities are largely responsible for the deplorable condition of the New England textile industry." This one argument has been repeated again and again in the Bulletin.

But let us examine an editorial entitled "The New Year," appearing in the January 2 issue of the Bulletin. "The South," declared editor Clark, "must be made to realize that the prime cause of the failure of cotton manufacturing in New England was the continued use of old machinery." In earlier issues of the Bulletin still other causes were declared to be responsible for the crash of the New England textile industry, among them nepotism and other forms of bad management.

Perhaps it might be inferred that editor Clark is a man of rapidly changing opinions and vacillating mind. But we believe that he is more than that. He appears to possess a faculty of unscrupulously seizing upon all types of statistics, conditions or states of public opinion, distorting them to suit his own purposes and applying them to whatever argument he may wish to advance. Contradictions in his own statements seem to bother Mr. Clark not in the least.

Quite frequently the Bulletin states that the membership of the National Textile Workers in New England has shrunk from 104,600 workers in 1921 to 5,000 a few months ago. In reality the original membership of the N. T. U. in New England has been divided between the Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers Union and several other organizations so that there is no adequate basis for comparison of the present membership and that of 1921.

Well, that's that. We venture the prediction that the Southern Textile Bulletin and Mr. David Clark will discover of their own accord and in a brief time that they are getting nowhere rapidly in their attempts to prevent unionization of the workers in the southern textile industry, so what's the use? Even David Clark will be forced to admit eventually that collective bargaining and its prerequisite, the right of labor to organize, are basic and uncontradictable principles of our entire industrial, political and moral systems. But what intelligent person would give a truck-driver's damn for the utterances and opinions of "kept men" of the Dave Clark variety, anyway?

Chicago: America's Problem

Like jazz Chicago can be said to typify modern America. This great city, the second largest in the country and one of the largest in the world, offers an interesting commentary on this country because it is representative; one can look with pride at this metropolitan center as it seems the very spirit of America in its newness, its enterprise, its dominating materialism. Again, one can point with a finger of withering derision and scorn at Chicago for its wild reckless ness, its flagrant lawlessness, its municipal corruption, and its gang warfare which continues uninterrupted.

The University of Chicago stands as one of the foremost centers of education in the country, —yet the city schools are now operating only six months a year, and then the teachers are not receiving pay. This city pours money into the coffers of the nation's prosperity and is a treasure house of American industrial vigor and prosperous materialism, —yet, through a corrupted administration and municipal mismanagement, it stands pierced by the shaft of ridicule because of its present bankruptcy.

No doubt life for the average citizen in Chicago goes along very much like life for a resident of Charlotte, of Richmond, of Los Angeles; in short, like the existence of anyone in another location, placid, humdrum, domestic. He does not rub shoulders with the underworld, and consequently the gang warfare, the shooting, bombings, and robberies, affect him little. But there is the constant disgrace, the shame and humiliation of the black shadow of crime and graft and violence hanging over the city making it at once tragic and ridiculous.

Many suggestions for the cleaning out of the obnoxious forces which cause this situation have been offered. But apparently Chicago will have none of them. When the federal government suggests intervention the city, with an air of hollow false pride, rejects the offer, claiming it is capable of solving its own problems. But it continues to do nothing; the citizens make no move toward organization; they take no determined steps toward the banning of the lawless forces. Legitimate business continues to pay exorbitant and wholly noxious sums to racketeers. When occasionally some individual merchant courageously takes a stand against this situation and refuses to pay it ends in another gang escapade, another machine gun episode, —and, usually, in murder. The homicide record of this semi-barbaric community is lifted another notch, and crime and racketeering and general lawlessness continue to be a big business.

Until organization and union on the part of the average citizen, together with the forces of honest business, is affected, the situation will probably continue. The police seem impotent to stem the tide, either through inefficiency or corruption; the administration, in spite of the voice of the people which can, theoretically, be lifted in protest, continues its high handed squandering, —and the mass of the population, forces which could dominate and compel law and order, remain in their rut of apathy, trying to bury their heads in the sand of their own individual remoteness from the situation.

The C. P. L. A. Steps In

A Southern news bureau has just been opened in Atlanta by the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, the general purposes of which organization are to organize labor and to encourage class education. The news bureau will no doubt be a Southern headquarters for the Conference as well as a center for distributing items of interest about the organization to newspapers.

Now that the C. P. L. A. has established headquarters in the South it remains to be seen whether its plans make any headway. With members of the Brookwood Labor College in charge, it is certain that we may look forward to aggressiveness on their part. As for purposes we can see nothing in the way of terming them noble. We recognize that labor must be organized in order that workers may face employers on a more equal footing; we recognize that economic and social conditions of the working class, are deplorable, and that they must be remedied if relations between labor and capital are ever to approach satisfaction to both groups. And we also favor education of all groups of workers.

But in this organization, the C. P. L. A., however noble may be its motives, we can see nothing of great potentiality. The workers in the various Southern states, we daresay, will be hesitant in responding to attempts by outsiders to educate them. The Conference may be able to do effective work in organizing labor, providing it joins hands with the American Federation of Labor in the latter's intensive drive for Southern organization. Unless the C. P. L. A. does join the A. F. of L. we can see no reason to expect results from its activities in the Southern states.

An Open Letter To Grady Pritchard

My Dear Mr. Pritchard:

I have heard with much interest the recent move on the part of the athletic authorities —not that all the authorities are athletic, some of them having grown old and a bit rotund—but at any rate on the part of the authorities to educate the University athletes.

The idea, as I have heard it, is that the members of the various teams who were deficient in their work last quarter will be required to attend special classes at night in order to jack up said studies. You, Mr. Pritchard, are in charge of the efforts being made in this direction, and so will be interested in the views of a rank (never mind how rank, Mr. Pritchard) outsider.

Now, undoubtedly, the idea is basically unsound, because it has never been tried before. Who ever heard of the Romans or Greeks carrying books into the athletic arena? It just hasn't been done, and so we have no means of knowing whether or not it will work now. Besides, it is like taking a fish out of water. Your athletes are right at home on the diamond or the grid, but where are they among the pages of Benedetto Croce? Where are they? Mr. Archibald Henderson will be the first to tell you that without doubt they are among the pages of Croce—among, but not in, if you understand the rather foggy idea.

Don't you think, Mr. Pritchard, that forcing an athlete to study at stated hours is just a little deceiving? On your prep school excursions last year, did you tell the promising young athletes you interviewed that they would have to study? Is there anything in the contract (contract in the abstract, of course) which says that in addition to upholding the traditions of Carolina on the football field, athletes must also be ready to defend the doctrines of Plato, even while tackling a two-hundred pounder?

Williston in his famous treatise on Contracts states that extra services require extra compensation. I wish you would do something about this, Mr. Pritchard, and perhaps reward a good student athlete with a copy of a bound edition of the Buccaneer annotated with explanations of the jokes, in recognition of his services for the cause of study.

Think of the result that intellectual attainment is liable to have on the athlete's performance. Picture a halfback standing deep in the backfield, meditating on the sentimentality of Voltaire, let us say, while a long pass comes sailing towards him . . . or a shortstop with one hand in the air to spear a fly, the other holding a book of commentaries on "Flies as Represented in Izaak Walton." But no, Mr. Pritchard, the idea is too harrowing!

Mr. Pritchard, spare us the spectacle of a football team seriously hampered in its field running by dangling Phi Bete keys banging and bruising its knees. Save us the thought of bulging foreheads on which headgear will no longer fit. And above all, save us the athletes!

Most sincerely,

THE POINTER.

Readers' Opinions

"SEZ ME"

Editor Tar Heel:

In reply to Mr. Browning Roach's punk column "Says Us" in yesterday's Tar Heel, we suggest that this column be called

"SEZ ME"

SEZ ME

(By a Co-Ed)

We are glad Mr. Browning Roach likes panties, especially on blondes, brunettes, blacks and browns! He shows good taste for it's for the psychological affect that panties have upon the males that Co-eds wear them. This, you know, swells the gate receipts and us poor little girls have to cope with such contests as the Carolina-Va. games attendance records. Mr. Roach, we conceed to you that a co-ed is a co-ed, and a black horse is black —and isn't white! But black sheep grow in almost any good family and are called white, even as you and I.

Now for the little trunks given us by generous Mr. Paulsen. Aren't they cute? I think they should be adapted to street wear. We all know that they will swell the gate receipts enough to furnish the whole co-ed team with silk pajama "warm-ups" next season.

Yours for freedom of dress,
"A Co-ed".

BY FAITH!

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Faith's Defender in yesterday's issue of The Daily Tar Heel indulged in anfractuous invectives which quite surpass those which I am capable of tossing. The letter was entitled "Mr. Mebane and his Moronic Ilk." I thank the gentleman for refraining from making me a "moronic elk."

I will not deny the charges of being "moronic, insipid, ungentlemanly, uncultured, and unrefined." I will also confess that Faith's Defender has the advantage on me of having been in personal contact with co-ed students of the Universities of Georgia, Alabama, Illinois, and South Carolina, and the student bodies of Vassar, Smith, Hollins, Agnes Scott, Wesleyan, Bryn Mawr, Sophia Newcomb, and Sweet Briar. Perhaps this is an advantage of which I am not envious. And I also trust that I would "find myself sadly in the background in the selection of students for Vassar, Smith and Bryn Mawr!"

Faith has a valiant defender! (Probably just the type that Faith likes). I commend him and would like to suggest that before writing his next letter he consult Roget's Thesaurus in order to vary a bit his selection of adjectives.

In concluding, I would like to thank both Faith and her Defender for this opportunity of breaking into print.

Sincerely yours,
"The moronic, insipid, ungentlemanly, uncultured and unrefined Mr. Mebane."

IN CORROBORATION OF "SIMMONS vs. BAILEY"

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

With characteristic fervor and bombast my well-meaning friend, Mr. Fisher, has come to the rescue of Senator F. M. Simmons. In consideration of the fact that every man has a right to his own opinion he justifies Senator Simmons' stand in the recent presidential campaign. Without question the senior senator should be commended for having the pluck to stick by his own convictions in open opposition to the sentiments of his party, but that is aside from the issue as presented in my editorial entitled "Simmons vs. Bailey."

In this editorial the writer discussed the coming senatorial controversy from the standpoint of the attitude of the Democratic Party in North Carolina toward the two candidates, Simmons and Bailey. If Simmons was convinced that Hoover was better fitted for the presidency than Al Smith, then that venerable gentleman was personally justified in taking the stand which he did in the grim fiasco of 1928. The fact remains, however, that the "Old Line" Democrats of North Carolina will not tolerate this kind of thing. They look upon Simmons as a traitor to his party. This will without question be manifested when Simmons stands for re-election to the seat which he has held for thirty years. Assuming that Simmons was sincere in supporting Hoover, he was then conscientiously and

MATCH HELD IN TIN CAN

First Two Bouts Go To Virginians, But Carolinians Rally To Win All Remaining Bouts; Allen And Goodridge Show Impressive Form In Winning.

(By W. Y.)

Led by Archie Allen, captain of the 1930 boxing team, the Tar Heels scored an impressive 5-2 victory over V. P. I. in the first bouts held in the Tin Can by the 1930 Southern Conference ring champions. Allen, 145-pound title holder, showed great class in winning his bout from Mehaffey, game Gobbler ringman. Noah Goodridge, runner-up in the Conference bouts last winter, treated the fans who filled practically every seat in the Tin Can with a superb exhibition of what a good boxer does. He won with ease from Jones, clever Virginia mittman.

Despite the fact that both Captain Allen and John Warren had been confined to the Infirmary during the past week with colds both of these men showed class in winning their fight. Allen's opponent, Mehaffey, gave one of the finest exhibitions of sportsmanship in his fight with the Tar Heel captain ever seen in the Tin Can. Although clearly outclassed by the Carolina man, Mehaffey held out gamely and received a great ovation when he left the ring.

Goodridge, fast Carolina man, had little trouble disposing of Jones. Fighting a two-handed fight throughout he sliced and cut his man for a three-round decision. In the other bouts, Davis got a decision over West of V. P. I., Warren outpointed Moore, and Koenig, football star, easily defeated Chapman.

The summary:

115-pound class—Meadows (V. P. I.) got technical K. O. over Vaughn (C.)

125-pound class—Towler (V. P. I.) got decision over Clark (C.)

135-pound class—Goodridge (C.) got decision over Jones (V. P. I.)

145-pound class—Captain Allen (C.) got decision over Mehaffey (V. P. I.)

160-pound class—Davis (C.) got decision over West (V. P. I.)

175-pound class—Warren (C.) got decision over Moore (V. P. I.)

Heavyweight—Koenig (C.) got decision over Chapman (V. P. I.)

Two Carolina Track Stars Leave School

The track team has been dealt a severe blow by the failure of Clarence Phoenix and George Pierce to return to school this quarter. Both of these men were freshman track stars last year and were counted on to fill some of the gaps in the track team this year.

Phoenix was one of the most promising freshman milers in the state and was considered a sure bet for the four-mile relay team. He was on the freshman mile relay team which won first place in the Tech relays held in Atlanta last spring, and was also prominent in cross-country last quarter.

Pierce was a two-miler and was undefeated in any meets during his freshman year. He also did good work in cross-country this year.

FOOTBALL MEN TO GET PLENTY WORK

Coaches Will Give Gridmen Stiff Schedule For Coming Week; Teams To Be Selected.

With the second week of winter football coming up and the purpose not half accomplished, the coaching staff are entering into the second phase of their duty; that is, they will preside over a full scrimmage, the division of teams, and the round robin games.

The full scrimmage will take place on or about Wednesday. In this scrimmage, almost every man will get a chance to show his wares at some time or other during the course of the game. It will be a game of substitutions.

Following the full scrimmage, the division of teams will take place, or maybe they will be divided before. It has not been definitely decided as yet. It is believed, though, that the coaches have their men in mind but decline to make them known until they think the time is right. The division of teams has been looked forward to since the beginning of practice last Monday.

After the above formalities have been through with, the schedule of games will be released. The games will take place twice a week. One will be played on Wednesday and one on Saturday. They are expected to begin a week from Wednesday.

During the past week, it has rained so much that outside work has been hindered to a certain extent; but the time was utilized in lectures and preleminaries. These are expected to continue until the full scrimmage. The boys have been passing and kicking the ball around, but they have not had any of the real training that is expected to take place this week and the weeks to follow. Nevertheless, they have been working hard to put another team in Kenan stadium as was out there in October and November last year. Here's How!

Engineers To Hold Meeting Monday To Discuss Dance Plans

There will be a general meeting of all students in the school of engineering Monday morning during chapel period, in room 206 Phillips hall, for the purpose of considering plans for the engineers' dance which it has been customary for the engineers to give each spring. At this date definite action will be taken toward the determination of a suitable date and the making of arrangements for the dance.

In the past the dances have been sponsored by the student branches of the national organizations of electrical and civil engineers. This year the affair will be sponsored by these two organizations and the newly chartered student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

TRACK ASPIRANTS BEGIN TRAINING

Prospective Stars Work Daily Under Coach Cowper.

Candidates for the pole vault, high jump, broad jump, and hurdles are working out daily under the supervision of Coach Cowper, and are rapidly rounding into shape in each of these events.

Outstanding among the candidates for the varsity pole vault are Brodie Arnold, Wick Smith, Bill Dry, and Raymond Ruble. Arnold was a consistent point scorer in meets last year, and promises to do 12 feet this spring. Bill Dry is a reserve from last year's varsity, and is showing up consistently this year. Smith was a member of last year's freshman team. Ruble is out for the first time in this event and has shown improvement since practice began.

The men have been working for form rather than height but all have been clearing 11 feet consistently. Neiman, mainstay of last year's varsity in the pole vault and broad jump, and runner-up for high scoring honors in track will be out after the basketball season.

In the broad jump Theron Brown, Bullard, and Wick Smith are showing up best. Neiman, Case, and Weil will be out for this event later in the season.

Perry, Reid and Slusser for the varsity, and Stafford and Davis for the freshmen are showing up best in the hurdles. Perry is a letter man in the hurdles from last year. Reid was a consistent hurdler on last year's freshman team, and was high scorer for the freshmen. Slusser was a member of last year's freshman team, but this is his first attempt at hurdles here. Stafford, brother of Johnny Stafford, stellar hurdler of last year's varsity, and Davis both are showing unusually good form for this stage of the season.

George Bagby, letterman in the high jump from last year, appears to be the best of the candidates for this event so far. His best effort last year was in the Duke meet, where he cleared 5 feet 10 inches.

Conference Champions Will Appear Here Soon

According to information received here today, at least two world champions will compete in the first annual Southern Conference Indoor Games, to be held here Saturday, March 8.

They are Ed Hamm, of Georgia Tech, and Harry Flippin, of Virginia. Hamm holds the Olympic and world record for the broad-jump, and is a sprinter of note as well. Flippin is co-holder of the world's high hurdle mark.

Both Georgia Tech and Virginia track coaches have signified intention of sending delegations to the indoor games. Besides these World champions, the field promises to show the great majority of the Southern Conference track and field leaders of the day.

The meet will be the first indoor track meet staged by the Southern Conference and is attracting wide interest. There will be 12 events for varsity competition, four for freshmen, and seven for high and prep athletes. Varsity competition is limited to Conference institutions, but any schools may send freshman or scholastic teams.

LEAR ATTENDS ENGINEER MEET HELD IN RALEIGH

J. E. Lear, professor of electrical engineering, was in Raleigh Thursday and Friday, January 23 and 24, attending the meetings of the state board of examiners for engineers and land surveyors. During the sessions of the board examinations were given to several men, and of these six passed the required tests.

CHARLOTTE LEADS IN CAGE CONTEST

Queen City Cagers Head List With Five Wins; Durham Leads East.

A group of four wins for Charlotte high school during the past week has put the Queen City cagers far ahead in the class A high school basketball series in the west. Only two contests were run off in the eastern league.

On Friday night the Raleigh team showed remarkable power in defeating the Goldsboro quint 65 to 8, causing a bit of speculation upon their possibilities as eastern championship material. However, the Durham team has maintained its winning stride, and also won its game last Friday, defeating Fayetteville 38 to 8.

The results of these two games among the eastern teams did not at all effect the standings in this league which remain as follows:

Team	W.	L.	Pct.
Durham	3	0	1.000
Raleigh	2	0	1.000
Wilmington	1	0	1.000
Rocky Mount	1	1	.500
Goldsboro	0	2	.000
Fayetteville	0	2	.000
Wilson	0	2	.000

Every team in the western league saw action last week, with Charlotte's victories shaking up percentages somewhat. The games and results are as follows: Jan. 18, Charlotte 25, Asheville 16; Greensboro 19, Winston-Salem 14; Jan. 21, Winston-Salem 34, Salisbury 10; Charlotte 26, Gastonia 11; Jan. 23, Charlotte 38, Greensboro 13; Jan. 24, Asheville 30, High Point 13; Charlotte 49, Salisbury 14.

Team	W.	L.	Pct.
Charlotte	5	0	1.000
Greensboro	2	1	.666
Asheville	2	1	.666
High Point	2	2	.500
Winston-Salem	1	1	.500
Gastonia	0	3	.000
Salisbury	0	4	.000

LINKMEN TO GET MONOGRAMS FOR WORK IN FUTURE

Golfers Settle Down To Work With Decision Of Athletic Council To Give Letters For Work.

With the extra inducement of monograms, which are to be offered for the first time, the Carolina golf team, State champions last year, got down to hard work this week in preparation for a schedule that will pit them against the best college teams in the South and send them into both State and Southern tournaments.

Coach John Kenfield, who is starting practice indoors by using the new golf net in the Tin Can, thinks season prospects decidedly good, and is enthusiastic about the schedule, which is to be announced in full soon.

Charlie Chatham, of Elkin, a junior, will lead the golfers. The team will be able to draw also on Meade Willis, State champion, June Adams and Luther Stewart, from last year's title winners, and from a number of promising rookies.

Among these latter newcomers who give promise of coming through are Goodes, Crawford, Petty and Barclay.

A feature of the schedule will be the long Southern trip, following participation in the State tourney at Greensboro. The Tar Heels will meet successively Georgia Tech, Georgia, Conference champions last year, and Alabama, and will follow with participation in the Southern Conference tourney at Birmingham. Home and home meets are being arranged also with Duke, Davidson and N. C. State.

Leavitt Writes Of Interesting Phases Of Life In Old Spain

(By Clyde Deitz)

Some very interesting letters have been received by friends of Dr. S. E. Leavitt, professor in the Spanish department, who is at present in Spain on leave of absence. Writing from Madrid, Dr. Leavitt not only tells of some interesting customs of the country but also complains of some distressing difficulties.

First of all, he and Mrs. Leavitt, who accompanies him, are suffering from the cold. Houses in Spain are not kept nearly so warm as those in America, and travelers quite naturally endure no little discomfort. In one house, Dr. Leavitt writes, every one sat around a large table in the evening wearing overcoats and gloves. Over the table was spread a large cover, the wide edge of which was used to drape the legs, and underneath it there was a charcoal burner for warming the feet.

However strange the conclusion, Dr. Leavitt thinks the furnace of the National Library in Madrid must be attended by a Scotchman. On Sunday this attendant habitually cuts down the heat, and when it is cloudy he expects milder weather and likewise cuts down the heat.

Dr. Leavitt tells of a strange New Year's custom of the Spanish people. When the city hall clock begins to strike twelve on New Year's eve everybody commences the ceremony of eating twelve grapes. Those who finish all twelve grapes before the last stroke of the clock are destined to have good luck for the coming year.

So, on the past New Year's eve, Dr. Leavitt prepared himself with twelve grapes which he held in a paper bag. Unfortunately, however, in the hurried procedure at midnight he overlooked one of his grapes and failed to discover it before the clock had finished striking. Such oversights tradition attributes to business failures, failure to win lotteries, and other equally important matters.

Dr. Leavitt frequently spends his vacations or is absent on leave in Spain or South America. At present he has been away since last June. Dr. and Mrs. Leavitt will leave Spain late in February in order to arrive here in time for the beginning of the spring quarter.

Engineers Provide Lights for $2.48

tin wash basins for the transparent globes had been born.

No sooner said than done—a committee from the class made a hurried trip to the supply house, the previously mentioned dealer in "everything," and when they returned the new system was almost half installed. The globes were removed, and the pans were put in their places.

The system worked perfectly the only objection was that the bulbs were a bit small. Even this has now been overcome, for the building department has been persuaded to exchange the bulbs for ones 100 watts larger.

The class is absolutely satisfied; the system is perfect; the light is indirectly supplied, has no glare, and is evenly distributed. One more basin will fix everything.

Thus with the aid of the engineers ingenuity was the problem of a glaring light solved, and a set of four $15 fixtures devised for the sum total of only $2.48. This also explains the mystery of the hanging basins in Phillips hall and shows how engineering is really valuable, even if it is the subject of scorn of some of the campus "culturals."

STATE ENGINEERS MEET IN RALEIGH

The North Carolina Society of Engineers opened its mid-winter meeting Friday morning in Raleigh with an address by George F. Syme, president of the society. J. W. Bailey, candidate for the United States senate, spoke on the subject of the engineer in regard to public life at the afternoon session. The engineers heard various committee reports, chief among which was the report of the committee on code of practice.

In his presidential address, Mr. Syme recalled some of the things the society has successfully sponsored, mentioning the registration of engineers, the passage of a code of ethics and the establishment of a proper charge of fee system for professional services. He urged the appointment of a committee to study and report at the next convention the plight of the low-salaried engineer who is at the mercy of his employer insofar as advancement to adequate salary is concerned.

Mr. Syme called to the attention of the engineers "The pernicious practice of writing descriptions of property in deeds of conveyance by incompetent persons."

"Now that most of the surveys are made by registered surveyors or engineers, the public should be further protected by the passage of a law requiring the seal of a registered surveyor or engineer on every deed of conveyance which carries a description in metes and bounds of the property conveyed. The law should require that every such description give sufficient information to permit the platting of the parcel, and that the engineer or surveyor who affixes his seal to a description which cannot be plotted shall not only be fined but shall have his license revoked."

Pointing out that in recent years thousands of surveys have been made by power companies, railways, other industrial corporations, the State Highway Commission, and the individuals, and that this vast amount of work was not available for purposes other than the original, Mr. Syme urged the engineers to study the advisability of urging suitable legislation to have this information "correlated and accurately tied together into one composite map based upon a single system of true meridian coordinates with permanent stations at convenient intervals to which additional surveys could be tied."

He emphasized the value of such work to the State as a basis for all future surveys by the State Highway Commission, the State Department of Conservation and Development, the Department of Agriculture and other State agencies.

In this period of confusion in American life the hope of the nation and of the world lies in the mind of the engineer, in the application of the principles that rule that profession, law, order, discipline, and cooperation to human life, J. W. Bailey said. "What the world needs, is the introduction of engineering standards into the life of America and the nations which cover the earth. In this time of confusion, this thoughtful period in the nation's history, when we are passing into a new era, the great hope of America is the standard fixed by the engineering mind which will give to the country the indispensable order which the nation was ordained to maintain."

Miss Hughes' Recital

Miss Aline Hughes will give a song recital this (Friday) evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred McCall in Glandon Forest. Mrs. P. H. Winston will be her accompanist. Other performers will be Lillian Parker Wallace (piano), Bessie Ray MacMillan (violin), and Wesley Wallace (cello).

When she was a student here a few years ago Miss Hughes sang the parts of Yum-Yum in "The Mikado" and Josephine in "Pinafore" with the University Glee Club. In the course of a visit she made to Florida the celebrated actress and singer, Miss Marcia van Dresser, advised her to change her voice from lyric soprano to mezzo-soprano. She has spent the last three summers in London with Miss van Dresser and is soon to take more lessons from her.

In Palm Beach last winter Madame Louise Homer and John Charles Thomas heard her sing and encouraged her to continue her training. She gave a concert in West Palm Beach, and last summer, when in England, she appeared in a joint recital with Alexandra Carey in the Old Monastery at Rye, in Sussex. She joined Lady Maud Warrender and a few others in a program of English songs in the thatched-roofed barn at Ellen Terry's old home. She sang a trio with Lady Maud and Miss van Dresser.

The proceeds from this evening's entertainment will go to the Pi Beta Phi settlement school.

Readers' Opinion

personally justified in supporting him. But now we come to the heart of the issue. Was his stand in keeping with the stand of North Carolina Democrats? There can be but one answer to this question, and that has a decidedly negative implication. Simmons has a clear conscience (supposedly for the sake of argument), but that cannot re-elect him; he has made a few Republican friends, but the number is almost negligible when compared to the number of enemies which he has made among staunch Democrats. His Republican friends cannot restore him to his senatorial post. He is rated a traitor and a deserter by his party. Such is the situation with reference to the senior senator. For him the outlook is far from bright in this grand old state of ours.

My scribal adversary seems to consider the Simmons-Bailey controversy a matter of moral conviction. Probably the people of the state should have this viewpoint, but the fact is that they do not. "Simmons was not afraid to support a man whom he though would make the better president merely because he was of the opposite party." This quotation from Mr. Fisher's article is easily within the realm of fact, but popular sentiment in North Carolina at present is such as to make Simmons afraid that he will not be re-elected. This is the angle from which I attack the issue and which was utterly evaded by Mr. Fisher in his reply. To quote further, "Rather than condemning him, North Carolina should be proud of being represented by a true patriot like Senator Simmons." Regardless of the truth or falsity of this statement, the fact still remains that she is not proud of him. If North Carolina is proud of Simmons' stand in the recent presidential struggle, why is it that Simmons and his supporters are afraid that he will not be re-elected and why is it that Bailey is virtually assured of election, not only on a basis of his qualifications for the office, but because of the fact that "Old Line" Democrats have voiced their willingness to try anybody in preference to the treacherous Simmons? This is another pertinent point which Mr. Fisher very thoughtlessly overlooked. Coming from the state of Pennsylvania, Mr. Fisher's opinion regarding North Carolina politics carries very little weight (in my personal case).

"Personally, I know nothing whatever about Mr. Bailey; I have read about Senator Simmons and know quite a bit (by virtue of reading, mind you) about his long and very honorable career in the senate." Taking the very qualifications which Mr. Fisher listed in his attempt to set himself up as an authority on the coming senatorial struggle in North Carolina, the present writer cannot attach much credit to them.

Is Simmons capable of continuing to fill his senatorial office? The answer is NO. He has been one of the strongest members of the senate for a number of years, but he is no longer capable of repeating his feats of former years. The senior senator is seventy-six years of age at present. "Those that look out of the windows are darkened; the grinders are few; the strong men have bowed themselves; all the daughters of music are brought low; and the silver cord will soon be loosed." Although Solomon did not have Simmons in mind when he wrote the above passage, it applies to him very effectively. Perhaps, a personal experience of the writer's will afford a little first-hand information on the subject. While in Washington last April, representing the University in the Carolina-Virginia Radio Debate, I was admitted to Simmons' office after encountering several preliminary difficulties in securing permission to see the senator. Upon entering the office I noticed that the senator was reading by means of a large magnifying glass to which was attached a long handle. That "Those which look out of the windows are darkened" is unquestionably true. Old age defies the efforts of any man. The gallant old warhorse must give way to a younger man.

Again I say that Josiah William Bailey looms up as the most logical successor to the aged senior senator from North Carolina.

Following his short visit in Burlington, Dr. Wise will drive on to Chapel Hill with Dr. Opie for his first address.

The next morning he will appear before an audience composed mainly of students for a second speech. Following the address he will return to Greensboro in time to take a train for Culver, Ind., where he is scheduled to speak.

WOOFTER TELLS CABINETS OF ST. HELENA ISLAND

Life Among Negro Colonists There Is Subject Of Sociology Professor's Talk To Y. M. C. A. Groups Last Night.

(By Charles Rose)

T. J. Woofter, Jr., of the sociology department spoke last night to a joint meeting of the sophomore and junior-senior cabinets. His talk was based on a study that he had made on the conditions of a negro colony of St. Helena Island, a small island just off the coast of South Carolina.

Mr. Woofter, after being introduced by J. E. Dungan, president of the sophomore Y cabinet, began by saying that this study helps to show what the negro is capable of doing when left to himself. Giving a short history of the island, he told how it had been inhabited by large plantation owners who were driven away by the northern army at the opening of the Civil War, how the slaves of these owners had been left to till the soil, and how the north had taken them over and had put supervisors over them. "Today," continued the speaker, "this island is inhabited by some 5000 negroes and about 50 white people. All of this number are land owners and make their living from the soil."

He went on to say that there are a few old African traits still evident among these people. "Their dialect, however," said Mr. Woofter, "is nearly all English in origin, while their spirituals seem to be left over from a revival wave that swept over the country some time ago."

The speaker stated further that there is no crime on the island to amount to anything, and what little there is is taken care of by a magistrate. This magistrate is helped by a governing body known as the Praise House. This Praise House is a group that meets twice a week and usually disposes of disorders, if any such exist.

The program for the freshman cabinet was taken up with a discussion of the plans for having better programs; many suggestions were made. President Kerfees announced a few of the committees that had been appointed. After a short discussion, the program was brought to a close by sentence prayers.

ENGINEER DANCE WILL BE STAGED ON FEBRUARY 28

Committee Selected To Give Winter Dance; To Be Sponsored By Local Societies.

A committee composed of three members from each of the engineering societies will make further arrangements for the dance and report its progress at a similar meeting to be held at a later date.

The committee consists of C. H. West, J. P. Scurlock and "Chuck" Erickson, representing the William Cain Society; E. R. Davis, D. A. Nims and W. B. White from the A. I. E. E. and J. B. Pittana of the mechanical engineering society.

This will be the fourth of the annual dances to be given by the members of the school of engineering. As in the past, this dance will be sponsored by the local student branches of the national engineering societies.

At this meeting it was also decided that no action would be taken until the spring quarter on the question of holding an open house in the school of engineering. Two years ago the engineers held open house, throwing open to the observation of the public all the apparatus in the engineering school.

Check Committee Reports Decrease In Bad Checks

In a recent report to the dean of students, the student council check committee stated that a total of 637 student checks had been returned to Chapel Hill merchants and business people since the opening of school in September. This number of checks represented an amount of $4,276.07. The number of individuals involved was 292, or approximately 11.26 per cent of the student body. This is compared with the same length of time during the term 1927-28, which showed 773 checks amounting to $6,211.11, and which comprised from 10 to 15 per cent of the student body. The statistics for the term 1928-29 are not available for comparison.

The check committee has been attempting to cooperate with the merchants of Chapel Hill in eliminating the commercial nuisance this year. In a letter of inquiry sent out to 50 business men this fall, it was found that 31 reported no losses, 11 reported losses ranging from three of four hundred dollars, and 8 failed to respond. The total accumulated loss reported from these eleven businesses was $622.18. There is some possibility of clearing up part of this present reported loss, it is said.

In addition to the above, the committee has recommended the use of a blank counter check which should be usable in this locality. This check carries blanks for the names of the towns, the drawee banks, date drawn, registration number, and local address of the student. Fully 75 per cent of the checks returned this year have been so on account of mechanical errors on the part of the drawers in changing the name of banks.

The advantage of the present system of handling the returned checks is that it is not harsh on first offenders, but grows more stringent with the number of checks returned and the more evident carelessness of the offender. If a check is returned for reasons within the control of the student, he is placed on probation, with notice that a second offense will suspend him from school, with right of appeal to the student council. If the check is returned for other reasons than the student's fault, he is exonerated, and no blemish is placed against his record, as a purely mechanical system would impose. Under the system this year, when an appeal is taken to the student council, it is to the entire council in regular session, rather than to one member of the council, as was done last year.

All students who have checks returned must report to the check committee after they have paid the checks. Failure to report causes automatic probation and possible suspension. The names of the students whose checks are returned are placed on the check list of the committee and are removed only upon the production of the returned check.

UNIVERSITY GLEE CLUB DRAWS FIRST AND LAST PLACES

Local Musical Contingent Draws Favorable Positions For Southern Meet.

The drawing for places, to ascertain the order in which various glee clubs are to appear in the southern intercollegiate glee club contest, was held here Sunday afternoon at the Carolina Inn.

Those participating in the drawing were Max Noah, president of the glee club association; J. Foster Barnes, secretary, and H. S. Dyer, serving as president of the executive committee. Troxell Reynolds, president of the local glee club, and Gilles Brown, were present, representing the Carolina group.

The double number-name system of drawing, used officially throughout the country, was employed.

Three separate drawings were held, one for each part of the contest. In the drawing for the choice song group, in which each club sings a selection of its own choice, the order came out as follows: University of North Carolina, Erskine College, Wofford College, Furman University and Guilford College. The order of the second group, in which each club sings the same "prize" song, is: Woffard College, Furman University, Guilford College, University of North Carolina and Erskine University. The final drawing, for the group in which each club sings its school alma mater, resulted in the order: Guilford College, Woffard College, Furman University, Erskine and University of North Carolina.

Thus, the Carolina glee club by chance has been chosen to appear first as well as last on the contest program. It was the general feeling among directors, however, that the drawing will mean very little to the participants, having been a mere formality made necessary by the contest ruling.

The contest will be held in Greenville February 7.

Dorm Stores To Be Aired In Di Senate

Opportunity will be presented for the introduction of further new bills.

In addition several matters of importance will be discussed. Cards are being mailed to all members of the society, and officials hope for a large attendance.

The meeting was opened by Ray Farris, president of the student body, who introduced President Chase. Dr. Chase's subject was "The Class Unit and the Class Spirit." He voiced the hope that the class of '33 would go through the four years of college with a spirit of unity and cooperation.

Doomsday For Memorial Hall

An undercurrent of doubt and anxiety was evident on the campus yesterday in discussions of the Memorial hall problem. Until a few days ago it had been generally conceded that the trustees woulld vote to demolish the tottering architectural grotesquerie and replace it with a more or less commodious auditorium. But on the eve of the meeting of the building committee of the board of trustees, which will be held today in Raleigh, ominous reports were current that a considerable sentiment for remodeling the structure had developed among the trustees.

It must be admitted that the memories attached to Memorial hall by some of the alumni, the mellowed and affectionate regard they have developed for the monstrous structure through the softening influence of the years which have slipped away since they sat upon its hard wooden benches, should receive consideration by the trustees before the doom of the ancient auditorium is sealed. But a more careful ransacking of the files of memory by these same alumni will recall the utter unsuitability of the building for lectures, chapel exercises, entertainments, public function of all sorts; its gloomy interior and hideous exterior, the extreme discomfort of the seating facilities. Even within the undergraduate experience of a considerable portion of the alumni, Memorial hall could not accomodate mass meetings of the student body, and the number of students has increased enormously of late years.

It was the folly of a legislature whose members have long since been dead that was responsible for the construction of Memorial hall. The huge, misshapen structure has been for scores of years an ugly deformity upon the face of an otherwise beautiful campus. Rearing its monstrous bulk in the center of the campus, woefully out of harmony with the architectural grace of the other buildings, it appears even more gloomy and hideous by contrast with the comely outlines of the new structures to the south. Even the ebullient spirits of the average undergraduate are depressed after a few minutes spent in its cavernous interior. Sprawling like an illformed and grotesquely decorated beast within the shadows of the severe and stately South building and the graceful Phillips hall, Memorial hall is a sullen stain upon a bright and cheerful campus.

The most precious relics of the past connected with the auditorium are the tablets which adorn its walls in commemoration of the deeds of the University's distingushed sons. They could be removed easily and placed in a larger, more comfortable and cheery auditorium. In all probability the expense of remodeling Memorial hall would amount to a major portion of the cost of a handsome auditorium capable of seating 3,000 or more. If the present crumbling structure is remodeled, it necessarily would be abandoned as a place of University assemblage within a few years in favor of a larger auditorium.

Surely the apprehensions expressed lest the trustees vote to rebuild Memorial hall must be unfounded. The University fathers are far too wise, too level headed and sane-minded to do other than recommend that the destruction of the mouldering structure be completed and that a new and handsome auditorium, worthy to take its place as the focal point of a beautiful campus, rise from its ruins. We unhesitatingly predict that the doom of Memorial hall will be solved today.

Americo-European Education

Education in Europe is deeply embedded in the status quo maintenance. Workers are educated to be workers, the sons of workers become workers, and the daughters of workmen marry workmen. It is different, however, with the upper social stratum. The upper class, the class of wealth and leisure, can rise no higher; consequently, it is educated to be appreciative rather than active. European culture consists, then, not in social advancement for all classes but in the study of human conduct by the elite, for which class the highest type of education, of course, exists.

American culture, on the other hand, takes little account of the joy of knowledge of human nature and conduct. Perhaps America is too busy putting into practice the ideas of Europe. (It seems that Europe is the thinker and America the executor.) The American educational ideal is the social advancement of all classes, and its machinery is a system in which, theoretically at least, the individual is afforded opportunities to rise, by his ability and character, to the place in society which he desires to hold. We, like Europe, have a class of leisure and wealth, but we see this class of Americans recognizing a moral responsibility to society as a whole. Unlike cultured Europeans, Americans of the upper class are not educated to enjoy plays of mind and to gain an insight into human nature. Americans are educated to act.

John Erskine, in the current issue of the World's Work sees Europe lacking in the virtues of America's educational system of social advancement for all classes. He likewise sees American education's need of a more profound study of human conduct and of "plays of mind," to use his expression. In other words America, to reach a more perfect state of culture, should learn to think, to take a keener delight in ideas, and Europe should recognize the value of actions and of affording opportunities to members of all classes.

Certainly an educational system which is one-sided is not the perfect one. Our system, while it embraces the idea of fitting a man for a job, does not train a man sufficiently to enjoy art and that which is contained in books. It does not train him to seek pleasure in philosophy, logic, and esthetic moods; nor does it teach him to study human nature, a study which after reading Erskine's article we must term worthwhile. Here, then, is a problem for American education. Its solution lies not only in America's, recognizing the virtues of European culture, but in America's putting the idea that a man should be educated to rise—if to rise means to acquire and to possess wealth—in its proper sphere.

Modern Science Vs. Theistic Faith

The proposition that modern science tends to destroy theistic faith has been chosen for the topic of the annual Carolina-Emory debate. Although the battle between science and religion is an old one, the recent tendency on the part of educated church leaders to advance the argument that science and religion go hand in hand makes the proposition an interesting one at the present time.

The fact that Emory's church school, suggested the query warrants the assumption that the Emory debaters will adhere to this interpretation of the issue. The Carolina debaters, having the affirmative side of the controversy, will have an excellent opportunity to lay bare the whole science-religion dispute. The degree to which the Emory debaters refute the argument that science and religion are antagonistic and irreconcilable should be a fair indication of the validity of the new-fangled belief that science and religion go hand in hand, that they are complementary, and that one is the fulfilment of the other.

The war between science and religion is approximately as old as human civilization. Doubtless the theocratic Egyptians suppressed enterprising scientists of the day who would ascribe to the realm of nature phenomena which the priests declared to be the result of divine intervention. The bloodiest wars of history are those which have resulted from religious differences.

Although modern science and theistic faith are essentially different, there is really no conflict between the two realms of truth. Of course, there is a technical argument which would disagree on this point. With all due respect for religious censors, we are bound to conclude that they often censor, without any thought, opinions of scientists that have been reached after a lifetime of painstaking investigation.

There can be no reasonable doubt that the Bible is the greatest revelation of spiritual truth and principle that has yet come to the world. The great religious principles exemplified therein are not out of date, even though the scientific knowledge of the Biblical writers has been superseded.

The apparent conflict between science and theistic faith is due to the fact that they operate in different realms. These realms are, however, complementary rather than contridictory.

Readers' Opinions

THAT "SIMMONS vs. BAILEY" AFFAIR

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Well, I have evidently started something, since my article has succeeded in making Mr. Williams pause a little in his mad whirl of word-slinging about every conceivable subject, in order to answer it. However, as I believe my case to be just, I shall stay with it, for I still believe that every man has a right to his own opinion, even though he does come from Pennsylvania. And take notice, O Readers, Mr. Williams very kindly calls me Bombastic. What a joke! Especially considering its source. I can distinctly remember that Mr. Williams has been called down more than once for the same error (although I deny that I was guilty of It), and who can fail to remember those delightful words, 'Scrutinizing the underpinings of the daughters of Eve" which were written by our same Mr. Williams. Please remember that old proverb hereafter, Mr. Williams, "Those who live in glass-houses, should not attempt to throw stones."

Mr. Williams attacks my article because I confess that much of my knowledge comes from reading. Well where does Mr. Williams get his? I honestly consider that articles in reputable magazines written by men who know what they are talking about to be of more value than the sentiments contained in violent speeches uttered by partial party men, which are very evidently the sources of Mr. Williams' knowledge.

Now let us see what Mr. Williams himself calls the very heart of the issue. "Was his (Sen. Simmons') stand in keeping with the stand of North Carolina Democrats?" Well, Mr. Williams, although you very emphatically say no, evidently it was as you know as well as I know that the Republicans were not of themselves numerous enough to carry this state for Hoover in the glorious victory of November 1928. And yet this state did go for Hoover, if I am not greatly mistaken. Then again Mr. Williams attacks my knowledge of the whole affair, because I am not a native North Carolinian. Well, Mr. Williams, I was in this state during the election period and was able to observe as well as you did Senator Simmons' actions during it.

He also says that since I come from Pennsylvania, my opinions regarding North Carolina politics carry very little weight. Well, I am sure that I thank Mr. Williams for his fine opinion of me, but nevertheless, I still believe that every man has the right to his own opinion, which I believe I said somewhere before! And I would rather by far stick to my opinion of the North Carolinian voters than to Mr. Williams' opinion of them. I believe them, on the whole, to be accentuated by a true spirit of democracy, a fact that they demontsrated in the last election by voting for a man not of their political faith. I believe that they will be able to see Senator Simmons' side in the question and not to judge him too harshly for it. Mr. Williams on the other hand sees them as narrow-minded revengeful bigots, and actually seems to glory in it. He says they (the Old Line Democrats) are going to "get" Senator Simmons for his "treachery," and are willing to try anybody in in preference to Senator Simmons. Well, if that isn't stupid bigotry, I never heard of any. However, I do not believe such a charge against the voters of this

Bridge And Dancing Feature U. D. C. Party

The U. D. C. Benefit, given last Saturday at the Carolina Inn, was declared by Mrs. John Anderson of the arrangements committee to be the most successful community affair of recent months. The ballroom of the Inn, given for the occasion by the manager, Mrs. Martin, and the adjoining lounges were used for the performances.

Billy Arthur, midget University student, known in entertainment circles as "one yard of fun," was the headliner of the afternoon show at the benefit. He spoke from the stage in the ballroom which was bedecked with Confederate flags.

Following a series of bridge games in the evening, attended by a large group of faculty and townspeople, the Playmakers entertained with a skit, "The Playmakers on the Air," which in turn was followed by a showing of winter and spring models by the Residence Shop. For the dance that followed the style show the services of Stringfellow's orchestra were given. A large group of students came in later for the dancing, during which punch and sandwiches were served.

Tar Heel-Pack Cage Tilt In Raleigh Tonight May Hold Key To State Race

Carolina And State Both Have Same Standing In Big Five Chase.

DUKE AND DAVIDSON LEAD

Ashmore Expected To Send Same Line-up Against 1929 Champions Used Against Deacons Saturday; Neiman Likely To Start In Place Of Cleland.

Carolina's meeting with the N. C. State cagers in Raleigh tonight will be watched with keen interest by sports observers in the state and in the Southern Conference, because of the bearing its outcome will have on the state title race and its test of the strength of both teams. In the state race Carolina and State are tied for third place, with Duke and Davidson holding the first two positions, while both the Tar Heels and the State cagers are looked forward to as strong contenders for the conference title, which the Wolfpack won last year.

While Carolina was trouncing the Deacon quintet last Saturday night, the Duke Blue Devils defeated the State cagers 35-31. In games with Washington and Lee both quints lost by approximately the same margin. On the basis of early season records both teams will enter the fray tonight evenly matched. The game should also throw some light on Carolina's chances for victory in the Duke game next Saturday night.

Lack of veterans is the reason for the poor showing made by both Carolina and State thus far this season. The Wolfpack has only Larry Hear, stellar forward, and Maurice Johnson from last year's team, while the Tar Heels have only Harper, Marpet and Brown. The Wolfpack is without the services of Frank Goodwin, brilliant center, who led them to a Southern Conference title last year, while the Tar Heels lack even one veteran forward.

Coach Ashmore has announced that he will probably start the same team that hit such a fast stride against Wake Forest last Saturday night, except Dave Neiman, substitute forward who showed up so well against the Deacons, may replace Cleland at forward. That team showed Dameron and Cleland, forwards; Harper, center, and Brown and Marpet, guards.

Duke Leads Big Five

Duke University's Blue Devils are leading in the race for Big Five honors with two victories as a result of their squeeze-out, 35-31 victory over State Saturday night. The Davidson Wildcats, with a win at the expense of Carolina in their only game in the loop, are holding the runner-up position.

Carolina and State, each with one loss, are tied for third, and Wake Forest brings up the read with three defeats and no win.

Although the Demon Deacons showed a good deal of improvement in their game, the Tar Heels had little difficulty in annexing a 49-19 victory in Raleigh. The play of Marpet and Dameron was largely responsible for the one-sided victory.

Going into the game as favorites, Duke found the going tough against State's Terrors and needed all their resources to keep in front. The game was hard fought and close from start to finish. State's inability to make free shots handicapped them.

RELAY TEAM IS GETTING SHAPE

Four Fast Veterans And Three Sophs Vie For Places On Milrose Relay Group.

With three weeks of hard work concluded, four lettermen and four sophomore speedsters are running a neck and neck race for the honor of carrying Carolina colors in the select mile relay of the Milrose Games at Madison Squar Garden, February 8.

Whether age and experience will win out, or whether youth and ambition will triumph, remains to be seen. Official tryouts, to be held the last of the week, will tell the tale and end the long grind of conditioning, dash work inside the Tin Can, and quarter-mile trials around the big cinder track.

The veterans who are making the strongest bids for team places are Captain Dave Nims and Dick Garrett, letter quarter-milers; Minor Barkley, letter miler, and Ken Gay, letter sprinter.

Garrett, Nims and Barkley held down three of four posts on the Tar Heel team that won the mile relay at the state championship track meet in Greensboro last spring. Nims does the quarter in 51 flat. Garrett is his closest rival in the Tar Heel camp. Barkley is a regular miler, good on the quarter-mile also. Gay, star in the 100 and 220, led all Tar Heel track scorers last spring.

There are likewise three members from last year's championship freshman half-mile relay team, which came in first in the select Georgia Tech relays.

These boys—Charlie Farmer, Lionel Weil and Wallace Case—give promise of pushing the veterans hard. Farmer especially is a great prospect. The Wilmington greyhound did 10 seconds on the 100, 21.4 on the 220, and 51.2 on the 440 as a freshman, to give himself a rating as one of the greatest sprint prospects seen in the south.

Dale Ranson, who is coaching the relay candidates, said today that five men would probably make the trip, and that there was a possibility that some of the men would be entered in individual events at the Milrose games.

Sigma Nus Score 58

Yesterday the Sigma Nu basketball team literally walked away from the Chi Psi team 58-15 in a game at the Tin Can. Johnson tallied 32 points for Sigma Nu. Campbell, Chi Psi, played well, scoring all of the losers' points. Allen also played a good game for Sigma Nu as did Griffith.

The lineup:

Chi Psi (15)		Sigma Nu (58)
Avery	R. F.	Allen (15)
Mitcham	L. F.	Johnson (32)
Glascock	C.	Griffith (8)
Hovis	R. G.	Wright (3)
Campbell (15)	L. G.	Skinner (2)

Substitutions: for Chi Psi—Barwick; for Sigma Nu—Bennett.

BOXERS TO HAVE 3 TOUGH MATCHES IN 8-DAY PERIOD

Meet V. M. I., Duke And Virginia In Rapid Succession; Get Back To Work Today.

The University boxing team, holders of the Southern Conference title, today get down to hard work in preparation for three engagements that the Tar Heels are to hold with Conference opponents in the brief spell of eight days.

V. M. I. will be met at Lexington Saturday night. Duke will be taken on here February 4 in one of the classic events of next week's North Carolina sport schedule. Virginia will be met at Charlottesville February 8.

To date the team has won from Washington and Lee and V. P. I., both by the count of 5 - 2.

Coach Creyton Rowe has the men in good shape to begin the week's work for V. M. I., except for the scrappy little 125-pounder, Harry Sheffield, who was kept out of the V. P. I. meet due to a bad arm. Sheffield's substitute fought gamely but couldn't quite match V. P. I.'s Towler, and the Tar Heels dropped one of two matches here.

Sheffield's arm showed improvement over the weekend, and it is hoped to have the little "blonde blizzard" back in shape for the Cadets.

Evan Vaughn, the 115-pounder, with the dynamite punch, the only other loser to V. P. I. was recovering from the bumped head that rendered it impossible for him to continue his scrap with V. P. I.'s clever little bantum. He should be in good shape for the Cadet's 115-pounder.

Captain Allen, Noah Goodridge, Obie Davis, John Warren, Bill Koenig, all of whom won their fights, are in good shape. Allen and Goodridge looked at the top of their careers against V. P. I. Davis, who missed early practice, is fast rounding into shape. Koenig, the football fighter, is gaining a ring confidence, that with his fine form and size and speed, may make him a great heavy.

Frosh Will Meet Tough Opponents During This Week

With their five-game winning streak stopped abruptly by the Wake Forest Baby Deacons in a game played last Saturday night in the Raleigh city auditorium, the Tar Babies began practice in an effort to start all over again.

Saturday the freshman were unable to hold the ball. This may have been caused by the very poor lighting system in the city auditorium, but the fact remains that the Tar Babies lost many golden opportunities to score. Coach Rex Enright will drill the boys in holding on to the ball and perfecting their formations. In all probability there will be a light practice game at the Tin Can.

This week the freshmen will tackle the hardest part of their schedule. There are no less than three games carded for this week. Tonight the Tar Babies will travel to Raleigh to take on the Wolflets on the State floor. The Wolflets are said to have a fine quintet, having defeated the Baby Deacons 19-21. Coach Enright will take about 20 men on this trip. Thursday the frosh travel to Durham to take on the Durham Bull Dogs in a return contest. Recently the Tar Babies administered a sound defeat to the Durham quint, but the Bull Dogs are traveling at a fast rate, and a good contest should follow. Saturday will be the big night.

AYCOCK LEADS IN DORMITORY PLAY

Twelve Teams Still Undefeated In Intramural Basketball Court Play.

The close of the second week of the intramural association finds an even dozen teams in the undefeated class. Aycock, with four victories and no defeats, is leading the race in the dormitory league. Steele, Law No. 1, and Mangum are in the runner-up positions, with 3, 2 and 1 victories, respectively. In the fraternity league, Kappa Alpha, Zeta Psi, Phi Gam, Deke, Sigma Nu, and Theta Kappa Nu are joint holders of a six-cornered deadlock on the top rung. Sigma Zeta and S. A. E., each with one victory and no defeats, are in second place. S. P. E., leading at the beginning of the week with three wins, suffered badly at the hands of the Dekes and the A. T. O.'s and dropped to tenth place.

At the time of going to press last night the Tar Heel was unable to ascertain the lineup for either team, but it is probable that the lineup will be the same as in last Friday's game. Kitty Wells, guard, may be back in uniform for tonight's game. The admission is the usual 25 cents.

S. I. C. Sports

(By Browning Roach)

The Wildcats of Kentucky proved themselves a dangerous foe last week by trimming the Mississippi Aggies twice in succsion and bringing their total up to four games won and none lost. This gives them a tie with Washington and Lee for conference leadership. The Genarals retained their prestige by a second victory over the Virginia Cavaliers. The three other undefeated squads, Georgia, Alabama and Sewanee, held a firm grip on their positions, and the general standings of the teams remained practically unchanged.

Alabama, after being idle in conference play since the two early season victories, reopened her attack with a win over Vandy Thursday. Georgia again eked out a last minute victory over the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets when Captain Henry Palmer sank the deciding shot just before the final whistle.

N. C. State, 1929 champs, succeeded in putting V. M. I. down Monday in the first game for the Cadets, but lacked the punch necessary to whip Duke Thursday and the 1929 runners-up won 35-31.

Tennessee returned to prominence with victories over Georgia Tech and Auburn. Maryland, fresh from a victory over Navy, continued her stride and walloped V. P. I. Saturday 44 to 27. The Tech outfit lost to Virginia 28 to 21 earlier in the week. Mississippi, Tulane and Florida took a rest from intercollegiate activity and merely engaged in a few practice games to keep in shape.

Results for non-conference games engaged in last week are: South Carolina 29, Woffard 23; South Carolina 20, Furman 39; North Carolina 44, Wake Forest 18; Virginia 36, Richmond 35; Clemson 51, Woffard 21; V. P. I. 35, Emory and Henry 29; L. S. U. 37-42, Louisiana Poly 31-27.

Manly won a decisive victory over Best House yesterday. The game began slowly but the players woke up in the second quarter and showed some fine playing. The game ended with the score standing 44-16 in favor of Manly.

TAR HEEL TEAMS FACE HARD WEEK FROM ALL POINTS

Basketball Team Will Engage In Two Conflicts With State And Duke.

University of North Carolina athletic teams face a stiff round of nine tests, eight of which are with southern conference foes, during the coming week.

Three varsity teams will see action four times, while a like number of freshman teams face five contests.

The basketball team plays N. C. State in Raleigh Tuesday night and Duke here Saturday night.

The freshmen play the Wolfcubs and Blue Imps preceding the varsity games, and will probably have a return game with Durham high in Durham Thursday night.

The boxing and wrestling teams will both journey into Virginia for Saturday night contests, the wrestlers with V.P.I. at Blacksburg and the boxers with V. M. I. at Lexington.

The Tar Baby boxers and wrestlers will meet the freshman teams of both institutions the same nights.

The basketball team promises to hold the center of the spotlight of interest.

The Tar Heels have already met Davidson and Wake Forest. These first meetings with State and Duke, besides counting in southern conference standings, will tell whether the Tar Heels, with their rookie forwards, can be counted strong Big Five contenders. They will also give a good line on the relative strength of the Wolfpack and Blue Devil quints.

The boxing and wrestling meets will pit the Tar Heels against two of their strongest opponents for southern honors, which the Tar Heel boxers have held two years running and to which the Tar Heel wrestlers are now aspiring.

The freshman basketeers will be striving to keep clean an undefeated record. The Tar Baby grapplers will be making their season debut. The freshman boxers will be striving in their second meet to erase a 5-2 loss to the Washington and Lee freshmen.

Esperanto Club To Meet Again Today

The regular weekly meeting of the Esperanto Club, under the direction of Dr. E. C. Metzenthin, will take place today in Room 109, Saunders hall, at 5 p. m.

Dr. Metzenthin has announced that several grammars which have already been paid for are unclaimed and still in his possession. These will be delivered as soon as they are called for.

There will be a short review of the essentials of the grammar of the language, and reading will be begun of Esperanto sentences. Students who have attended the classes and meetings for a short period are now far enough advanced to understand simple phrases, and others who wish to join now will experience no difficulty in keeping up with the class. The entire grammar can be learned in an hour or so, according to Dr. Metzenthin.

An Esperanto magazine has been subscribed to, and will be placed in the library. In a very short time the class will be ready to begin discussions in Esperanto, and correspond with Esperantists throughout the world.

At The Carolina

When Roman Novarro sings a number of ballads in "Devil-May-Care," his first all-talking production, which will be shown at the Carolina theatre today, it will be by no means his debut as a vocal artist.

For years the young Mexican star has been just as greatly interested in the development of his voice as in the starring roles given him at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. He is one of the few players who, with the coming of sound films, find themselves in the possession of real singing voices.

Novarro, who hopes that sound films will permit famous operas to be brought to the screen effectively has given song recitals for years in Hollywood. But these concerts are not public affairs; they are staged in the star's "Teatro Intime," or little playhouse, built as an adjunct to his beautiful home in Beverly Hills.

The songs in "Devil-May-Care" were written chiefly by Herbert Stothart, composer of the hits of "Rose Marie." Rupert Brook, New York stage expert, assisted in the phonetic details.

The picture, which is a story of Napoleonic intrigue and adventure, was directed by Sidney Franklin, and contains a beautiful scene done in technicolor.

Recorder's Court Has Full Docket Monday

"Mistaken automobile identity" was the sum total of the defense offered by Ray Perry, 25, colored, who was charged with the theft of an automobile. Perry was acquitted.

Eugene Andrews, Chapel Hill plumber, pleaded guilty of installing sewer connections without a permit and paid costs of $5.85.

Annie Johnson, colored, 20, had signed a warrant for the arrest of her fiance, Ernest King, 22, charging him with assault, alleging use of a razor with homicidal intent. When Annie appeared at court, however, her anger at Ernest had cooled so much that she refused to testify against him and was assessed by Judge C. P. Hinshaw with the costs of the case.

Ped Neville, colored, and his estranged wife, Texanna Neville, stood before the bar of justice. Testimony of a policeman disclosed that, in searching for a negro charged with assault, he had entered a colored restaurant and observed Ped pass a bottle of liquor to Texanna, who promptly hid it under her voluminous arm.

"Nosuh, Jedge, dat ain't right nohow," protested Texanna. "Ah was a-comin' to'ard dis place where dey 'rested me, an' ah met up wif some frens. Dey had a gallon, an' dey gived me some in a bottle. But Ah didn' have no stoppah fo' dat bottle, an' Ah jes' steps in fo' tuh git a stoppah. Dat's zac'ly de troof."

Judge Hinshaw sentenced Texana to two months in a colored home, to be suspended upon payment of costs of $15.80 and good behavior for a year.

Ped was given four months on the road, but this sentence was likewise suspended upon a year of good behavior and payment of $20.10 in costs.

Joe Couch, student residing on the Durham road, will be careful of his conversation henceforth when a Chapel Hill policeman is the party of the other part.

He drove from the Carolina Inn down Columbia street, at an excessive rate of speed, it is said, and crossed the intersection of Franklin street on a red light. Officer U. M. Rackley stopped him, warned him of the dangers of reckless driving, and allowed him to go upon his way.

A few minutes later the same officer apprehended Couch as he drove too rapidly down Franklin street, and, in recorder's court officer Rackley alleged that Couch spoke without due respect for the law.

After Couch apologized he was assessed the costs of the case and allowed to depart.

"Hit's jus' lak mah husban' tole you-all, suh. We ain't got nothin'—no food er no wood, an' I jes' came tuh ask if you-all know how Ah kin feed mah fo' li'l chillun?"

A few minutes later Judge Hinshaw conversed with J. P. Jones, Chapel Hill dentist. The pair investigated, and found nothing resembling food in the Foushee home but a pint of something that appeared to be a mixture of meal and sawdust.

Today, as the result of contributions from friends of the judge and the dentist, Foushee's wife, who has "fits" sometimes, and cannot work steadily, sits before a warm fire and contemplates with pleasure a sizeable woodpile and a well-filled larder.

Navy Wrestling Bout

The Carolina wrestling team went down to defeat before the skilled Navy team last Saturday by the score of 22 to 8 in a meet held at Annapolis. Only two Tar Heels were able to win their matches, Stallings winning by a fall, and Ferguson getting a time advantage over his opponent. Stallings' victory deserves special praise because of the fact that his opponent, Wilbourn, had been on the varsity team three years and never before lost a match. The unlimited match was the most exciting of the meet, the superiority of neither man being shown until the contest was half over when Ferguson began getting time on his adversary, Murphy. From then on Ferguson had everything his own way.

The following are the results of the matches:

115-lb. class—Theobald (N.) won fall over Bell (C.) 9:25.

125-lb. class—Stallings (C.) won over Wilbourne (N.) 8:25.

135-lb. class—Goodman (N.) won time decision over Woodard (C.) 2:34.

145-lb. class—Gray (N.) won time decision over Tsumas (C.) 9:11.

155-lb. class—Silverstein (N.) won fall over Moore (C) 7:40.

165-lb. class—Morton (N.) won time decision over Cowper (C.) 1:40.

175-lb. class—Hughes (N.) won time decision over Houghton (C.) 9:54.

Unlimited — Ferguson (C.) won time decision over Murphy (N.) 6:25.

The varsity will meet V. P. I. at Blacksburg this Saturday. The freshman mat team will meet the Gobbler yearlings this afternoon at Blacksburg.

fine old state. Mr. Williams can believe it if he wishes to, I will not.

Senator Simmons has jumped from one side to the other more than once before in his long and honorable career in the Senate, Mr. Williams. Go and read his record and be wise. Why didn't your Old Line Democrats "get" him before? Senator Simmons has always looked out for his state first. If he thought that a Republican measure would benefit his state he voted for it. He was not stupid enough to refuse a benefit just because it happened to come from the opposite party.

However, the whole argument boils down to this; Mr. Williams and others of his sort are just "sore" because North Carolina along with other Southern states went Republican, and they are trying to shift the blame on someone other than themselves, for after all it is the voters who do the voting, not Senator Simmons. I believe that even Mr. Williams will agree that not Senator Simmons alone was responsible for North Carolina going Republican. So quit your back-biting and let Senator Simmons alone. Attack the new strength of the Republican party within your state, a strength which will continue to grow stronger as your state becomes more industrialized; and attack the fact that Al Smith was a "wet" and another thing that I will not mention, but which you all are aware of.

With this article I shall retire from the field, not because I have been crushed by Mr. Williams' wordiness by any means, but because Senator Simmons does not care a whit for the condemnation of Mr. Williams. His record speaks for itself.

I shall say in closing that I, a Republican, can honestly say that I admire Senator Simmons much more than my own two Senators, not because he supported the Republican side in the late election, for he himself said that anyone was a liar who said that he was a Republican, but I have the innate ability to admire a "man" no matter what his political creed, race or religion be, and Senator Furnifold Simmons is a real man. May he be North Carolina's senator for at least another term!

ANNUAL SIGMA XI LECTURES TO BE BY DR. SHAPLEY

To Be Held On February 13-14; Speaker Director Harvard Observatory.

Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard College Observatory and one of the youngest of America's famous astronomers, will deliver the annual Sigma Xi lectures this year on February 13 and 14.

The lectures of Dr. Shapley, who was awarded the Draper medal of the National Academy of Science in 1926, are expected to be among the best which have been given during the ten year period that Sigma Xi has sponsored them.

The North Carolina branch of Sigma Xi, national scientific research fraternity, tried to get Dr. Shapley to deliver the lectures last year, but he was unable to come to Chapel Hill at that time.

Two years ago the fraternity had as its guest lecturer Dr. F. W. Aston of Cambridge University, England, who delivered a series of lectures on atomic structure. This year the group has secured a man who will talk about the extreme opposite branch of science, in so far as size is concerned.

The fields in which Dr. Shapley has done research work include those of photometry, spectroscopy and cosmogony. He is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a member of the Washington Academy of Science, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the National Academy of Science, the American Astronomy Association, and the Royal Astronomical Society of England.

Professor Marcellus Stow of the department of geology at Washington and Lee University was a visitor here last Saturday.

The Sunny South

I. N. Clark, well known farmer of Orange county, arrived in town yesterday afternoon with a live young alligator in his possession. The strange reptile was on display in front of Davie hall for about an hour, and a large number of curious students gathered around to ask interesting questions.

Mr. Clark explained that about midafternoon, a young negro who works on his farm located on the Durham road three miles north of Chapel Hill, came running to him with the news of finding a strange "animal" in a swampy hole in the rain-soaked bottom land. The farmer investigated and discovered a young alligator measuring about 37 inches in length. He and the negro promptly put the reptile in a cart and drove into town, depositing their load in front of the biology building. One of the biology students said the alligator was probably between ten and twenty years old, but that living in a cool climate had stunted its growth.

The reptile appeared nonchalant, to the spectators, and hardly moved at all, but kept close to the ground as if suffering from the cold. No one could satisfactorily explain the 'gator's presence in Orange county except that it probably escaped from some private zoo.

Game Preserve Here

A state game preserve will be established on the University's lands in Orange county, according to plans adopted at the meeting of the board of trustees in Raleigh yesterday. MANAGERS SUE FAMOUS DANCER FOR $64,500 SUM

Allege That Irma Duncan, Who Appeared In Chapel Hill Last Fall, Violated Contract.

Because of her insistence on giving the "Red Flag Dance" in Chapel Hill a few months ago, Irma Duncan, head of the Isadora Duncan Dancers of Moscow, is being sued by her managers, the Hurok Attractions, for the amount of $64,500.

Her contract with the plaintiffs stipulated that the Hurok Attractions' manager was to approve the programs before being presented. It is charged that the "Red Flag Dance" was not sanctioned by the manager of the troupe but nevertheless, Irma Duncan directed her dancers to perform that specialty. It will be remembered by the many who attended the performance in Memorial hall that one of the dances was one in which the group centered about a flimsy piece of maroon-colored material. No significance to the particular color or character of the dance was given to it at that time by the audience nor the Daily Tar Heel.

Nevertheless, Irma Duncan's managers allege that because of her giving the "Red Flag Dance" in Chapel Hill, other Southern cities cancelled the engagements or otherwise caused loss of profits.

It is known here that in Greensboro, North Carolina, definite protests were raised by organizations to the "Red Flag Dance," and that the program as finally presented there bore no mention of the revolutionary number.

The specific complaint as mentioned in the suit is "breach of contract." The Hurok Attractions were to receive 60 per cent of the net profits of each engagement while Miss Duncan was to receive 40 per cent of the net profits and $75 to $175 for her appearances. In addition, the contract called for the approval of all her programs by her manager. It is because of the violation of this last clause that the producers brought suit against the daughter of the famous Isadora Duncan.

The suit was filed against her on Saturday, January 25th and no answer has as yet been given to it by Miss Irma Duncan.

UNIVERSITY IS STATE'S BEST INSURANCE POLICY

Salary Scale Must Be Increased To Keep Pace With Other Universities; Other Important Problems Discussed In Report.

The fact that agricultural depression and industrial dislocation are evident is all the more reason why North Carolina should increase its appropriation for its University, President Harry W. Chase declared here today in his annual report to the board of trustees at their mid-winter meeting.

"The state of North Carolina, after a period of rapid expenditure, is attempting to stabilize its financial condition," Dr. Chase said. "With such an attempt every thoughtful man must be in hearty agreement. It is not usually considered, however, the part of wisdom for individuals who must stabilize the family budget to begin by dropping their life insurance, and this, it seems to me, the state has been somewhat in a mood to do."

Best Insurance for Future

"The University is the state's chief instrument for the assurance of its own future, its largest life insurance policy on its own prosperity to come," Dr. Chase asserted. "It is an investment and the most solid and enduring investment which a state can make in the future competence of its own citizenship. One cannot say these things too strongly. Surely it is easy to see that as the state decides the University shall be strong or weak it gains or loses its greatest single asset in its upward struggle."

Dr. Chase made an earnest plea for increased support for the University. The University, he said, has "attained a Board Reaches Decision At Mid-Winter Meeting In Raleigh.

DESTRUCTION OF HALL TO BEGIN IMMEDIATELY

Atwood and Nash Drawing Up Plans For New Building To Seat 1800; Architecture To Conform To That Of Other Buildings On Campus.

(By Vass Shepherd)

At their regular semi-annual meeting in the governor's office at Raleigh yesterday, the University board of trustees voted for the demolition of Memorial hall and the construction of an auditorium with a seating capacity of approximately 1800 at a total cost of $200,000 on its present site.

Arrangements have been made for work to begin on destruction of Memorial hall immediately. The University architects, Atwood and Nash, are preparing plans for the new structure, which will conform in architecture with other buildings on the campus. The front of the building will be similar to that of Manning hall, with colonial columns reaching to the eaves of the roof. The material will be red brick.

According to University officials, the new building will be constructed in such a manner that it may be converted for uses other than as an auditorium.

Plans call for the erection of a larger auditorium in the future, embodying the idea of a University memorial building. The commemorative tablets in Memorial hall will be placed in the new building until finances are provided for the construction of the larger auditorium, which will have a much greater seating capacity than the building to be erected this spring.

Construction work on the new auditorium is expected to begin as soon as the present building is razed and the site cleared. Officials estimate that actual construction will begin by April 1 and that the new building will be completed by next September.

Funds for erection of the new building were provided out of the emergency fund by action of Governor Gardner and the council of state, composed of heads of the major state departments.

The building committee of the board of trustees met in Chapel Hill Monday afternoon with John Sprunt Hill as chairman and decided to recommend the erection of the new auditorium to the board at its meeting yesterday. Lengthy consideration was given to the recommendation by the trustees yesterday, the discussion continuing a major portion of the afternoon. The motion for the razing of Memorial hall and the construction of a new auditorium was passed by a large majority.

History Dinner

There will be a dinner of the history faculty and graduate students at the Carolina Inn Thursday evening at 6 o'clock. Those planning to attend are requested to see Frank Graham or Robert Meade.

Freshmen Politicians Assail Upperclassmen During Voting

(By Chas. G. Rose, Jr.)

Have you voted yet? Whom did you vote for? Why don't you vote for So and So? It was with such questions that freshmen and sometimes even upperclassmen were assailed when they came within calling distance of the Y at any time yesterday.

As soon as a student was recognized as a first year man, he was immediately surrounded by a group of eager politicians who were very enthusiastically attempting to convince the voter that a certain man was the best suited for one of the four offices. Everywhere could be seen small groups, confidentially discussing with a "just arrived" voter the prospects of a certain nominee. These groups resembled very much similar groups that were seen sometime during the first part of the year toward the close of rushing season, when "high pressure" was used as a means of last resort.

Toward the middle of the afternoon, when the voting was beginning to slack up, there appeared in front of the voting booth a prospective voter (at least this is what one of the young politicians took him to be). Thus, thinking the newcomer to be a would be voter, the young politician began with his usual "line" in an attempt to convince the arrival that it was his duty to vote for a certain man for president, another specified nominee for vice-president, and so on down the list. After continuing this speech for some time, he seemed to have made no progress whatsoever with the student who seemed very much at a loss to know just what to do; it was evident that he had not taken it in that he was being requested to vote. Some one passing by, much to the relief of the voter, happened to recognize him as an upper classman. Addressing the eager politician, he said, "What are you trying to do; make upperclassmen vote? That fellow is a sophomore; he can't vote." Very much embarrassed, the sophomore voter saw his mistake and hurried away blushing all over, while the over-enthusiastic politician was being given a merry razz by the crowd.

Student Is Careless With Auto; Gets Off With Costs

(By John Patric)

One of the freshmen had been just a little careless. He had backed his car from an alley on to Franklin street, and had turned around right in the middle of the block without ascertaining if policemen were about.

Policemen were.

His next public appearance was at the evening session of recorder's court. He arrived early, mistaking the companion of a Tar Heel reporter for a court attache, and expressed a forlorn hope that he would not be fined.

"They might fine me five dollars, I'm afraid," he said, "and I just couldn't afford that. I need the money."

After the charge against the worried-looking student had been read, he pleaded "guilty" as contritely as he could.

Judge C. P. Hinshaw addressed the prisoner. "Do you plan to do that again?"

The prisoner did not understand, and leaned over the rail to nudge the prosecutor.

"What did he say?" The freshman learned. "Oh, certainly not, sir!" he answered in great haste.

"Then we'll be lenient with you. Just the costs. Next case."

A wave of happiness and great relief spread over the face of the erstwhile lawbreaker as he heard these words, and his feeling of pleasure was not under control until the next case had started. It was with genuine enjoyment of court procedure that the freshman, who was waiting to pay the trivial "costs," sat through the trial which followed.

"What—how much are these costs?" the traffic law violator asked after adjournment.

"Five dollars and seventy cents."

As the Tar Heel reporter left the room, the court was listening to a prolonged exposition of the advantages of the deferred payment plan.

Dean Bradshaw And The Duke-Carolina Question

In a recent series of chapel talks, Dean of Students Francis F. Bradshaw outlined a highly idealistic plan for improving Duke - Carolina relationships. Dean Bradshaw declared that Carolina men must exhibit such gentlemanly conduct and exemplary sportsmanship that Duke will be forced to reciprocate.

According to the Dean, we must teach the Duke undergraduates and alumni real sportsmanship in athletic encounters and the principles of ethical conduct in all other relations through example. He attributed the breaking-up of the Carolina-Wake Forest and Carolina-State animosities to the superior sportsmanship of the University teams and the tolerant attitude adopted by the Carolina students, which produced in the other schools an unwillingness to see themselves surpassed in these respects.

Dean Bradshaw left the impression with his audiences that the Carolina-Duke ill-feeling is attributable primarily to the students at the Durham institution. He expressed serious doubt that the situation would be materially altered by plans developed at meetings between student leaders of the two universities, or by joint smokers or dinners of the senior classes.

In our opinion Dean Bradshaw's talks will indirectly increase the animosity between Duke and Carolina, rather than assist in abating it. He intimates that the Carolina students are superior in conduct and sportsmanship to their Duke rivals. This intimation, expressed by a University official before a group of students, may have dangerous consequences.

At the basis of the entire Duke-Carolina enmity is the assumption of superiority by the students of both schools, and Dean Bradshaw has served to enhance this attitude in the minds of those who heard his talks. Before any practicable solution to the Duke-Carolina problem can be worked out, the students of both institutions must tacitly admit that the responsibility for the past ill-feeling is mutual. It must then be realized that the student bodies of both institutions are composed of individuals who have, in general, the same aspirations, abilities and standards of conduct, and who are striving for similar ends. Only upon mutual respect can any genuine friendliness between the students of the neighboring institutions be founded.

In meetings where a friendly atmosphere prevails, apart from the intense rivalries of athletic contests and other competitive encounters, students of the neighboring universities will develop mutual respect and liking which will be evident in the future in increased sportsmanship and improved relations in all contacts between representatives of the two schools.

We can't "teach Duke real sportsmanship and the principles of ethical conduct." In all probability the Duke students know as much about these things and practice them as frequently as Carolina men. We must come to realize and to admit that we are no better and no worse than are Duke students. With this realization will come a mutual attitude of friendliness, resulting in many advantages to both schools. Enmity and hatred will change to friendly rivalry.

The sportsmanship and ethical conduct sought by Dean Bradshaw are primarily ends to be produced by mutual respect and friendliness rather than a means to be used in producing these attitudes.

If The Ladies Go To War

A recent item in the daily press provides food for thought for those who have been engaged in the semi-serious battle in the columns of the Tar Heel over the value of the female in general, and the species Co-eddicus in particular.

According to the report, a Smith College girl was walking on the campus, when she was asked the way to the President's house. Almost before she was able to answer, she was bundled into an automobile, blindfolded, and whisked away to a remote part of town.

All this is according to Hoyle and the best detective fiction standards. But what happened after that you won't find in the books—even authors whose imaginations are of the wildest. For truth, as has been said once or twice before, is stranger than fiction.

Our college girl, finding herself in the hands and stronghold of her captors, was not abashed. She straightway proceeded to argue with the abductors, and succeeded in convincing them that she ought to be set free, holding out such threats as the undesirable publicity sure to spread quickly, which would result in a widespread hunt. And so they let her go.

Now the point in all this is clear. The girl obviously had brains, and used them. And yet, all ye writers of the Open Forum, she was a college girl. It must be admitted, then, that there may be, and (whisper it) in fact there are, girls who attend college and still have a modicum of sense to pit against that of the occasionally not so dominant male.

An ominous silence has recently pervaded Spencer hall. Beware of the storm, scoffers and letter-writers, if that silence should break. Invective, like milk, curdles and becomes even more sour when forced to stand quiet for a period of time. And whether or not we admit that there are girls who can and sometimes do think, we have met some flaunters of the skirt who had a right powerful, not to say interesting, vocabulary of cusses. Take care, collegiates, of what you say to the Main Worry, or what you write about her sex in general. For Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned—or abducted.

A Proposal For Open House

A few days ago a Carolina alumnus was telling us of his student days here from 1916 to 1920, during the period when the University had not started its present expansion program and when the student body numbered not over 800 or 1000. We were most impressed by his descriptions of the open house evenings conducted by the faculty. He spoke of many of the most prominent faculty men as personal friends and told of spending many pleasant evenings in their homes just "talking things over."

By way of contrast we thought of the experience of our college generation. Not once have we received an invitation from an instructor to "just drop in some time." In our experience the personal contact between the students and faculty has been always at a minimum. As far as our knowledge goes there is no one in the faculty who conducts a regular "open house" or ever invites his students to drop in occasionally.

In a large university such as this a professor might easily waste all his time "bulling" with his students outside of class and never have an opportunity to conduct research or do the other outside things considered necessary for the success of a teacher; the student body is admittedly too large for any one man to be friendly with every one. But it seems possible that some students would like to call occasionally at stated intervals for an informal chat with the professors and that such an occasion would prove enjoyable and beneficial to both.

We would not suggest that any faculty man entertain all of the student body or that he would care to talk with all of them. But we do believe that any effort by the faculty to promote more congenial and friendly relations with the students would meet with a sincere response from them.

If a professor could set aside one evening a week or one evening a month to receive his students, the strain on his time and energy would not be too great. By personal contacts the coldness and the impersonal atmosphere of a great university could be relieved.

Carolina Play-Book Is Praised By Critic

Officials of the Carolina Play-Book yesterday were in receipt of a letter from Roland Holt, dramatic critic and former vice-president of the Henry Holt and Co., New York City, praising the magazine for the excellence of its articles and terming its make-up as "the handsomest of all theatrical magazines." The Carolina Play-Book is the official organ of the Carolina Playmakers and the Carolina Dramatic Association.

The contents of the letter are as follows: "I enclose my renewal for your really beautiful Carolina Play-Book, which is always a joy to us. I seldom find in either Scribners or Harpers anything better than Paul Green's London Letter, Milton Wood's 'Our Troopers In The North' and Mrs Coffin's delightful farce, 'Magnolia's Man' —and all these in a single number. As for your format it is the handsomest of all theatrical magazines."

Professor Frederick H. Koch is editor of the Carolina Play-Book.

Readers' Opinions

ANOTHER VOTE FOR SIMMONS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Has Senator Furnifold M. Simmons reached the end of his glorious career in the United States Senate? By arguing that Senator Simmons is a traitor to his party, that he is no longer capable of performing his duties, and that he made more enemies than friends by his stand in the last presidential election, Mr. Williams has informed us that the Democratic party of North Carolina is not proud of him and that he is to be defeated by Josiah William Bailey in the primary next June. I'm no political prophet, yet I disagree with him.

With the vigor and conscientiousness that has characterized his career in the senate, Senator Simmons fought the nomination of Al Smith before the Houston Convention, knowing that his nomination would cause a split in the ranks of the Democratic party. When Smith was nominated, Simmons, unlike the weak politicians who hastily declared their support for Smith for the sake of "party harmony," stuck by his convictions and continued his fight against the man whom he did not think suitable for the office of President of the United States. He realized that it was not the party that was to be president, but the man. Therefore, it was not a choice of parties, but of men. Mr. Williams evidently cannot be reconciled that the theory, "my party, right or wrong," should not be adhered to regardless of the candidate. Judging from the results of the last election, many thousands of voters in this state realize the impossibility of such a theory. If Senator Simmons is a traitor, aren't all those Democratic voters who supported Hoover traitors also? But he is no traitor; he was not pledged to vote for the party nominee regardless of who he might be. He was at liberty to support the candidate of his choice. In doing so, he was exercising the office of a senator. He has never shirked his duty as he saw it, neither on the senate floor nor at the polls. He is to be congratulated and not condemned for standing firm to his convictions, and not being washed along in the current of the convictions of a few politicians. Anybody can follow, but it takes a MAN to lead. Surely Senator Simmons' stand is in keeping with that of the Democrats of North Carolina. Do we want a party that is so narrow that it will not allow a citizen a constitutional right of voting for his choice?

In spite of his advancing age and failing eye sight, Senator Simmons is still far from being incapable of performing his duties in a most efficient manner. We need only to glance at his record during the last session of congress to gain adequate proof of his capability. Senator Simmons may not be able to read as well as Mr. Williams, but he can still make out. In fact, he is able to hold his own in a discussion against any member of the senate. He is treated with honor and respect in that body, for his ability is recognized by all to be without peer. Surely the Democratic party of North Carolina is proud of such a man. He has brought honor and glory to his party and to his state through his long and splendid career as a senator, and it would be unfair not to return this man to the post he so richly deserves and fills in such a distinguished manner.

Senator Simmons nor his friends are afraid that he will be defeated in the forthcoming primary. He relies with satisfaction upon a distinguished record as his qualification for the office of United States senator. He has the support of the clear-thinking majority of the Democrats of North Carolina, for in him they recognize a fearless, capable leader who has served them and their state in a manner worthy of a praise which I am unable to give. Senator Simmons has no fear of being defeated, for he knows that the Democratic party owes him more than he owes it, and that he will again be chosen to continue his faithful service to his great state.

SOME "HELPFUL HINTS" FOR CO-EDS

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

Recently there appeared in the Tar Heel an article entitled "The Co-ed Opinion of College Men." This article was based on one entitled "Helpful Hints for College Men." The writer seemed to think that the 'Helpful Hints' were sorely needed here on the Hill. No doubt the article was written primarily from an altruist standpoint. Doubtless there was some truth in it, so let us plead guilty to some, at least, of the charges. Let us make the following statements however, which may—it is our hope—in some way offer explanations.

Don't think the primary purpose of the moustache is to hide a boyish face. It sometimes offers an ideal excuse for not kissing a girl.

Don't think after a boy has had several dates with a girl he appreciates it when he speaks to her and she gives him one of these "Who the hell are you" looks.

Don't think that every boy who tells you you are good-looking means it. Men have been known to lie.

Don't believe that a boy gets a kick out of waiting from thirty minutes to an hour for you to get dressed.

Don't consider a boy dumb because he doesn't talk about dances all the time and you do. It may be because he has been out a little more than you have.

Don't get the idea that boys are the only ones who get a kick out of necking. Girls have been known to say, "I don't like him, he's too dam slow."

Don't think that a boy can't do without you, and when you kick him don't get the idea that it breaks his heart 'cause there's one born every minute.

Don't hold it against a boy if he doesn't call as often as you would like him to when you insist that every boy who drops in must stay.

Don't get the idea that a boy believes all the excuses you make for not giving him a date, or all your reasons for breaking a date with him. All boys are not quite as dumb as they look.

Don't count too heavily on the College Man living up to a co-ed's ideals. If you find one that does it might not be a bad idea to grab him. They aren't frequent.

Olsen Entertains Debating Class

W. A. Olsen of the English department, and his wife, entertained the members of the class in public speaking and debating at their home on Park Lane recently. The purpose of the meeting was principally to hear the speechs of the Lord Mayor of London, Ramsay McDonald and Tardieu, broadcast from London. Tea was served during the course of informal discussion.

Those present were Miss L. M. Troutman J. C. Harris, A. C. Gaskill, F. B. Bunch, C. H. and R. B. Fisher.

It would be easier to forgive a friend's success if he didn't try so hard to be modest about it.

Winter Grid Teams Clash In Kenan Stadium Today

"Georgia Tech" Meets "Volunteers" In First Game Of Practice Season.

"TORNADO" IS FAVORED

Collins Is Yet To Select Remaining Teams For Round-Robin Series Of Games; Collins Directing Work.

(By M. A.)

Thud of toe on pigskin, swish of fleet halfbacks 'round the ends, crash of body on body, with resultant groan (and maybe profanity)! Football comes to Kenan stadium once more—today!

The "Georgia Tech" and "Tennessee" elevens were selected from the squad of 100 winter football men yesterday, and today at 4 o'clock in Kenan stadium these two outfits will pry the lid off the 1930 winter football season.

On paper, "Georgia Tech," with a backfield of "Bob" Wyrick, "Warner" Jackson, "Stumpy" Houston and "Father" Suggs, appears to have the odds on the dynamite offensive punch.

Wyrick and Jackson are letter backs of two years' experience. Houston, of scrimmage fame, showed promise in last year's practice and is being looked on as a good prospect. Suggs was the bone-crushing freshman fullback of '28, who was ineligible in '29.

"Tennessee" will present a strong line, however, in Grindstaff and Walker, ends; Roach and Rose, tackles; McIver and Hudson, guards, and Hodges, center. And so the clash, regardless of who wins, would seem to promise a fine afternoon's entertainment.

The "Yellow Jackets" will present a strong line as well, a mixture of sophomore and varsity talent, with great propensities.

Nichols, end; Sharkey and Collins, tackles, and Allen, center, will be up from last fall's strong freshman line. "Red" Parsley will hold down right end. Ellis Fysal, varsity '29, and Bob Blackwood, varsity '28, both heavy, stocky and "mean," promise to be especially strong at the guard posts.

Tar Heel supporters will greet welcomely the return of Blackwood and Suggs to the Tar Heel fold. Blackwood was one of the best of the Tar Heel guards in '28, and Suggs was one of the finest freshman fullback prospects ever to come up here. Both were ineligible last season.

Both outfits will have approximately 10 substitutes. Tennessee will bank for reserve strength on Cole, Bridgers, Robinson, Koehl, Chaconas, Walters, Little, Ferebee and Herkimer. Georgia Tech will be able to draw on Tabb, Thompson, Patterson, Whedbee, Yarborough and Newcombe.

The winter squad numbers slightly more than 100. Head Coach Chuck Collins said today that three more squads would be selected and that the regular plan of 60-minute games on each Wednesday and Saturday would be carried out.

The "South Carolina" eleven which has won the winter title two years running is yet to be named. Coach Collins likewise failed to commit himself as to which is "his" team.

It looks funny, but the Tar Heel mentor may be getting the jump on the other coaches.

After all—with such backs as Nash, Magner, Branch, Slusser yet to be apportioned, there is room for curiosity—and doubt.

Probable starting lineups will be:

Tennessee	Pos.	Ga. Tech
Grindstaff	L. E.	Nichols
Roach	L. T.	Sharkey
McIver	L. G.	Blackwood
Hodges	C.	Allen
Hudson	R. G.	Fysal
Rose	R. T.	Collins
Walker	R. E.	Parsley
Moore	Q. B.	Wyrick
Chandler	L. H.	Jackson
Daniels	R. H.	Houston
McAlister	F. B.	Suggs

Ruffin Defeats "I"

Ruffin beat "I" 21-18 in another close intramural game yesterday. Led by Davis, Ruffin played a bang-up game to offset the good work of Heller for "I." Both of these men led their teams in scoring with 11 and 12 points respectively.

Co-eds Lose

Led by Brooks, a dead shot center, a fast Leaksville Y team with a well-timed passing attack won from the co-eds last night to the tune of 29-23.

The lead see-sawed back and forth during the first quarter, but soon after the opening of the second Leaksville took the lead and held it through the game. The half ended 19-10.

The co-eds held a slight advantage in the second half, scoring 13 points to their opponents 10, due to the brilliant shooting of Johnson and Thacker. The rally was not strong enough to overcome the Y team's lead and the game ended 29-23.

Brooks with 20 points led the scoring and was the outstanding star of the game. Her teammate, Landreth, and Way, Johnson and Thacker of Carolina were next in line for scoring honors with seven points each. Lowell of Leaksville and Hill of Carolina played well at guards.

PLANS UNDERWAY FOR SPRING PERFORMANCE OF COMMUNITY CHORUS

The executive committee of the Chapel Hill community chorus held a business meeting Monday night in the office of H. S. Dyer, to make plans for the spring performance of the chorus.

The exact selections to be performed were not decided upon, but the choral work will have to be limited, since the new music auditorium will not be ready until September. Also, the chorus will not be able to secure the services of a full orchestra, since the University orchestra will be busy preparing a strenuous program to be used on two tours. It is possible that two pianos will be substituted for the accompaniment.

Feb. 17 was set as the date for the first chorus rehearsal.

Mr. Dyer, director of the group, stated that probably the performance will feature some outstanding young American soloist.

Those meeting with Mr. Dyer were: George Lawrence, president; Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle; Mrs. A. S. Wheeler; and C. J. McHale.

Betty Garnett of Oklahoma City has been elected R. O. T. C. queen at the University of Oklahoma.

Passes Awarded

The four passes offered each week to reporters doing the best work for the week were awarded Holmes Davis, Louis Brooks, John Patric, and Frank Manheim at the regular meeting of the Daily Tar Heel staff Sunday night. In addition to the awarding of passes a number of new men were added to the staff as a part of the try-outs for new men being conducted.

The four passes, awarded through the courtesy of E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina Theatre, will be given each week at these regular meetings.

MOREHEAD NAMED AS AMBASSADOR BY PRESIDENT OF U. S.

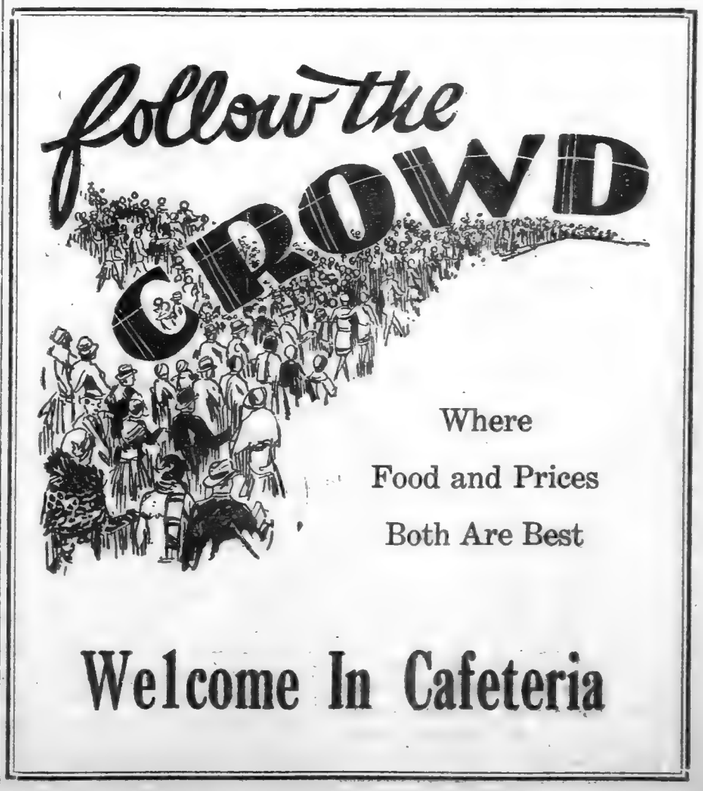
The United States senate confirmed the appointment of John Motley Morehead as minister to Sweden January 22. Mr. Morehead, at present Mayor of Rye, N. Y., was formerly of Durham and a graduate of the University of North Carolina in the class of 1891.

Born in Spray, N. C., and a grandson of John Motley Morehead, governor of North Carolina in 1841, the recently appointed ambassador may be properly called a native Tar Heel. In addition to receiving his diploma in the B. S. school at the University, he was presented with the LL. M. degree in 1926. He was a member of the S. A. E. fraternity while here.

Ever since his graduation Mr. Morehead has been connected with the Union Carbide and Carbon company, serving as a major in charge of the manufacture of T. N. T. in Washington during the war. He is now a colonel in the reserve corps.

For the past five years he has been mayor of Rye, N. Y. It was here that he received the news of his appointment. "Mrs. Morehead and myself," he said, "are delighted at the great honor conferred upon us by President Hoover. I can recall with pleasure my last visit to Sweden in 1900. I have ever had the greatest respect for that nation, and my delight in its people was increased when I was there at that time."

Senator Moses, in charge of the Hoover headquarters during the last presidential campaign, was an active backer of Mayor Morehead, and is largely responsible for his receiving the delegation which was left vacant by the preceding appointment of Leland Harrison as minister to Uruguay. Much interest in the selection has been manifested throughout North Carolina.



Mr. Morehead is now 58 years old. His father and five uncles served in the Confederate army.

Injured

Felix Harvey of Kinston, a member of the University board of trustees and of the building committee, was injured in an automobile-street car collision in Raleigh yesterday morning. The trolley car crashed into the rear of Mr. Harvey's automobile.

Mr. Harvey was taken to Rex hospital in Raleigh, where he was reported to be resting well last night. Although he suffered a slight concussion of the brain and severe bruises, his injuries are not regarded as serious by attending physicians.

Sophomore Notice

There will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Sophomore class Thursday night, January 28, at 7:00 o'clock. The meeting will be on the second floor of the Y. M. C. A.

Larry Johnson, President.

SEVENTEEN MEN INITIATED BY PHI

Seventeen students were taken into the Philanthropic Assembly at its regular mid-quarter initiation exercises last night. At the close of the ceremonies, Speaker John Lang addressed the new members on the merits and aims of the assembly. He included in the address an answer to the criticism of the assembly by a newspaper columnist.

Isaac Wayne Hughes, Thomas C. Worth, Milton Outlaw, A. D. Kornegay, P. P. Weaver, R. S. Furguson, J. F. Jackson, H. Vinson, James Vann, Alfredo Nazareno, J. R. Horne, B. Harper Barnes, R. W. Poole, D. A. Kelly, C. C. Jackson, W. T. Crutchfield and D. C. McDuffie were initiated at the time.

"The Philanthropic Assembly has embarked upon a new career of accomplishment and usefulness. We have grown tired of being a target for the critical volleys of our adversaries, and we have undertaken to show the world that our organization is necessary and indispensable to a student's well-rounded education in the University. And it seems that we have met with some success, for as you have probably seen by our daily papers we have ceased to be confined solely to the campus, and are now exerting an influence in the state at large. Even though a "pseudo-wise" columnist and cartoonist in a state newspaper has undertaken to ridicule the actions of the assembly, we are showing an unparalleled increase in influence on the campus and in the state," Speaker Lang said in his address.

Di Senate Adopts New Seating Plan

The regular meeting of the Di Senate was held last night in New West building. The meeting opened with seating of the members according to the counties which they represent. Fleming Jones was proposed and accepted for membership.

A motion to the effect that a second letter be sent to the buildings department relative to the condition of the walks in front of Swain hall was introduced by Senator Ramsay. A bill regarding the dormitory stores was tabled due to the absence of the member who introduced it.

Discussion on the bill "Resolved, that J. W. Bailey is preferable to F. M. Simmons for the senatorship of North Carolina in the coming election" followed. Senators Williams, Patterson, McPherson and Ramsay supported the bill. Senators Herkimer, Dunn, Rector, Little and Medford opposed the bill. The discussion centered principally upon the age and party fidelity of Senator Simmons. The final vote was twelve to four in opposition to the bill.

Dr. M. R. Trabue, of the school of education, was in Harnett county yesterday, where he addressed the Educo Club, at Campbell College.

Senior Notice

All men majoring in History, who contemplate graduation this June, should see Professor Green at once at his office in Saunders. The comprehensive examination in History is scheduled for February 22.

DR. CHASE GIVES ANNUAL MESSAGE

position among the significant institutions of higher education in America," but it is in grave danger of losing this position of national recognition, he warned, "unless very soon its resources are substantially increased."

Most Pressing Needs

The three most pressing needs at present, he said, are an increased scale of salaries for members of the faculty, and increased cooperation with educational foundations which in recent years have been making substantial grants to the University.

The need for increasing salaries is the most urgent, Dr. Chase said. He referred to the fact that the University of Virginia, in a neighboring state, recently increased its professorial salaries to $6,000.

"Scales of salaries have risen all over the country," Dr. Chase asserted. "We can scarcely expect men who are in demand in their profession to come to us, or to stay permanently with us, when staying means denial to themselves and their families of standards of living that are reasonable and proper.

Scale of Salaries

"The reputation of the University is such that we attract strong men to our community more easily than probably any other university community in the south, if we can make possible for them conditions of living and working that do not require too great a sacrifice. Surely the day is passed in North Carolina when the state can legitimately call upon men to stay within its borders at serious financial sacrifices in the spirit of missionaries to backward peoples. North Carolina has too much self-respect for such a situation, and yet we are penalizing heavily the loyalty and interest of many a faculty member in our University and other institutions of learning."

The more pertinent extracts from President Chase's report are as follows:

Has National Distinction

"The University of North Carolina has attained a position among the significant institutions for higher education in America. I make this statement without qualification and without apology, for this position is the result of the activities of many devoted and competent men at work for more than one generation of University history. I do not know to what extent your board feels the importance of this situation. In my judgment it is one of the most important things that is happening anywhere in the south. At precisely the time, in other words, when the state and the south are being brought into competition in such definite ways with the remainder of the country, the University has come into a position in which it can offer to southern youth a training that does not shrink from measurement by national standards. The young men and women of today in this region are going to live in a complex period in the history of the south. With its great resources, this is destined to be a region of strategic importance to America. The question to what extent Southern youth are trained in ways competent to fit them to be masters of their own heritage is probably the most significant question with which the south is now face to face. That an institution achieves national recognition is at least some testimony to the fact that it is helping toward a proper answer to this question. The time certainly has gone by when southern youth ought to be trained to anything less than a national outlook, or their education judged by standards that embody anything short of the best. We certainly ought to be as much concerned about the future of our youth as about the future of our roads.

Its Problems Not Fully Understood

"I say these things because the University of North Carolina ought to go forward. It certainly has demonstrated its competence. The state is friendly toward it, has confidence in it, and is, I think, proud of what is involved in the upbuilding and maintenance of a modern state university of the finest type. This is not due to any lack of friendliness or interest, but to a lack of familiarity with what is in question. I suspect that there is altogether too widespread a feeling that the University has reached a fairly satisfactory basis upon which it may stabilize the majority of its operations. I have observed, for example, an increasing tendency to think about per capita costs as though the limit of desirable quality in university courses of instruction had already been reached. As a matter of fact, when applied to an institution as complex as the University, per capita figures on the cost of instruction mean practically nothing except in the large required courses of the first year or two in the undergraduate student body. It would be entirely possible, for example, by adding one graduate student engaged in a complicated research problem to add several thousand dollars to the University budget for the year, while, on the other extreme, I would undertake to add a score of students to the law school without increasing its total cost by one penny. In other departments, again, the costs of operation are determined as much, or more, by other factors as by student load.

"Consider, for example, the school of education, which must spend much of its time in state contacts, or the work done by men like Dr. Branson and Dr. Odum. To measure the importance to the University and to the state of North Carolina of such situations in terms of student hours is as dangerous as it is absurd.

"After all, the University is not a factory manufacturing raw materials for the lowest possible cost per unit of production, with its success to be measured by a reduction of the cost of production year by year. Universities are essentially dealers in quality. The furniture that goes inside a man's mind has to be made by hand and not by machines. It is quality production, not quantity production, with which universities must be concerned. A university ought to be efficient in its expenditure of funds. The need for those funds, however, can not in the end be measured by the number of students enrolled, or by the number of courses taught, but by the quality and value of the results that are attained. To identify universities with mass production is to miss the whole point as to why universities exist.

"I know that North Carolina has many and perplexing problems, but the historic way of this state is to make of its problems not a discouragement, but a challenge. Agricultural depression and industrial dislocation are evident, and yet their presence does not alter the fundamental problem of our statesmanship. This problem is the application of intelligence to the solution of situations that need adjustment. I can but feel that what has advanced North Carolina among her sister states in the south has been the fact that she has, on the whole, tended to envisage her problems with intelligence rather than with emotionalism and sentimentality. Serious problems are no new thing in North Carolina life, and the application of intelligence to their solution is her historic method. What does seem to me to be new and disturbing is what amounts in some quarters to an apparent loss of faith in the future of the state and in the methods which it has followed. It may be that North Carolina is doomed to be a second-rate commonwealth, but if so, it will be because it deliberately turns its back on its own historic conception of the methods by which it should build itself up to greatness. These methods are very simple, and the essential thing about them, as I have said before, is that the state has tried to solve its problems through intelligence, not in terms of prejudice, emotionalism, or narrow localisms.

Past Shows Way of Future

It seems clear to me that North Carolina is an example made to order of the methods by which a commonwealth really progresses. It would indeed be tragic if, in the difficulty of these days, we were to turn our backs on the very methods which have brought us forward and sit down to emotionalize about our difficulties in a spirit of fatalistic resignation, or to blame overmuch others than ourselves for their existence, or if we should yield to the temptation to substitute demogoguery for statesmanship in our attitude toward the whole question of our present and future. This is no time to hold back from education. We can, indeed, hold back from it only on the promise that we have lost confidence in the future and are deliberately admitting that our youth of tomorrow must live under a handicap as compared with those of other states and sections.

"We must, in the near future, work out some solution of the problem of retiring allowances for the members of our faculty. The Carnegie Corporation has already shown a disposition to cooperate with us in helping us with the retirement of our older men if we will cooperate from state funds in the establishment of a complete system of retirement. Faculty committees have studied the question, and the committee of your Board has dealt with it, but obviously without funds we can do nothing except to provide as best we can for individual cases as they arise. We can not allow these older men who have given their lives to the upbuilding of the University of North Carolina to go without privision in their declining years.

"We can not postpone long a review of our whole attitude and policy toward the question of grants from educational foundations. These have been generous toward the University of North Carolina, but their general policy in dealing with state universities has been that of stimulating enterprises rather than that of permanent endowments. They have been willing to originate and to help, but in the fields which they have considered important they have sought for evidence as to whether the institution and the state were interested in cooperation. Last year nearly $100,000 of our budget came from grants from such foundations. They have regarded the University of North Carolina as a strategic point of operation in this territory.

"This list of grants is imposing enough and important enough to show the interest of great educational foundations in the University of North Carolina. Their existence must certainly make clear that educational foundations regard the University as an important educational center. Yet it is true that we have made very little progress in cooperating with these foundations in which the University is deeply interested."

GIRLS PLANNING GALA AFFAIR IN CO-ED DORMITORY

Woman's Association To Give First Dance of Year Tomorrow Night.

TO BE IN SPENCER HALL

A feature of the social activities of the week-end will be a dance to be given tomorrow night by the feminine members of the University in Spencer hall. This dance will be in charge of the student council of the Woman's Association which is composed of the following: Kitty Wells, chairman; Helen McKay, Suzanne Dent, Phoebe Harding, Ludie Lee, and Olivia McKinnie.

Formal invitations have been sent out for this affair, which will begin at nine and last until one o'clock. Several attractive features are being planned among which will be a set of no-break dances for the benefit of the junior, senior, and graduate classes. Music will be rendered by the Carolina Buccaneers. Plans are to have the hall artistically decorated with evergreen.

This will be the first of the dances given by the Woman's Association during this school year. Quite a few of these were given last year and proved to be very popular affairs.

This dance will be under the regulations of the German Club, and representatives of the executive committee of that organization will be present.

EXTENSION NEWS ANNOUNCES DATES SCHOOL CONTESTS

Regulations Governing Annual Contests Released By University Extension Division.

The current issue of the University Extension News carries an announcement of the regulations and dates for the high school academic contests sponsored by the University Department of School Relations in an effort to increase the interest of North Carolina high school students in the field of scholarship. Examinations are prepared and graded by the University instruction departments in French, Latin, Spanish and mathematics, with which subjects the contests are concerned.

Quoting from the Extension News: "Since these contests were inaugurated, with the first annual high school Latin contest held on February 18, 1925, they have met with a very cordial reception on the part of the high schools of the state. The central committee at the University hopes that the contests will be found helpful by the high schools and that they will prove generally successful this year.

The dates for the holding of these different contests are as follows: Latin contest, February 28; French contest, March 14; Spanish contest, March 28; Mathematics contest, April 25.

"All accredited North Carolina public high schools are invited to enter the contests, which are being given for the fifth time, with the exception of the sixth annual Latin contest. The school officials whose high schools plan to enter the contests should notify E. R. Rankin, Secretary, at Chapel Hill, at their earliest convenience, re-

Student Naturalist Acquires Live Alligator For Collection

(By Joe Jones)

Rooming down in Graham dormitory is a boy who is planning to become a great naturalist like William Beebe. He is majoring in botany, and zoology, and is also continually delving into the secrets of ornithology, ichthology, entomology, morphology, and herpetology. At present his passion is tramping the woods and swamps in search of liverworts, which he carefully brings home in a little pasteboard box.

But liverworts aren't the only things he brings in. His room is at times a miniature museum of natural history, and now and then it takes on the appearance of a zoo. Just now it shelters a bunch of stuff its occupant collected in the Dutch West Indies last summer, which includes several varieties of coral, some palm nuts, specimens of marine life preserved in jars, and a polished slab of lignum vitae, which is one of the heaviest woods in the world.

Of local flora he has growing in his room at this time ferns, wisteria slips, and mushrooms. One big window box is bare now, but its owner says, "It's going to give me some big surprises when spring comes because I've planted so many kinds of seeds in it that I've forgotten what they all are."

He has on his shelves rows of bottled chemicals, boxes of chemical apparatus, and a small library of books dealing with the natural sciences. One of the most recent additions to the collection is a rare volume on reptiles procured after a long search from a New York dealer for twenty-five dollars.

In one corner of the room sits a sixty-pound rock, which is used as a weight in the pressing of plants.

The young naturalist has been in school here for almost three years, and during that time his roommates have been snakes, a chipmunk, a pigeon, turtles, frogs, Brodie Arnold, and a kitten. The snakes either died in captivity or were let go. The pigeon had a broken wing, but it was kept until completely cured. The chipmunk escaped, the frogs croaked, Brodie Arnold and the kitten went away of their own accord, and the turtles were turned loose because they would not lay. So for a long time the snake doctor, as he is called by his dormitory neighbors, has lived alone.

But day before yesterday a colored boy appeared in town with a 44-inch live alligator, which the lonely S. Dr. promptly purchased for a dollar and seventy-five cents. He immediately christened it Randolph, which is his favorite snake name, and bore it off to his Graham apartment. Here the two are at this moment living happily together.

Their first night together, however, was a hectic one. Randolph was given the freedom of the room, and behaved himself not unseemly until about four a. m. Then he started a series of wall-climbing attempts which always ended in a noisy backward fall to the floor. He crawled back and forth over the typewriter and the waste can, and at last tried to get up in the bed. The biped swore, the saurian hissed back, and neither of

WILLIAM BEEBE LECTURES HERE

Noted Deep Sea Explorer Will Appear on Entertainment Program Tonight.

(By E. C. Daniel)

William Beebe, director of tropical research of the New York Zoological Society, will give his lecture, "Beneath Tropic Seas," as the first number on the student entertainment program of the winter quarter. Mr. Beebe appears in Swain hall tonight.

Illustrated with underwater motion pictures in color, the talk will describe the fairyland under the sea, of which Mr. Beebe wrote thus in the New York Times:

"The general impression of hours and days spent at the bottom of the sea is its fairy-like unreality. It is, in truth, an Alice's Wonderland where our terrestial experiences and terms are set at naught. The flowers are worms, and the boulders living creatures; here we weigh but a fraction of what we do on land; here distance is sheer color and the sky a glory of roppling light.

"Here we can support ourselves with the crook of our little finger, and when we let go fall too slowly for injury. Unlike the mountains of our upper air, to climb is to reach safety; to descend is certain death. Until we have found our way to the surface of some friendly planet other than the earth, the bottom of the sea will remain the loveliest and strangest place

Duke-Carolina

In the Readers' Opinion column of this issue appears a reply by Dean of Students F. F. Bradshaw to an editorial which appeared in yesterday's Tar Heel entitled "Dean Bradshaw and the Duke-Carolina Question." Dean Bradshaw states in his reply that an incorrect interpretation was placed by the editor upon a series of chapel talks which he made recently concerning Duke-Carolina relationships. The editor comments on Dean Bradshaw's reply in the editorial columns of this issue.

RENOVATION OF EDUCATION HALL NOW UNDERWAY

Interior Peabody Building Will Undergo Complete Reconstruction; Classes Meeting in Old Library.

Peabody hall, at which the school of education has its quarters, is to undergo a complete renovation during the spring and winter terms, in preparation for which the school of education is being transferred to the old library building. The work of moving the school of education out of Peabody has been in progress for several days and is now practically finished. Meanwhile, the classes in education have been meeting in the school's temporary quarters since Tuesday of this week.

Peabody building is now being dismantled, and materials for its reconstruction are being placed on the grounds. Work on the reconstruction project will begin at once and will be finished by June, in time for the school of education to move in before the opening of the summer session.

Plans and specifications have been made by the Atwood Nash organization, and the reconstruction work will be done by T. C. Thompson and Brothers who have built the University's newer buildings. The money for this project, $50,000, was appropriated by the legislature of 1927.

Peabody building was erected in 1912-1913 with funds appropriated by the trustees of the Peabody Fund.

Under the south side of the building a basement is to be excavated and fullsize windows put in. Here are to be a stock room, filing room, instrument room and laboratory for the bureau of educational records, a room for the High School Journal, a shipping room, a ladies rest room and toliets. On the first floor are to be the administration and clerical offices for the school of education and the summer school, the office of the bureau

Murchison Criticizes Federal Reserve For Speculation Wave

In the annual Review and Forecast number of "The Annalist," one of the leading financial publications in the country, there appeared an article on "Inefficiencies and Dangers of a Federal Reserve System Adrift in Opportunism," by Dr. C. T. Murchison, director of research in the school of commerce.

Dr. Murchison directs his article against the Federal Reserve Board as a criticism for the part it played in the recent waves of speculation that have swept the country, and denouncing it as one of the underlying causes for this excessive gambling on the market which narrowly averted panic and disaster.

"The autumn of 1929 not only unfolded the sequel to a decade of financial experimentation and adventure," says Professor Murchison, in the beginning of his article, "but it also marked the fifteenth anniversary of the operation of the federal reserve system. For many years there was irony in the coincidence, because it marked the passing of misplaced confidence in the federal reserve system as an agency of stabilization."

"But," the article continues, "for those who had wisely refrained from attributing to it powers of such sweeping potency, the accastion held an even greater disappointment. To them the poignancy lay in the final evidence that the federal reserve system had taken but little rootage in the principles and ideals which gave it birth."

Admitting that the war caused a reversal of conservative banking methods to accommodate emergency expedients, the article goes on to say "it was supposed that after the war would come readjustments to peace-time standards and requirements."

However, the writer charges hat "such expectations were never realized, and the end of a full decade of peace finds the system heavily loaded with the materials and the methods of war financing." As a result the commercial paper basis has become practically abandoned, and the member banks have come to lean heavily on the practice of using collateral notes secured by government bonds in order

"The Show-Off" Will Be Presented Here Tonight

George Kelly's Comedy Opens Three-Day Run in Playmaker Theatre.

F. H. KOCH IS DIRECTOR

Called Finest Comedy Ever Written By An American; Is Third Production of Year by Local Players.

The Carolina Playmakers present their third production of the season, George Kelly's "The Show-Off," at the Playmaker theatre tonight at 8:30. The play will be repeated Friday and Saturday nights.

"The Show-Off" is a three-act comedy of American life. It was first produced at the Playhouse in New York in 1924. Alexander Woollcott of the Sun called it "one of the finest comedies ever written by an American."

Professor Frederick Koch, in writing for the program for tonight's performance, said, "It is a better play than Mr. Kelly's earlier success, 'The Torchbearers,' an hilarious satire on the little theatre movement, produced by the Playmakers in 1925."

"The Show-Off" was first written as a vaudeville skit, and was elaborated from that into its present form. It is a transcript of middle class life, of a typical main street family. The scene is laid in the home of a suburban family in West Philadelphia.

The play in three acts is an indigenous domestic comedy of true characterization, good humor and homely good sense. All characters are representative of the American scene; they are readily recognizable anywhere on main street. Aubrey Piper, the show-off, a thirty-two-dollar-a-week clerk with a 'million-dollar imagination,' is a universal figure to be found in every city and every town. For all his

BERNARD CONE TO SPEAK MONDAY

President of World's Largest Denim Mills Will Talk on Present Condition of Textile Industry.

Bernard M. Cone, president of the Proximity Cotton Mills at Greensboro, will speak upon the present conditions in the textile industry next Monday evening, February 3, at 8 o'clock.

This lecture will be the third of a series of talks sponsored this year by the school of commerce. It is the aim of these lectures to be able to present various viewpoints upon many pertinent subjects of interest.

The recent interest in industrial affairs of this state aroused by the editorial battle waged between David Clark, editor of the Textile Bulletin and Glenn Holder, of the Daily Tar Heel promises to assure a large audience next Monday evening. Mr. Cone, as president of the largest denim manufacturing plant in the world, whose mills and mill villages housing thousands of employees and their families have been termed "model," will probably give a very illuminating lecture upon the conditions now existant in the cotton and allied industries.

The large lecture room in Bingham hall has been tentatively selected as the place for Mr. Cone's talk. Although primarily for students in the school of commerce, any interested persons will be admitte.

FERGER DECLARES NEW CALENDAR IS BIG IMPROVEMENT

University Professor Speaks to Taylor Society on Advantages Of 13-Month Calendar.

Professor W. F. Ferger spoke on "The 13-Month Calendar" before the University of North Carolina student branch of the Taylor Society Tuesday evening.

In his talk Mr. Ferger did not limit himself to the 13-month calendar, but discussed the topic of calendar reform in general. He told of the several previous reforms in the calendar and discussed the two new forms of the calendar which have been proposed for adaption.

After enumerating the disadvantages of the present calendar, Mr. Ferger showed how either of the two proposed systems would overcome these faults and now the new calendars would be an aid to management.

The next meeting, to be held next Tuesday at 7:00 o'clock in Bingham hall, will be addressed by Dr. H. D. Wolf, who will speak on "Management and Technological Unemployment."

Programs for the remainder of the quarter include talks by members of the faculty who will speak on subjects related to scientific management.

Dean Bradshaw's Reply

In the Readers' Opinion columns of this page, Dean of Students Francis F. Bradshaw answers an editorial which appeared in yesterday's issue, entitled "Dean Bradshaw and the Duke-Carolina Question." In his reply Dean Bradshaw points out that an incorrect interpretation was placed upon a series of addresses which he delivered in chapel recently.

Although we were not present when Dean Bradshaw made the chapel talks, we conversed with several persons who were in the audiences, and whom we considered representative of the entire group. We accepted the impressions of the addresses expressed by these men as indicative of those of the entire audiences. It is significant that all these impressions were identical.

We do not question Dean Bradshaw's motives or the soundness of his views in the least. Indeed, we consider him a man of very high ideals and excellent ideas. But we believe that his recent chapel talks concerning Duke-Carolina relations were misinterpreted by a large proportion of those who heard them, and it was with these interpretations that we took issue in yesterday's editorial.

The Practice Of Booting

One of the most widespread collegiate practices in the country is that particularly virulent expression of weak human nature known as booting. Although possibly the habit is not known by that term in other sections of the country, the custom itself is known everywhere. The Stanford University graduate and the boy from the University of Maine can meet on the common ground of this evil, either in a defiant practice or a mutual condemnation of it. Northwestern and Texas, McGill and, no doubt, the University of Mexico, all have their booters, their lax individuals who practice this futile art in an effort to obtain grades without labor.

The booter, or tuber as he is called in some colleges, occupies a peculiar position in the esteem of his fellow classroom sufferers. Some undergraduates, embryo diplomats or floorwalkers, compel a grudging admiration for their skillfulness in this insidious practice. It is their habit never to study, never to spend any energy, even to the extent of carrying a book to class. This, in their opinion, is only a needless encumbrance, and they come to class empty handed as well as empty headed—where the lesson is concerned, anyhow—and by listening with an apparently careful attention and an intelligent interest reflected on their countenances they distinguish themselves in a group of more or less serious students who are frankly bored. They have thereby ingrained themselves, superficially at least, in the mass of faces borne in mind by the instructor for that quarter.

But this is not enough for the clever booter. To insure success he draws from a mental background obtained by some means and engages in serious but respectful controversies with the instructor. By this conduct he not only creates the illusion of having an intelligent interest in the subject, but at the same time he has brought out his mental machinery and hodge-podge of erudition for the benefit of the instructor who cannot help but be impressed.

There are other ways of practicing this particular form of pulling the wool over a teacher's eyes, methods less clever and more represensible. The same students who delight in the exhibition of the highest type of booter have only contempt for that species who stays after class to flatter the instructor, and who hang on to every word uttered by him as if it were indeed a pearl cast to them as swine. This type of individual usually does not succeed in his lowly intention; there are few instructors who cannot pierce the insincerity and shallow hypocrisy of this attitude. When a booter of this category does achieve success, however, the rest of the class is justified in its annoyance.

This "yes man" booter is similar to his brother of the third and last distinctive class—the sympathy seeker. The sympathy seeker is an uncomfortable species, usually a poor freshman who has not yet adapted himself to the requirements of a university and, seeing himself falling behind, becomes frightened and pours out a tale of woe to the annoyed instructor in a futile attempt to avoid the consequences of his own incompetence.

It is the last two types that have given booting its unpleasant connotation. The practice will be with us always; human nature will never be won over to the standardized virtue of the Horatio Alger hero, and boys will always be boys. But booting has been lifted to an art only by those individuals of the first species; the others, which predominate, have made the practice what it is commonly thought of,—and as such it deserves only contempt.—R. H.

Give Us Simpler Laws

"The administration of criminal justice in the United States is a disgrace to civilization." These are the words of William Howard Taft, chief justice of the United States supreme court.

We have too many laws which are not laws in the strict sense of the term. Laws enacted a century ago remain on the statute books, even though they are no longer applicable to modern conditions. A citizen can hardly go about his daily business without violating some law of which he has never heard and which nobody obeys. In the state of Connecticut it is illegal to travel on the road or the railroad on Sunday. This law was, of course, formulated under the strictest of Puritanical conditions in the earliest days of the commonwealth. That it should still ornament the statute books of Connecticut is ridiculous. But the fact of the existence of the law makes Sunday travel on the highways and railroads illegal just the same. Until quite recently it was illegal in the state of New York to operate a motor-propelled vehicle on a highway, unless a man on horseback carrying a red flag or a lantern rode a quarter of a mile ahead of it! Such archaic laws are to be found in every state of the union.

Congress and state legislatures are continually trying to "make" laws. The number is steadily increasing. Why not erase the old, archaic ones as the new ones are accepted? Lawmakers seem to ignore the fact that no law can be classed as a good one, unless the people whom it affects agree that it is a good one. We are told that in the early days of popular lawmaking people gather to tell each other what the law was in their districts, the law being rules of conduct agreed upon by common consent.

The all too prevalent idea that a congress or a legislature has the right to impose an unpopular law is a reversion to the old myth of the divine right of kings. The mere fact that a law is old is no proof that it is a good one. Times and conditions change, but the law habitually lags behind. As a result of this, law and justice often mean two different things. Poor, honest men often hesitate to go to the courts in search of justice and redress of wrongs. They fear legal technicalities which have no relation to justice, but which have a very definite relation to the money-making tactics of lawyers. The coinage of injustice into profit is the great stumbling-block in the way of the impartial administration of criminal justice in the United States.

A law ought to be based on common sense and ought to be so plain and simple that any man with an average sense of fair play could tell, without asking a lawyer, whether he was violating the law or not. Although such a system would diminish the profits of lawyers considerably, it has many good features. Public opinion would keep us all on the right side, or punish us severely when we overstepped the dividing line.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

DEAN BRADSHAW TO THE EDITOR

Dear Glenn:

Inasmuch as I have many friends at Duke University with whom I have both business and social relations, may I ask that you restore me to their confidence?

Your editorial of January 29, based on second-hand reports of my chapel talk, completely reverses the significance of that talk. My whole point was that the most effective way for this student body to improve the plane of athletic rivalry between the two institutions was for us to make the effort required to raise our own standards of competition, and trust the other group to respond with a similar, or greater, elevation of standards. Essentially this would mean that in addition to athletic rivalry we would add rivalry in courtesy, sportsmanship, and good taste.

I still feel that this would be the most practical and immediately effective step toward progress. To take it, need not exclude the desirability of a banquet or smoker such as has been suggested. The fact, however, that auditors of this particular chapel talk received such an erroneous impression as they did, illustrates the difficulty of improving the situation by public discussion of it.

Let me urge, however, that in your effort to better our relations with any sister institution I should like to be counted your ally and be called down promptly, if I seem to be against your policy of inter-collegiate goodwill and mutual respect.

Sincerely yours,
FRANCIS F. BRADSHAW.

the two slept any during the rest of the night.

So yesterday the reptile's master had a fifty-inch tin tank constructed and installed. Now Randolph floats contentedly in his pool, while the snake doctor sleeps or studies in peace.

However, the alligator is by no means become tame and tractable. If placed upon the floor he will hiss and scramble about, and if anyone approaches he opens wide his yellow-fanged mouth, hisses shrilly, and blows bubbles out of his eyes. He is extremely hard to handle and it takes a very firm grip to hold on to him.

Concerning the future of Randolph his roommate says, "At my home in Charlotte we have an artificial pond which is going to be his private swimming pool. I'll take him home with me the next time I go, and he'll get along fine there. Of course I'll have to muzzle him to keep him from catching the goldfish, but we'll see that he gets plenty to eat. We also have an indoor pool where Randolph will enjoy spending the winter."

Campus Snapshot

J. C. Williams

Venturing from Chapel Hill into the surrounding country one passes from an atmosphere of progress into one of decay. In the village are new buildings, thriving businesses, traffic lights, the talkies, and the bright activity of youth. In the neighboring wooded hills, mill-wheels rot by the streams; cabins, empty and deserted, crumble to ruins; wagon trails become dim and are obliterated by weeds and vines; cotton patches are overrun with cockleburs and tall grass, then brush, finally to become merged with the woods again.

Of course this is not true of the land bordering the highways leading out of Chapel Hill; nor is it true of all the land alongside the by-roads, there being some reasonably prosperous farms in this part of Orange county. But one cannot walk far in the woods without coming upon the abandoned places, the quiet, dilapidated farmhouses, the clearings grown up in blackberry brambles and tall, waving grasses.

That great wooded tract lying between the Hill and Morgan's creek has its quota of such places. They are hidden away in the woods, and one out walking stumbles upon them by accident. On the hillside sloping southward to the creek is one of these places. Approaching from the north the traveler comes over the creek into one of these places. Approaching from any other direction one comes suddenly from thick woods into the clearing.

The weatherboarded house has four rooms, a low porch in front, and a summer kitchen at the back. Clustered about it are a few elms, an oak, and a walnut. The little field is deep in orchard grass, but there is a scraggly peach tree, and tumble-down arbor of scuppernong vines, as well as a thicket of wild plum. All traces of cotton, tobacco, or any field crop are quite gone.

Inside are a couple of open fireplaces, and near at hand is plenty of wood. To be sure there are no chairs, but who has not sat on the floor before an open fire? The little porch is a most pleasant place to recline in the sunshine if the day is warm.

For drink there is a spring about fifty yards away. A wooded ravine leads from its source to the creek far below, and down this the stream splashes over the rocks in a thousand white cascades. This is a very beautiful spot, and albeit hard by the clearing it has a complete air of remoteness. Perhaps the empty house but serves to deepen the solitude.

There are dozens of such places within a mile or two of Chapel Hill. They are worth searching out and learning to know. Each cabin has about it some of that forlorn charm which forsaken country places invariably possess. It is a fascination that draws the exploring hiker across the threshold, makes him go through each empty room, to peer into every closet, and at last to pause and wonder about the people who once dwelt there—why they went away, and what has become of them.

There are now neckties made of glass which can be tied as conventionally as anything made of silk or cotton.

WILL OF CECIL RHODES CHANGED BY PARLIAMENT

Candidates For Rhodes Scholarships To Be Selected From Districts Instead Of States.

SIX STATES TO DISTRICT

Following action by the British Parliament in changing the will of the late Cecil Rhodes, the Rhodes scholarship committee announced that instead of selecting students from individual states for study in England the scholarships will be awarded from districts. Under the former plan each state was entitled to a scholarship two out of every three years. The recent changes divides the country into eight districts.

The British parliament made the change in Rhode's will at the request of the trustees. Frank Aydelotte, president of Swarthmore who is American Secretary of the Rhodes Trust, suggested the change as he believed that regional plan would improve the standard of appointees.

The regional plan of distribution is based on the following grouping of the states:

1. New England
   Maine
   New Hampshire
   Vermont
   Massachusetts
   Rhode Island
   Connecticut
2. Middle Atlantic
   New York
   New Jersey

3. South

4. Great Lakes

Carolina-Duke Fracas Will Feature Week-End Events

Both Teams Have Wins Over State College and Losses To W. & L.

TO PLAY HERE IN TIN CAN

Blue Devils With Veteran Team Favored to Win; Ashmore Drilling Team Hard.

With the State game safely packed away, the Tar Heels yesterday began work in preparation for the Duke encounter here Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock. Because of the comparatively close scores by which both Carolina and Duke beat the Wolfpack cagers, and because of its bearing on the state title race, the game is looked forward to as probably the most important one on the Carolina schedule.

Graduate Manager Charles T. Woollen is making preparations to seat a large crowd, and it is likely that stands will be erected at both ends of the big court.

The Duke Blue Devils, runners-up in the Southern Conference cage tourney last year, have thus far shown one of the greatest offensive teams in the conference. Made up almost entirely of veterans, the Blue Devil quint will hold an advantage over the Tar Heels in this respect. Their stars, Croson, Farley, Werber and Councillor, are all veterans of the court game, while there are veterans abailable for the forward post now being held down by George Rogers, sophomore flash.

In veteran strength the Tar Heels possess only "Puny" Harper, Artie Marpet and Billy Brown. The showing of "Sandy" Dameron and Dave Neiman, forward combination which worked so well in the Wake Forest and State games, gives hope to Tar Heel supporters that they may be able to offset the Duke veteran advantage.

In quite another way the Duke-Carolina encounter is the cause for much speculation. Duke plays the lightning, fast, whirlwind offensive game that sacrifices defense to offense, while Carolina, without a veteran forward, has had to build a team primarily defensive. It will be interesting from this angle to see which system will triumph.

Families Need Aid

Conditions of poverty and absolute need throughout Orange county have formed a situation that is this year unusually acute, according to reports issued from the office of George H. Lawrence, superintendent of public welfare. Although it has not been widely known that such conditions are common in the county, the problem this year reached such proportions as to demand serious consideration.

A likely estimate places the number of families that are almost wholly dependent upon the public at 25. Many are suffering from under-nourishment and similar needs. This emergency is greater than can be met by the county poor funds, and adequate provision must be made from other sources. Mr. Lawrence, who has studied the situation thoroughly, ascribes the prevalence of poverty this year chiefly to unemployment and crop failure.

As the most immediate solution of the problem the superintendent of public welfare recommends that civic and other public organizations take over a large share of the work. Among the various agencies engaged at present in work are King's Daughters, Red Cross, the churches, parent-teacher associations and a number of civic clubs and fraternal orders.

Frosh Play Durham

Tonight, for the third successive time, the Tar Babies travel, this time to Durham to take on the Durham high five in a return game. Two weeks ago the frosh trounced the Bulldogs 34-20 and the Durham boys are out for revenge. Since their defeat by the freshmen, the Durham lads have been stepping fast, sweeping everything before them, and indications point to a fast game. Saturday night, both the Duke varsity and freshman teams come to the Tin Can for two games. The freshman game which will be the preliminary, should be doubly interesting since it practically means the state title.

Led by Joe Dunn and Wilmer Hines, the two versatile forwards, the Tar Babies started a new winning streak by defeating the strong State Wolflet quintet in a thrilling game 24-19 in the State gym in Raleigh Tuesday night.

Coach Enright started his second string against the Wolflets, but since no progress was made, he shoved in the regulars and they began an uphill fight to take the game out of the fire.

Old East Wins Another

In the intramural game played between Old East and Best House yesterday, Old East won 33-15. The game was very rough and exciting, being much on the order of touch football. Meyers, center for Old East, played an outstanding game. During the first half the competition was so keen that neither side could gain much advantage, but during the second half Best House succumbed to the attacks on its goal and Old East came through victoriously.

The lineup:

O. E. (33)		Best House (15)
Lowry (5)	R. F.	Leonard (5)
Hendlin (7)	L. F.	McKinney (4)
Meyers (14)	C.	Allen
Sutton (5)	R. G.	Cordle
McCoombs	L. G.	Davis (2)

Substitutions: Old East, Stafford for Lowry, Wilson for McCoombs; Best House, Tsumas for Davis.

Steele Wins

Steele defeated New Dorms 37-14 today in a hard-fought game marked by much roughness and quite a few personal fouls. Farrell and Purser led the scoring for Steele, while Crane did some good work on defense. Vinson was high scorer for New Dorms. Pap Harden, football star, played a good game until he was removed in the second half for personal fouls.

Steele (37)		New Dorms (14)
Farrell (12)	R. F.	Vinson (5)
Fussell (2)	L. F.	Johnson (3)
Purser (14)	C.	Harden (3)
Smith (6)	R. G.	Love
Crane (3)	L. G.	Sale

Substitutions: Steele — Donnally, Simpson, Sanderson, Simmons. New Dorms: Hampton (3).

Harper Only Three-Letter Man

Puny Harper, Tar Heel center, on whose work will depend much of Carolina's chances against Duke, is the only three-letter man at the University. Harper, besides being basketball center, is southern champion discus heaver, and a football tackle.

Law School Victorious

Yesterday in the intramural basketball game between "G" and Law School No. 2, the Lawyers came off victorious with the score standing 26 to 17. The two most outstanding players of the game were Marshall, playing for the Lawyers, and Latham of "G." Each, by a freak of fate, rolled up the same score of 13 points. Another queer thing happened: "G" had only four men at the beginning of the game and, rather than forfeit, they played with only four men.

The lineup:

Law School (26)		"G" (17)
Kellogg (9)	R. F.	Morgan (2)
Marshall (13)	L. F.
Rice	C.	Latham (13)
Powell	R. G.	Widenhouse (2)
Story (2)	L. G.	Freeman

Substitutions for Law School: Glenn (2) for Powell, Binton for Rice.

Chapel Hill High Loses

Overconfidence played a big part in the defeat of Chapel Hill high school here Tuesday night by Alexander Wilson high of Graham, 17 to 15. Fresh from a string of victories, and with this same Graham outfit numbered among their victims, the local boys failed to exhibit their usual fast style of play and close teamwork and resorted to individualistic scoring attempts in the Alexander Wilson game.

Prouty and Council, forwards, and Lawrence, center, departed entirely from their smooth-working offensive formation and showed a woeful lack of the speed and flash they have displayed in previous performances.

As compared to the 76 points scored last week on a team of practically the same caliber as the Graham group, the 15 tallies rung up Tuesday show a decided let-up in the work of the Chapel Hill team.

The locals will entertain Durham here tomorrow night. This game will start promptly at 7:30.

Lineup:

Alex. Wilson (17)		C. H. (15)
Myrick (9)	R. F.	Prouty (2)
Harden (8)	L. F.	Council (4)
Russell	C.	Lawrence (5)
Phillips	R. G.	Reynolds
Woody (2)	L. F.	Williams (4)

CAROLINA-DUKE GO TO BE BATTLE OF SYSTEMS

Two entirely different basketball styles will be displayed when Carolina and Duke clash in the Tin Can here Saturday night at 8:30 in a game that is expected to show the 1930 Big Five champs in action. The Devils, with fast veterans at every post, play lightning-fast offensive ball with the guards following the ball even into the backboard scrambles. Without a veteran forward, the Tar Heels have had to build a club primarily defensive, playing a game such as the one State used to beat Duke in the final round of last year's southern tournament.

CENTERS TO STAGE INDIVIDUAL SCRAPS

Two 78-inch giants will match wits at center when Carolina and Duke quints clash in the Tin Can here Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock. Joe Croson is the Blue Devil offensive star. Puny Harper, southern champion discus heaver, is the Tar Heels' defensive star. Their individual battle promises to be an interesting sidelight.

High Girls Win

Losing for the second time of the season to Chapel Hill high school, the co-ed sextet played a fast game but came out at the short end of a 36 to 13 score last night at Bynum gymnasium.

The Hill guards jumped into the lead early in the game with two field goals and a foul, but the Tar Heelettes sank a couple of shots and closely trailed them the entire first quarter. The scoring attack of the high school team got into action in the second period and they led the co-eds 18 to 8 at the half.

Leigh and Taylor, Chapel Hill forwards, opened up a scoring spree in the second half and ran their total markers up to 16 each. Thacker, Tar Heelette center, found the basket with three long shots and led her teammates with 6 points. Way, who went in at center in the last half, also played a good game and accounted for 3 of the co-ed tallies.

Jordan of Chapel Hill and Hill, co-ed guard, did excellent work as guards and led the defensive play of their respective teams.

C. H. (36)		Co-eds (13)
Leigh (16)	R. F.	Johnson (2)
Taylor (16)	L. F.	Lee (2)
Andrews (4)	C.	Thacker (6)
Mann	C. G.	Hill
Durham	R. G.	I. Currie
Fowler	L. G.	S. Currie

Substitutions: Chapel Hill—Jordan, Pickard; Co-eds—Way (3), McAllister, Curry.

we can imagine."

In his books, the material of which is said to be far more interesting than that of the Times article, Mr. Beebe has brought to laymen a series of carefully penned pictures of animal life in the jungles of tropical lands. While on one of his trips, he gained a knowledge of the use and value of the diving helmet in the study of marine habitation. On his trip to Haiti and the Nonsuch Island, during the past summer, he employed this diving apparatus and a newly perfected cast steel camera in making a record of underwater life that has yet to be surpassed in wonder and authenticity. Verbal descriptions of the sea bed were recorded by a secretary in the boat above, who received Mr. Beebe's impression through a telephone line connected with his diving headgear.

For four months he continued his research, remaining for two or three hours a day as much as 60 feet under the water at times. The completion of his records was an accomplishment of great scientific value, possessing at the same time boundless human interest.

Quoting from a public announcement of Mr. Beebe's tour:

"What wonders he saw! He would see fish that he knew as a drab grey suddenly change to brilliant azure and gold. Scientists had thought that these fishes were two different species; William Beebe found them to be one. Some fish changed color so often as to put a chameleon to shame. He saw quaint old jellyfish; odd bat fish that had fins like human hands that helped them to walk about on the sea bottom. He saw long fish and fat fish; on other trips in these same seas he had found fish from the great depths that exploded when brought to the surface, that had their own electric lighting equipment for use in the eternal night beneath the tropic seas."

Renowned as a man of science and literature and an entertainer, Mr. Beebe should be one of the finest entertainers on the program for this quarter. His lecture will include, of course, material from the three trips that he has made to the tropics, the moving pictures, and the interesting account of his undersea excursions.

NEIMAN AND DAMERON SLATED AT FORWARDS

Jim Ashmore, Tar Heel basketball coach, said today that he would probably start the two rookies Dave Neiman and Sandy Dameron at forward in Saturday night's attempt here to blast the state title from Duke. The two youngsters worked well together against Wake Forest and State.

Carolina and Duke Leading

State title hopes will hang in the balance when Carolina and Duke basketball teams clash in the Tin Can here Saturday night at 8:30. Comparative scores indicate a great, close game. Duke beat N. C. State's southern champions by a 2-point better margin than did Carolina, but the Tar Heels had a 4-point better margin over Wake Forest.

of educational research, instruction rooms for the training school men in English, Latin, French, history, mathematics, and history, and one large class room. On the second floor are to be the offices of the divisions of educational psychology and the history of education, the laboratory for educational psychology, and five large class rooms.

All class rooms and offices are to have hardwood floors with rubber tile in the first floor corridor and cork flooring in the corridor of the second floor. Plaster ceilings are to replace the present wood ceilings, and the walls and wood work are to be painted. Numerous rearrangements are to be made in order to adapt the building to the use to which it is to be put. The architects' plans call for a complete reconstruction so as to modernize the building in much the same way that Old East, Old West, New East, and South have been modernized.

Frosh Wrestlers Win

The Tar Baby wrestling team began the season successfully by defeating the State College freshmen 25-15 Tuesday afternoon in Raleigh.

Each match resulted in a fall except in the 165-lb. encounter between Idol for Carolina and McLam for State. Idol, though, having a distinct advantage, won by forfeit when his opponent suffered a slight injury. Seligson, Winstead, Conklin and Margolis each showed up well to turn in falls for Carolina in less than five minutes' time.

The summary follows:

115-lb. class—Rose (S.) won fall over Deitz (C.), 9:55.

125-lb. class—Seligson (C.) won fall over Ingram (S.), 3:33.

135-lb class—Winstead (C.) won fall over Oakley (S.), 4:31.

145-lb. class—Conklin (C.) won fall over Moore (S.), 3:17.

155-lb class—Sprinkle (S.) won fall over Greer (C.), 43 seconds.

165-lb. class—Idol (C.) won by forfeit over McLam (S.), 3:20.

175-lb. class—Margolis (C) won by fall over Bost (S.). First period, 3:05; second period, 1:28.

Unlimited—Stroupe (S) won fall over Powell (C). First period 36 seconds; second period, no fall.

Professor Gets Wounds On Head While In Coop With Chickens

An eminent, elderly professor appeared on the campus recently with a deep skull wound and explained the matter with a curt, "That's what I get for chasing chickens!"

The professor was subtly persuaded to still the rumors of scandal by telling the whole story.

There is some doubt as to just what the professor was doing in a chicken coop in the dark, but he explained that it was in answer to a proud cackle that indicated the arrival of an egg. The hen, it seems, was merely playing—as hens are in the habit of doing—and the disappointed professor ran back toward the house, carelessly bumping his head on the door of the chicken coop. The professor said further that this proved that the wound was due to external influences only and not to the expansion of his brain.

The professor takes an absorbing interest in his chickens and names them with extreme care. There is a Miss Cackleless who, when she is properly married, will be named Mrs. Lay-more.

He further intimated that he converses with his chickens in the morning to discover their wants for the day, collect eggs, and, primarily, to enable himself to come gradually, thru association with them, to the mental level of his eight-thirty class.

His philological mind rebels at the inability of the chickens between the transitive "lay" and the intransitive "lie." He says that they often cackle when they have laid no eggs and are an inveterate bunch of liars anyway.

Local Junior Order Driving for Members

The William Davie chapter of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, organized on December 24th, has already a total of 60 members, it was reported at last week's meeting. The organization is planning a membership campaign to raise the total to at least double the present enrollment.

The objects of the organization include the fostering of legislation designed to limit immigration, the aiding of its members in sickness and death, promotion of the welfare of the American public schools, and encouragement of Bible reading in them; and, besides the good fellowship between its members that is sought, the order seeks to build up and maintain its great National Orphans' Home.

Membership is limited to white males of at least 18 years, of good moral character, good physique, and who believe in a Supreme Being. Applicants must certify that they are not saloon keepers nor in any way connected with the manufacture, distribution or sale of intoxicants.

North Carolina, with more than 50,000 members, has taken kindly to the order, and Dr. Charles E. Brewer, president of Meredith college in Raleigh, is national vice councillor, and will succeed to a full councillorship next year.

Local officers include L. J. Phipps, councillor, Dr. S. A. Nathan, vice councillor; John Hocutt, chaplain; Jack McDade, conductor; C. P. Hinshaw, warden; John M. Foushee, financial secretary; Wade Jackson, recording secretary; George Hellen, assistant recording secretary; Rev. B. J. Howard, assistant recording secretary, and W. M. McCauley, junior past councillor.

Meetings are held in the Masonic hall on the first and third Friday evenings of each month, although during the the present membership drive, weekly meetings are being held. A large class of neophytes will be initiated this week.

Officers of the local order, who are prominent in University, civic and business affairs of Chapel Hill, have extended an invitation to all members of the order from other cities, who are now in college, to attend, and they have expressed the hope that eventually a considerable number of students will be on the rolls of the order.

Alumnus Awarded Physics Degree

J. F. Daughtery, head of the physics department of the University of Delaware and at one time an instructor in the University, successfully passed the examination for a doctor's degree in physics last Friday and Saturday.

While at the University Mr. Daughtery completed all the work for the degree except the thesis, and this was completed during the past two summers. Since leaving the University in 1926, he has been head of the physics department at Sewanee for three years, and last fall he took charge of the same department at the University of Delaware.

The research work done by Mr. Daughtery was in the field of the infra-red spectrum. Part of his thesis was published in the November issue of the Physical Review.

While at the University, Mr. Daughtery made an excellent record for himself particularly in the field of teaching, for he was considered an unusually good instructor.

The examining committee which gave the oral examination Saturday morning consisted of Dr. Hobbs, Dr. Lasley and Dr. Winsor of the mathematics department, Dr. Fussler, Dr. Plyler and Dr. Stuhlman of the physics department, and Dr. Bell of the chemistry department.

The officers of Le Cercle Francais, C. G. Taylor, president, and G. F. Cole, secretary, announce that the Victor record of Bizet's "Carmen," made by the artists of the Opera Comique of Paris, will be played at a forthcoming meeting. Students of French and music should note the date, to be announced later.

Community Club

There will be a regular community club meeting at the White Cross school house tonight at 7 o'clock. Bonner D. Sawyer of the University building department will deliver an address on "The Advantages which North Carolina Has and Offers to Its Citizens." The meeting begins at 7 p. m.

Debate Squad To Meet

The debate squad will hold its regular meeting tonight at 7:00 o'clock in 201 Murphey hall. Dr. J. H. Swartz, professor of geology, will deliver the last of the series of lectures on "Resolved: That modern science tends to destroy theistic faith."

Several announcements regarding the debate schedule and the coming try-outs will be made at the meeting tonight.

History Professors Writing Text Books

The History department is continuing its stride toward literary prominence with unusual vigor. The various members of the department are for the most part working on specialized subjects, but there are a few biographies and text books included.

Professor M. B. Garret is working on a translation from the French of Abbé Sieyes' pamphlet entitled "What Is the Third Estate?" Professor Garret has spent four years in compiling the information he has at hand and two years at the National Library in Paris ferreting out material concerning the Estates General during 1787-1789. The work will set the date of the beginning of the French Revolution two years back. Doubtless, it will revolutionize the teaching of the history of the French Revolution. Professor W. W. Pierson will contribute the scholarly introduction. The work is awaited with impatience by prominent historians throughout the country.

Dr. W. E. Caldwell is helping to complete a text book for History 5 and 6. Professor Olmsted, of the University of Chicago, is writing the Oriental History. Professor Wing, of the University of Dickenson, is writing the Roman History; and Dr. Caldwell is writing the Greek History. The book will appear this summer.

Other professors of the department are also writing books, but they decline to give any information on them because the details are indefinite.

Annual Staff to Meet

Travis Brown, editor, announces that there will be an important meeting of the editorial staff of the 1930 Yackety Yack this afternoon at two o'clock in the office in the basement of the Alumni building. All members must be present.

City Council Meets Tonight

At 7:30 tonight a meeting is scheduled to be held in the city hall to consider ap roposal made by Mrs. E. A. Brown, Chapel Hill property owner, to change the zoning plan and extend the territory in which fraternities may build.

Since the meeting is to be a public hearing, interested persons are invited to attend, according to John M. Foushee, city manager.

He will preach at the Chapel of the Cross at 11 a. m. Sunday. All who would like to meet him are cordially invited to the tea Sunday afternoon.

Murchison Criticizes Federal Reserve for Speculation Wave

to build up their reserve balances.

The situation has resulted in Reserve notes becoming largely a bond-secured currency, which is not at all in accord with the original intentions of the Federal Reserve methods. This marked tendency has its effect in the noticeable decline of the holdings of the eligible commercial paper and the great increase in the holdings of government bonds.

The article brings out the error and danger of the gold certificate, giving rise to the statement that "If recourse to emergency withdrawal of the gold certificates should become necessary in the future, in order to gain greater gold efficiency, the event would be practically certain to weaken public confidence in the soundness of the monetary structure."

Dr. Murchison emphasizes the interrelation of the Federal Reserve Bank with the market, alleging that "in actual practice open market operations supply from 20 to 30 per cent of the Reserve bank portfolios." This makes a detached point of view on its part impossible, and, so far from offering a stabilizing influence the bank's control seems as ineffectual as the market is weak. "Whatever may be said of the effectiveness of the Reserve banks during the recent panic period, their total ineffectiveness in checking the course of events which led to the panic is a matter of record."

The article closes with the suggestion that the market should be made self-balancing, and adds that our financial problems are by no means settled, in spite of the stock market collapse and the return of easy money. The suggestion is made also that more liquid credit be the chief objective for 1930.

"Our greatest danger is a credit shortage from frozen credits and gold exports, without compensatory advantage from expanding business." And in conclusion this statement is elaborated upon with: "It is clearly no time to have a fourth of our gold supply tied up in cumbersome gold certificates, half of our reserve credit resting on the ownership or collateral of government bonds and the safety margin of Federal Reserve lending power chronically narrowed by inflated holdings of open market paper acquired primarily in order to create the illusion of cheap money."

Extension News Announces Dates School Contests

garding the matter of the participation of their high schools and regarding the number of pupils whom they will have to enter the different contests."

The announcement also lists a number of general and particular instructions governing the procedure of the competition. Under "general regulations" it is stated that, 1. The contests will be conducted in all cases under the direct supervision of the superintendents, high school principals, or teachers in the schools; 2. The tests in all of these contests will be forwarded from Chapel Hill to the individual schools in sealed envelopes, which are not to be opened until the time when the examinations are given; 3. It will be necessary in each case that the indidual student give a pledge stating that no help has been given or received on the test; 4. Superintendents, principals, or teachers in charge of the contests will give assurance to the committee that the contests have been properly conducted and that all of the regulations and conditions pertaining to the contests have been adhered to."

Furthermore, the papers, as they are sent in, will be graded by faculty members of the various University departments. The University extension division will provide for the award of a trophy cup to each of the four high schools whos students submit the best papers. Honorable mention will be given to several schools whose students submit the next best papers.

Competition in the Latin, Spanish, and mathematics contests is limited to sudents in the sophomore, junior and senior classes. However, the French contest "is intended only for students in second year French who have had no special advantages nor private instruction in the language."

The examinations in the languages will be of a practical nature, enabling the students to show what facility they have acquired in handling vocabulary, grammar, construction and reading. The scope of the mathematics examination will include tests in arithmetic, algebra and plane geometry.

February 28 is the date set for the Latin contest throughout the state. All schools desiring to enter must notify the committee not later than the 24th, and on March 7 send in to the committee here the three best papers submitted in the local contests.

Corresponding dates for the other three contests are as follows: French—March 14, March 10 and March 21; Spanish—March 28, March 24 and April 4; mathematics—April 25, April 21 and May 2.

In 1929 Durham high school was the winner in the Latin contest, Lenoir in the French contest, Albemarle in the Spanish contest, and Rocky Mount in the mathematics contest.

"THE SHOW-OFF" WILL BE GIVEN AGAIN TONIGHT

Presentation of George Kelly's Comedy Will Be Given By Playmakers Here.

AGAIN SATURDAY NIGHT

The Carolina Playmakers presented their third production of the season, George Kelly's "The Show-Off," in the Playmaker theatre last night to an appreciative audience. The play will be repeated at 8:30 tonight and Saturday.

"The Show-Off," since its first presentation in New York in 1924, has been widely acclaimed as one of the finest American comedies. The author, George Kelly, won the Pulitzer prize with this play which he called "A Transcript of Life." The simplicity of its theme and the everyday characters and setting of a suburban family give it an undeniable appeal.

The cast is as follows:

Clara, George Wilcox; Mrs. Fisher, Penelope Alexander; Amy, Sara Falkener; Frank Hyland, Eveland Davies; Mr. Fisher, Joseph P. Fox; Joe, Whitner Bissell; Aubrey Piner, Richmond P. Bond; Mr. Gill, Descum B. Roberts; and Mr. Rogers, George E. Stone.

The University faculty orchestra is providing the musical program.

Quick Thinking Of Partin Saves House

More than a score of Dekes might have been cold today, if the olfactory nerves of one of them had not been so well developed.

Wednesday morning, as a fire burned merrily in the fireplace of Delta Kappa Epsilon, and its members were hurrying to classes, one of them smelled burning wood—and it seemed to be a different wood than that used for fuel.

Frank Partin, of the Chapel Hill fire department, was summoned, and found that the wall of the fireplace had been built so thinly that a hot fire had caused a smouldering of the walls behind the fireplace and inside the brick veneer.

There was a miniature wrecking scene, and the fireman applied chemicals to the embryonic conflagration. Partin is of the opinion that if the house had been deserted, and the fire become well started, it would have been difficult to locate and extinguish, and might have destroyed the house even while the fire department drenched the outside walls.

Home Department Community Club Meets With Mrs. George

Mrs. J. M. Couch reviewed Colonial Furniture in America by Lockwood before the home department of the community club yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. W. Critz George.

There will be a special meeting of the entire club this afternoon at 3:30 in the Episcopal parish house, at which time important business will be discussed.

DR. NOBLE VISITS HERE

Senior Smoker To Be February Sixth

The date of the senior class smoker has been set for Thursday, February 6. The smoker will be held in Swain hall. Tentative arrangements have been made with a speaker, but a definite acceptance has not yet been received.

At the smoker, the most important of the year, the senior superlatives whose names and pictures will be placed in the Yackety Yack will be chosen, and other matters taken up, for which a complete class attendance is necessary.

Cafeteria Suffers Little Damage In Early Morning Fire

Prompt discovery and quick, effective work by the fire department prevented a disastrous fire at the Welcome In Cafeteria early yesterday morning.

Damages were confined entirely to the furnace room, and these were quickly repaired by a corps of R. R. Benson's plumbers, so that the popular eating place was able to serve luncheon on schedule.

"There will be no necessity of closing down," Mrs. W. E. Trotman, proprietor, said last night. "Thanks to an efficient fire department, our kitchen and dining room were not damaged at all, and the damage to the furnace room was but slight.

"We shall do what little repairing is needed today and tomorrow, and will be able to stay open without missing a meal."

The fire, which broke out around the furnace, was discovered by Mrs. Trotman, who had the alarm turned in before the fire had made great headway.

The cafeteria force formed a brigade, armed with kitchen utensils, and were deluging the fire with water when the firemen arrived.

The firemen arrived on the scene and quickly had the situation in control. The fire is thought to have caught from rubbish in the cellar.

Ray Farris Praised

According to a letter received by Glenn Holder, editor of the Tar Heel, from Ursel C. Narver, president of the National Student Federation Association for 1929, Ray Farris, Carolina representative at the 1929 meeting, played an important part in the discussions and work of the recent Congress at Stanford University.

Narver says in his letter:

"The past officers and executive committee of the National Student Federation of America want the students of the University of North Carolina to know that your delegate, R. S. Farris, took a prominent part and made valuable contributions at the recent Congress at Stanford University.

"In addition to presenting campus problems and finding their possible solutions in conferences, delegates enthusiastically set up a program of expansion for the Federation. This program establishes a central office, an executive secretary and provides for the creation of a local N. S. F. A. committee on each campus. This action makes possible obtaining considerable outside support, the benefit of which will be felt on the campus of every member institution.

"The new officers will appreciate your continued support."

Chase, according to an announcement given out yesterday from the office of Felix A. Grisette, director of the fund. Leslie Weil of Goldsboro, chairman of the council, will preside at the meeting.

Reports of the activities of the fund during the last year, together with a discussion of its plans and policies of procedure for the coming year are expected to occupy the attention of the council members, the announcement said.

In addition to Mr. Weil, other members of the council are H. G. Baity, Chapel Hill; Allen J. Barwick, Raleigh; Dr. Chase; Burton Craig, Winston-Salem; Alfred W. Haywood, New York City; Dr. J. G. Murphy, Wilmington; Ira W. Rose, Rocky Mount; J. M. Saunders, Chapel Hill; W. T. Shore, Charlotte; C. R. Wharton, Greensboro; and Dr. L. R. Wilson, Chapel Hill.

STUDENT LOSES FATHER THROUGH RECENT DEATH

Oscar Dresslar has returned to Chapel Hill to resume his student work, after having been called to his home in Nashville, Tennessee, on account of the illness and subsequent death of his father, Dr. F. B. Dresslar, instructor in health building at George Peabody College in Nashville.

The elder Dresslar, who secured his bachelor's and master's degrees at Indiana, and his Ph.D. at Clark in 1895, was a classmate of President Harry W. Chase at the latter institution. Dresslar was an advisor of the United States government in the construction of the new type rural schools in the south.

Knight Writes Tale Of Noted Southern Negro, John Chavis

Professor Edgar W. Knight recently had an article in the Baltimore Sun Magazine on John Chavis, said to have been a full-blooded, free-born negro who was prominent in North Carolina early in the last century. There is a tradition that he was educated at Princeton. Although there is no evidence to support the belief that he was a student there, the institution has listed him as one of its non-graduates. There is a record, however, which shows that Chavis attended what is now Washington and Lee University. He was an able and highly respected minister in the Orange Presbytery by which he was licensed. Chavis had a school in Raleigh to which some of the best families sent their sons.

RUSSELL POTTER TALKS TO FROSH

That the ideas of the student and those of modern business may vary on the subject of grades was shown in a short chapel talk by Russell Potter, assistant dean of the graduate school, yesterday morning.

Speaking on the subject, "A Gentleman's Grade," Mr. Potter, instead of defining the term himself, called attention to common meanings those concerned have placed upon it. He related some incidents to show the student viewpoint. Students have been known to content themselves with D because it is a "gentleman's grade." Others, however, have more recently raised this more or less uncertain standard to C.

A paragraph from a letter from Proctor and Gamble Company climaxed Mr. Potter's talk. The content of this paragraph was to the effect that Proctor and Gamble Company is interested in employing college graduates who have an average of at least B. This statement Mr. Potter named the demand of modern business.

Without commenting on the fixing of a material standard, the speaker offered point-blank and left for comparison by the individual these definitions of a "gentleman's grade."

Newspaper Institute As A Wet Gathering Was A Complete Flop

By R. W. MADRY

"Well, I see you're going to have a press convention over at Chapel Hill next week, and I suppose that means that you'll have a bunch of drunks on your hands."

Those words were uttered by a newspaper friend of mine as we sat in the Sir Walter Hotel lobby one night five years ago discussing everything in general and nothing in particular.

"Well, I don't know," I replied. "I haven't been back in the state long, and I've yet to attend my first newspaper convention. But you come over to the Hill next week and we'll see what happens."

"All right, I'll be right there," he responded, "but I'll bet it's going to be some more wet party!"

The following week the annual newspaper institute convened here at the state University, and, in view of my friend's admonition, I was a bit surprised to find that at the opening session, which was on a Wednesday night, everybody appeared to be cold sober.

As It Was in New York

At the time I had not long since returned to this state from a sojourn of two years in New York City, where it was an open secret that liquor did,—and, I understand, still does — flow quite freely wherever folks were accustomed to get together for banquets or conventions and the like. I don't recall having seen liquor on any of the menus, but as a rule aperitifs and follow-ups were quite accessible to all who indicated a desire.

My job as a reporter for one of the New York papers required that I attend a considerable number of these banquets and conventions, and I soon became so accustomed to the little anteroom conclaves that accompanied the main events that they ceased to arouse my curiosity. Before going to work in New York I had spent two years on an American newspaper in Paris, which fact likely was an addi-

Soph-Frosh Fight

The executive committee of the freshman class asks that all of the class of '33 come out in full force this morning during chapel period in order to make good the challenge to the sophomore class to a snowball fight. The fracas will take place between Old East and Old West.

All sophomores who are interested in answering the challenge of the freshmen to a snowball fight are asked to gather in front of the Well during chapel hour. The challenge calls for a fight for that time to take place in the vicinity of the Well.

FARRIS RECEIVES COMMUNICATION FROM VA. GIRLS

Ray Farris, president of the student body, received a letter from the president of the student government of Sweet Briar College to the effect that all Carolina students who have dates with students at Sweet Briar leave the campus at the appointed time, and bring their dates back punctually.

According to the president of the Sweet Briar student body, the girls are responsible for the actions of their dates while on the Sweet Briar campus and that the girls will be held responsible for any misdemeanor of the boys while on the grounds of Sweet Briar College.

In relation to this, a clipping from the Washington and Lee Ring Tum Phi is of interest:

"An official communication from Sweet Briar authorities states that through a vote of the student body, the girls have assumed individual responsibility for their dates, and under these conditions Washington and Lee men are restored to their former status on the Sweet Briar campus.

Lewis Powell has said that since this is the only word received from the Lynchburg school he would infer that the ban had been lifted both in so far as Washington and Lee men's going to Sweet Briar is concerned, and as the girls' coming here is concerned.

"Although dates have been exchanged between the two schools since the Christmas holidays, this is the first formal word or the subject. The communication read as follows:

"President of the Student Govt.

"Dear Sir:

"The student body of Sweet Briar has voted to take the responsibility for the conduct of their dates while on the Sweet Briar campus. We would appreciate it if you would communicate to the students that this step has been taken, and impress it upon them that any misdemeanor on their part will go doubly hard on the girls whom they have come to see.

Sincerely yours,
"Alice Blake, secretary."

WILLIAM BEEBE LECTURES HERE IN SWAIN HALL

Noted Deep Sea Authority Gives Illustrated Talk Under Auspices Student Entertainment Committee.

HAS LARGE AUDIENCE

William Beebe, noted lecturer, explorer and naturalist, presented an illustrated travelogue, "Beneath Tropic Seas," last night in Swain hall as a feature of the student entertainment program.

The speaker enhanced his talk greatly by showing fascinating moving pictures and colored lantern slides of scenes recorded on the voyages of the Arcturus to remote places of the world. Mr. Beebe received the cooperation of the Bell Telephone Co. and the U. S. Marines for his explorations, and these aided in the difficult task of securing rare deep sea specimens. Thus the divers were able to telephone their discoveries to the surface, while the marines used aeroplanes to rush delicate fish to laboratories for investigation.

Mr. Beebe is a very entertaining author, and many of his books such as "The Arcturus Adventure," "Galapagos — World's End," "The Edge of the Jungle," and "Jungle Days," may be found in the University library.

Fraternity Averages For Fall Announced

The fraternity scholastic averages for the fall quarter of this year were announced yesterday by the registrar's office.

Of the 36 fraternities and sororities, 26 of them had averages higher than that of the general academic average of 3.48 while 16 of them attained average grades of more than 3.32, the fraternity average.

The sorority, Chi Omega, led the list with an average of 1.67. Their membership, however, is extremely small as compared to other organizations. Among those in the first ten in order of their scholastic grades for the fall quarter are, in order: Chi Omega, Sigma Delta, Acacia, Pi Beta Phi, Zeta Psi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Sigma, Phi Gamma Delta and Chi Phi.

For the corresponding period in 1928, 3.21 was the average grade for the fraternities, while 3.44 was the average academic grade.

Tar Heel Topics

Our definition of a janitor: A man who acts crazy with the heat when the rest of us are freezing.

Our negro janitor, who wears on the end of a string tied around his neck the left hind foot of a white rabbit killed in a graveyard at midnight with the full moon shining, doesn't like Professor Ferger's suggestion that a 13-month calendar be adopted.

What with a 6-inch snow on the ground and sophisticated collegians falling back upon their last cold-weather resort, flannel undies, the spring suit salesman who is exhibiting his samples at Andrews-Henninger today must be an incurable optimist—or a second Art Shires.

The University prof reported in yesterday morning's Tar Heel as having suffered a slight injury to his head while chasing chickens, is evidently a lucky cuss. A slight—or heavy—knock on the head is always preferable to what a chicken chaser usually receives—a bust in the bankroll.

Snowball Warriors And Busted Windows

With the campus sheeted under the heaviest snowfall since the record breaker of March 4, 1929, snowball battles wrestling bouts, bleeding ears and the tinkle of falling glass were much in evidence yesterday. Meanwhile, the buildings department was preparing bad news for the occupants of rooms with windows broken in the numerous snowball free-for-alls.

Dormitory room occupants are held responsible for all broken windows, even though the damage is done while they aren't in the building. Each carelessly or purposely heaved snowball which crashes through one of Mr. University's dormitory windows means a few bucks out of somebody's pockets. And the buildings department moguls are absolutely not open to reason upon the subject of broken windows. The unfortunate whose windows are broken while he is away may beat his brow and wail to high heaven, but the unrelenting officials insistently demand that he dig down into the innermost reaches of his jeans; there is no alternative.

Until a few years ago every student paid a $5 breakage fee at the beginning of each quarter, but now all damage to rooms is charged to occupants. Prospective snowball warriors would do well to remember that fact before initiating their contemplated campaigns today.

The Activities Of The Bad Check Committee

A very large proportion of the nation's business is transacted on paper. Negotiable instruments have displaced currency to a considerable extent as mediums of exchange; more payments are made by check than in cash. With the development of the check system of exchange has come a serious problem—that of combating the activities of the pernicious species known as check flashers.

The report of the student council check committee to the dean of students, published in Tuesday's Tar Heel, testifies to the very effective functioning of the system in operation here for dealing with bad checks. 637 student checks have been returned to Chapel Hill merchants and business people since the opening of school in September, representing an amount of $4,276.07. The number of individuals involved was 292, or approximately 11.26 percent of the student body. In the same length of time during the term 1927-28, students presented 773 bad checks amounting to $6,211.11, involving from 10 to 15 percent of the student body. As further evidence of the improvement in the bad check situation here, we have learned from the Tar Heel files that five years ago this week University officials announced that 635 bad checks had been given by students during the fall quarter, amounting to $4,724.36. Thus it is seen that the bad check committee has succeeded in reducing the amount represented by bad checks given by students during the fall quarter three years ago, when the enrollment was practically the same that it is now, by about a third in comparison with the fall quarter this year, and the number of such checks by 136. In comparison with five years ago, when the enrollment was approximately 800 less than it was during the past fall quarter, the amount represented by bad checks was reduced by about $500. And this improvement was brought about despite the fact that the total number of checks given by students has increased at a rapid rate each year.

Local merchants are enthusiastic over the system in operation here. Several of them have reported to us that their losses from bad checks given by students have been reduced from amounts ranging between $500 to $2,000 yearly to less than $100 since the bad check committee began functioning.

Most bad checks are occasioned by careless mechanical errors on the part of those presenting them. Although lenient in dealing with first offenders, the bad check committee impresses upon the student the importance of care in his business transactions. Dishonesty is ferreted out and punished by the committee, and in its entire relations with bad check offenders it has a most beneficial effect, both for the student concerned and the person to whom the check is presented.

In every respect the bad check committee is performing highly valuable functions, and it is operating efficiently. The student council is not only assisting in fighting the bad check evil, which is menacing the entire economic system of the nation, but it is also contributing to the development of desirable traits of character in those upon whom it exerts a corrective influence through its bad check committee. Considerable credit and encouragement is due the committee.

When The Italians Talk Education

(H. J. G.)

Mussolini, the gentleman with the scowl and the ideas of his own, is once more demonstrating the modern use of Bismarck's famed iron heel. The most recent Encyclical letter of the Pope is on the subject of Education. But Mussolini finds the ideas of the Pope not altogether to his liking, and so, for almost the first time in two centuries, is suppressing them.

The Pope's letter appeared in a few of the more courageous Italian newspapers last week, but it was relegated to the rear pages among the want and patent medicine ads, and was much shortened.

Where the emphasis of education should be placed supplies the bone of contention. Mussolini, in keeping with his usual policy, demands that the State come first, the Home second, and the Church third. Quite naturally, the Pope believes that the Church should come first in education, the Home second, the State last. As things at present stand, Mussolini has much the best of the argument, for there is no one to rescind his order to have the State predominate in education, and no one to stop his suppression of Encyclical letters.

Just where education is most emphasized in this country is difficult to say. Church education differs with the various churches, and the education received in the home varies with the type of home from which the man or woman comes.

The teaching, famed in biography and story, received at a mother's knee seems to make the most impression and supply the greatest force for good throughout life, for it comes at the most impressionable period. The State would appear to come next in importance in this country, taking the child at an early age and continuing education until after the age of 20.

Yet which institution reaches the child first and teaches most is not the important point. What the institution teaches is important. If the State instils its own ideas to the exclusion of everything else, it is harmful, and the same is true of the Church or Home. Let there be a happy mingling of the three, if possible, each in its place. The idea is Utopian, to be sure, but it is apparently more nearly reached in this country than in Italy. Times may be bad and money tight, but we have our blessings if only we stop to count them.

Readers' Opinions

CONCERNING THE HIGH COST OF BOOKS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I understand that about two years ago, as a result of persistent complaints from students, the excessive prices charged for books became the subject of a careful investigation. But we continue to be reminded at least fortnightly that nothing was done to remedy this situation.

I believe that the investigators declared that the cost of distribution of books could not be reduced. While not giving up attempts to obtain some reduction from that phase, might not the faculty be respectfully requested to use their influence with publishers to eliminate unnecessary features? Pictures, expensive cover designs, etc., may help to hold the interest of high school students, but should be eliminated from the books used here. I judge the savings thus effected would be from ten to forty per cent.

Another source of saving is possible in readers used in language courses. A dictionary is required in all the language departments after a certain number of courses have been passed. Therefore all subsequent readers should be obtainable at the Book Exchange without the vocabulary. At present, the students' vocabulary facilities are often times duplicated.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Francis Preston Venable

(By F. J. M.)

Editor's note: This is the fifth of a series of thumbnail sketches of prominent University men.

FRANCIS PRESTON VENABLE. He can look back upon a life three quarters of a century long—all but ten years or so spent in the field of chemistry and science.

Born in 1856 in Prince Edward county in Virginia, he early manifested his interest in chemistry. At the University of Virginia he concentrated his studies in the sciences. In addition, he seriously studied German and French, primarily German, for he knew that if he were to continue his work in chemistry, it would be necessary for him to go to Germany. It was while he was studying the modern languages that he first met William D. Toy, who now is head of the German department of the University.

In 1879, after finishing at U. Va., he proceeded to the University at Bonn, in Germany, where he was greatly helped by the eminent chemist, Kekue, under whom he studied. From there he proceeded to the University at Cologne.

At Bonn and at Cologne, it was necessary for the applicant to write his thesis in Latin, as well as to answer the questions that were asked him by the examiners in Latin. Realizing that he knew more German than Latin, Dr. Venable decided to take his examination at Gottingen. Besides knowing chemistry, it was essential for the young Virginia applicant to hire a frock coat and striped trousers and in addition buy a dinner, with all the old-fashioned accoutrements, for the board of examiners. There were twelve of them. Dr. Venable didn't mind buying the food but he did think that the professors could have offered him a portion during the examination.

In 1880, Francis Venable came to the University as professor of chemistry. It is a far cry from the small, almost insignificant department that chemistry was then to the large, well-equipped, efficient department that is now housed in one of the best laboratories in the south—Venable Hall.

Those years in which he was so instrumental in building up his department of the University were years of work . . . and pleasure. Chemistry and scientific pursuits were not only his work but his hobby and recreation. In 1883, in company with others who felt that a creative discussion group was necessary if the University was to fulfiill he founded the Elisha Mitchell Society and was its first president.

Many were the contributions that he made to chemistry. The one that had greatest result was that in which he changed the basis of weighing chemical elements. Many journals, here and abroad, published papers that were written by him.

In 1900, Francis Preston Venable became president of the University. In those days, the president wrote all his letters himself, took care of the executive duties without assistants, and bore the major part of the burden of carrying on the work of the institution. It wasn't until President Venable's journey to Raleigh, accompanied by a horde of students who filled the galleries of the state capitol at Raleigh and cheered their president's demands that the state lend strong financial support to the University, that the state treasury commenced apportioning funds for the use of the oldest state university in the country.

In 1913, the cares of office proved to be too much for the president and when his physician stated that he had not more than a year to live, he resigned from the office. And when he presented his resignation to the board of trustees, he made a plea for greater assistance for the executive officer of the University.

As a young man, he had always been interested in athletics, often coaching the students. But with increased responsibilities and demands upon his time, he had to forego all exercise other than that of walking and gardening. For many years, he cut all fire-wood necessary for his home. He still thinks that it is absolutely necessary for one to maintain his physical well-being in order to carry on his work.

His eyes have held out exceptionally well and he uses glasses today merely as preventive for over-strain. He has stopped trying to keep up with the newest developments in chemistry, for he feels that chemistry has become a much greater and more complex subject than it was when he was so vitally interested in it. Nevertheless, he manages to keep in contact with new movements.

He finds that modern methods in teaching science are much better than the old ways. They teach with the intent to instruct the student in using information, rather than in mere memorizing of facts and formulas.

Fever Heat Interest Is Being Shown As Tar Heels Prepare For Duke Basketball Contest

Duke Favored But Tar Heels Show Much Improvement In Recent Games.

DUKE HAS VETERANS

Both Teams Have Many Tall Stars; Harper vs. Croson; White Phantoms Work On Passing Attack.

Basketball interest on the University of North Carolina campus was at fever heat today as the Tar Heel quint, Tuesday night victors over N. C. State's southern champions, began to set and perfect its defense for Saturday night's home game with Duke, which is expected to prove a classic of the North Carolina season.

Preceding the varsity game, which will start at 8:30, the Carolina and Duke freshmen will engage in a contest that is to start at 7 o'clock.

Graduate Manager Charles T. Woollen is making preparations to seat a big crowd. It is likely that extra stands will be erected at both ends of the big court.

Duke Great on Offense

Duke, with perhaps the greatest offensive team in the conference, is regarded as probably the most formidable opponent on the remainder of the Tar Heel schedule.

With none but rookie forwards, the Tar Heels opened an unimpressive season with a 22-20 loss to Davidson. They gathered steam slowly, as Neiman, Dameron and Cleland began to show skill at forward, and as the fine defensive work of the whole team began to be apparent.

The Tar Heels were far from perfect in the floor work in the game with State. Their passing at times was erratic and they seemed to handle the ball rather loosely. These departments Coach Ashmore hopes to improve considerably between now and Saturday, for, although comparative scores indicate that the two teams are equal in strength, the belief is that Carolina will have to play a little better game against Duke than against State in order to win Saturday.

The seeds of Coach Jim Ashmore's basketball craft bore first fruit in an impressive win from Wake Forest—by a 4-point larger margin than Duke beat the Deacons. Then against State, in which the Tar Heels were conceded only an outside chance, the up-and-coming youngsters outgamed and outfought the champions for a 27-25 victory.

The Duke game will tell the tale of whether the Tar Heel youngsters are to go soaring upward into the traditional realm of greatness of Tar Heel quints, which have won four southern conference titles and several state titles in the last eight years.

In a comparative score way, the teams will be evenly matched Saturday night. Carolina had a 4-point better margin than Duke against Wake Forest. Duke had a 2-point better margin against State.

Veterans vs. Ambitious Rookies

In the matter of veteran strength, Duke will pack a big advantage. Farley, Councillor, Croson and Werber are all veterans and there are other veterans for Rogers' forward berth, but the sophomore was good enough to beat them out. Carolina will have veterans at center and the guards in Harper, Brown and Marpet, but Neiman and Dameron, to man the forwards, are both rookies.

Experience will be pitted against youth and ambition.

CANDIDATES FOR GOLF TEAMS ARE WORKING DAILY

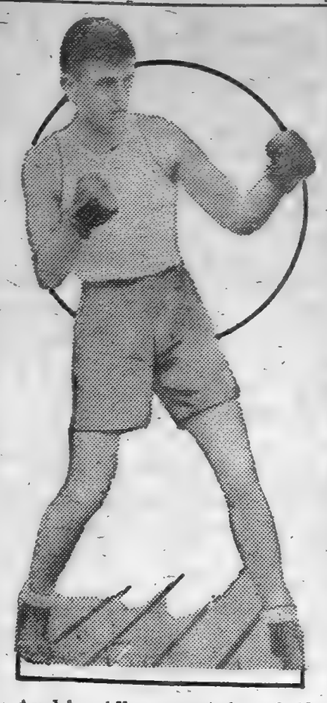
Aspirants Led by Captain Charlie Chatham; Freshman Team To Play 3 or 4 Matches.

Led by Captain Charlie Chatham, between 35 and 40 aspirants to the golf team, both varsity and freshman, are working out daily in the Tin Can. There is a wealth of promising material available, and Coach Kenfield is expecting to develop a team even better than last year's state champions. He is, however, looking for other promising candidates.

Meade Willis, last year's state intercollegiate champion, is showing great form, and great things are expected of him this spring. Luther Stewart, a veteran of three years' experience on the team, is looking better than ever before. Two of the best golfers on the Hill, Al Brown and Paul Carter, will not be eligible this year on account of being transfers, but are expected to do great things next year.

For the first time in the history of the University, there will be a freshman golf team this year, and three or four matches are to be scheduled for the first-year team. Among the most promising aspirants to the freshman team are Chester Brown, Joel Adams, Raymond Chatham, Fred Laxton and W. J. O'Brian.

Coach Kenfield stated that the period from 3:30 to 4 o'clock every afternoon was set aside for beginners, and that instruction would be given to all men who would report at that time.



THREE TRACK STARS ON CAROLINA QUINT

The Tar Heel quint that starts against Duke in Saturday night's battle in the Tin Can here will probably show star track performers at three of five berths. Puny Harper, 6 foot 6 center, has been all-southern discus heaver for two years. Dameron, forward, is a shot and discus man. Dave Neiman, forward, was a star vaulter and broadjumper last season, and came within inches of leading the Tar Heel trackmen in scoring.

ASHMORE WILL USE TWO FORWARD COMBINATIONS

Jim Ashmore, Tar Heel basketball coach, is hoping to offset the Duke quint's speed by the use of four forwards in Saturday night's home battle. Dave Neiman and Sandy Dameron will probably get the starting call for the Tar Heels, with Tom Cleland and Johnny Greene to be alternated.

Boxers' Captain

Archie Allen, captain of the boxing team and Southern Conference champion in the lightweight division, has won both his fights this season by a good margin. His victory over Mehaffey of V. P. I. Saturday night was one of his best performances.

WRESTLERS ARE READY FOR MEET WITH VA. POLY

Made Good Showing Against Navy Despite Loss; V.P.I. Have Downed State.

IN BLACKSBURG SATURDAY

Repulsed in their opening meet with the Navy by a count of 22-8, the Tar Heel wrestlers are working hard this week in preparation for Saturday night's meet at Blacksburg, Va., with V. P. I., conquerors of N. C. State.

The Tar Heels lost a number of close decisions in the Navy meet, especially Captain Woodard in the 135-pound class and Marion Cowper in the 165-pound weight. Coach Chuck Quinlan thought the showing good despite the loss, and is hoping to get his team on the winning side in the meet with the strong Gobblers.

Tryouts will be held according to custom two or three days before the meet to select the Tar Heel wrestlers who will face the Gobblers.

The same lineup that faced Navy is the most probable, with Ferguson shifted from the 175 pound class to heavy; and Houghton wrestling the 175-pound class; Cowper, 165; Moore, 155; Tsumas, 145; Captain Woodard, 135; Stallings, 125; and Bell, 115.

The men who have been doing the best work and seem most likely to beat one of the older men out for a berth are Zealy and Albright, 135-pounds; Sanders and Taylor, 145-pounds; and Spell, 155 pounds.

The Tar Baby grapplers will accompany the varsity and meet the V. P. I. freshmen in their first test with an out-of-state team.

A racer is being built in Wolverhampton, England, which has 24 cylinders. It will be capable of developing 4,000 horsepower and attaining a speed of 300 miles an hour.

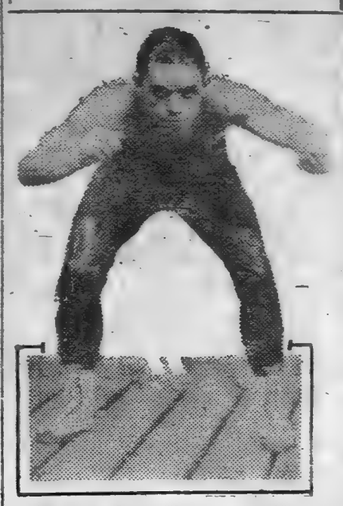
SIDELIGHTS

by "Heinie"

THE NEW GOLF-NET which has been erected in the Tin Can seems to be attracting an unusual amount of attention. The interest that is being shown in this new "no-hole golf course" seems to promise improved equipment and more interest when practice is begun out of doors in the spring. Coach Kenfield has been giving personal instruction to nearly all of those using the golf-net for practice and, according to reports, everyone is "cordially invited to attend."

COACH Kenfield announces that arrangements are being made with Georgia, Georgia Tech and Alabama for meets in the spring. In addition to these it is expected that about five other meets will be arranged. The Southern Conference golf tournament will probably be held in Atlanta on May 1, 2 and 3. In addition to those meets being arranged for the varsity, it is understood that the freshmen will have a team this year for the first time and several meets are planned for them.

THREE OF LAST YEAR'S varsity have returned this year and are practicing at the Tin Can. Charlie Chatham is assisting Coach Kenfield in running the golf-net, and in addition to Chatham, Luther Stewart and Meade Willis are out for "winter practice" in the Can.



THIS NEW INTEREST in golf is not limited to the Tin Can, however, for it seems that the halls of the dormitories are frequently used as fairways. According to many reports these narrow hallways serve as excellent practice courses for those possessed with the "golf bug."

FENCING AT CAROLINA is another sport which has recently aroused a large amount of interest. Tentative arrangements have been made with Georgia for a meet, and also with Alabama. Georgia has written and requested a meet while the Tar Heel fencers are on tour. In addition to this meet the Alabama fencers, rival claimants for the Southern title, have been challenged, but nothing definite has been settled.

MUCH COMMENT has been aroused over the recent boxing bouts with V. P. I. Many of the spectators misunderstood the result of Evan Vaughan's bout, which resulted in a technical knockout of Evan. According to the ringside spectators, Vaughan was withdrawn from the fight due to injuries received when he bumped heads with his V. P. I. opponent. In the course of the bout, Evan rebounded from the ropes and hit his head against Meadows', of V. P. I. The injury received in this collision was sufficient to render Vaughan incapable of continuing with the bout, and Meadows won by a technical knockout. The rules allowed a three-minute time-out to be called but the injury was too great to enable Vaughan to resume the fight at the end of that time.

A hick town is a place where the man with a fresh shine on Friday is a traveling salesman.

Captain Woodard

Wayne Woodard, captain of the mat squad, lost his first match of the year to Goodman of Navy Saturday night by a time decision. His performances last year were all very creditable, and he is expected to show up well in the coming bouts.

FRESHMAN QUINT LOSES CONTEST TO DURHAM HIGH

Lineberger and Dunn Star In 31-28 Loss To Bull City Team.

Completely reversing their form of last Tuesday, the Tar Babies were upset by a hard fighting Durham five in a return match on the Durham floor, 31-28. The Durham boys were fighting all the way, and the whole high school team was hitting on all cylinders, rarely missing any of their shots.

Coach Enright started his regulars, and they rolled up a 13-2 lead at the end of the first quarter. With the seconds in, the Bulldogs started a rally that put them ahead at half time, 17-16. The Durham boys inspired by their great showing played heads up basketball, and when the final whistle blew were ahead 31-28. Carolina's forwards, Dunn and Hines, showed up exceptionally well scoring 8 and 7 points respectively. Lineberger led both teams with his defensive work at guard. Holloway was the 10 markers; Edwards and Tilly also played well for the victors.

Dunn (8)		Edwards (6)
	Right Forward
Hines (7)		Tilly (8)
	Left Forward
Beale (5)		Harris (3)

BOXERS TO MEET CADETS WITHOUT TWO VETERANS

Warren and Vaughan On Sick List; Other Stars Will Be Ready For Tough Engagement.

FIGHT IN LEXINGTON, VA.

The Southern Championship Tar Heel boxers may be without the services of two of their ablest veteran performers in Saturday night's important test with the V. M. I. Cadets at Lexington, Va.

Evan Vaughan, 115-pounder, and John Warren, a 175-pounder, have both been in the Infirmary all week with colds, and there is little chance that either will be in shape.

The loss is a heavy one to Coach Crayton Rowe's squad. Warren, bother of the famous "K. O." Warren, has won both his bouts in the Tar Heels' two meets this year. Vaughan, the only bantam in the camp, won his first match and was looking good in his second until a collision of heads made it impossible for him to continue.

Coach Rowe said today that either Frank Smathers or Bob Avery, 160-pounders, would be shifted up to Warren's post, but that the Tar Heels would probably have to fight without a bantam.

The remainder of the lineup will probably be the same as participated in 5-2 victories over Washington and Lee and V. P. I., with the veteran 125-pounder, Harry Sheffield, out of the V. P. I. matches with a pulled ligament, to return to the lineup.

Noah Goodridge will box in the 135-pound class again, Captain Archie Allen will hold down the 145-pound class, Obie Davis will square off with the V. M. I. 160-pounder, and Bill Koenig, 190-pound football star, will again hold down the heavy berth.

Goodridge, Captain Allen, Davis, and Warren are undefeated for the season, and all but the incapacitated Warren will be fighting to keep their season slates clean against the strong Cadets.

The Freshmen will accompany their varsity brothers to take on the V. M. I. Freshmen. It will be the Tar Babies' second meet, they having previously lost a 5-3 argument to Washington and Lee's Frosh. The lineup will probably be Levinson, 125; Gaylord, 135; Jackson, 145; Patterson, 160; Landis, 175; and Wilson, heavy.

DON JUANS HAVE EXPERIENCE WITH SNOW IN DURHAM

Mistake Open Field for Highway; 2 Taxis, 4 Whites, and 2 Negroes Come to Rescue.

(By J. J. Dratler)

It sure is rotten weather that does no one some good. Three of our more daring students ventured out into the blinding snowstorm of last night to liven up the dull hours of the damsels in Durham. They arrived in Durham safely and two of them left the third at the home of a well known girl with promises to return at 11 or 12 after their dates.

Time flew — as time does —and, since the girl had orders to dismiss her visitor at 11:30, the couple showed some concern when at 1:30 the aforesaid two had failed to return. Needless to say, the third Romeo did not fail to take advantage of his additional time with his inamorata.

At 2:30, a loud knocking on the door heralded the appearance of two soaking wet, partially "high" young men. They had, it seems, tried to cross an open field with the car, thinking they were on a road. They stuck —and how! It took two taxicabs, four additional white men, and two negroes to get them out. Between heaves they invited themselves into a neighboring funeral parlor and—sitting on some very decorative coffins—guzzled fire-water to keep warm.

The most-befuddled of the two explorers finally decided that he would under no circumstances attempt to return to Chapel Hill in such weather. His friends assisted him to a hotel and themselves returned to Chapel Hill without mishap.

The lucky one still insists that his friends purposely remained away—despite their cursing negations—to enable him to make better headway, because they are his "pals."

At The Carolina

She has been called the darling of the New York stage. Dramatic critics have written hundreds of thousands of words about her, lauding her as an artist of the first rank. She was the star of Ziegfeld's original "Show Boat." In that colorful production, critically acclaimed the finest musical show ever seen on Broadway, she perched on a piano and sang mournfully about her "Bill" and "What Wouldn't I Do For That Man." At the present writing she is the reason for the sensational success of Broadway's newest musical show, "Sweet Adeline." But more than anything else, she is a talented actress who must sing while sitting on a piano simply because her public will not have it any other way. But there are persistent rumors that next year she will be starred by a noted producer in a dramatic role. From authoritative sources it is known that her ambition is to play "Camille."

"Applause," features a cast of distinguished actors and actresses drafted from the legitimate stage. All of them are skilfully cast and give superb performances. "Applause," will be shown at the Carolina Theatre today.

Mosley Describes Work

Alan Mozley, instructor in the department of Zoology, is at present engaged in a research project for the Geological Survey in the Hudson Bay and McKenzie drainage region of Canada. He is making a study of the mollusks, snails, clams, etc., including fossils of the inter-glacial and post-glacial periods. His material is obtained around the latitude 54, the northernmost deposit known. From a study of the material he is attempting to discover what animals inhabit this region, why they are found there, and how they got there.

"Up there the fishing is pretty good. You don't use bait. Just throw in your hook. Minnows are so thick that one will get caught on it immediately. Then along comes a perch that tries to eat the minnow. He in turn provides bait for a trout. Then a sturgeon, or maybe a whitefish, suffers the fate of the rest. This goes on indefinitely until the line breaks or you pull it in. And it certainly does get cold. The Eskimos don't blow out their lamps—they take pliers and pry off the flame.

"The study of snails may appear to be academic and uninteresting. Yet there are many adventures and dangers associated with the work. Where I go every summer the temperature sometimes goes as low as 70 degrees below zero. Wild animals are plentiful. One morning before breakfast five bears strolled into camp. These animals are really quite a nuisance at times. On one trip of about a fortnight in length I counted fifty moose. Smaller game is very abundant and the air is almost a thin soup of mosquitoes. A man could keep from starving to death by eating mosquitoes if he ran out of provisions.

"I usually travel alone either on horseback, canoes, or on foot —usually on foot. The terrain is roughly mapped, but I have been in many places where no white man ever set foot before, and where few Indians have been. There are tracts of virgin land five and ten thousand square miles in area which have never been explored or mapped.

"The study which I am engaged in might be called animal sociology. It is a study of geographical distribution and animal life in the eastern part of Canada, with emphasis upon the effects of heredity and environment. These factors I have found to influence mollusks, which are used as an index to the remaining animal life of the region, in varying proportions. Only about two per cent of the snails found in this part of the country are the species which I am interested in. The best material is difficult to obtain, necessitating travel over large plains, up and down steep mountains, and, most dangerous of all, through swift rapids. Several times I narrowly escaped drowning."

The results of Mr. Mozley's study are not at present complete, but will be published in the near future.

COMMUNITY CLUB MUSIC DEPARTMENT MEETS

The music department of the community club met yesterday afternoon at 3:30 in room 9, Person hall. Mrs. F. H. Edmister presented a program of modern English vocal and instrumental music.

At the same time the Sketch Club held its meeting in the home of Mrs. W. E. Caldwell, 412 Rosemary lane. The afternoon was devoted entirely to sketching, since the paper on Winslow Homer, scheduled to have been read, was held over for some future meeting.

Wilson Works in Naples

Professor H. V. Wilson, of the department of zoology, on leave at present, is studying in a very interesting place according to Dr. R. E. Coker, who corresponds with him. The zoological station at Naples, where Professor Wilson is engaged in research connected with the embryology of sponges, is one of the oldest and most important biological laboratories in the world, and was for a long time the most famous. It has no connection with any university but has international support, receiving contributions from governments and public institutions of various countries.

The size and completeness of the equipment led some to protest at the founding of the station that all desirable information would be discovered immediately, leaving nothing for the next generations to do in that line. The aquarium in connection with the laboratory, although only a part of a large organization, is of sufficient fame to be known to travelers in Naples as The Aquarium.

The station is a sort of meeting place for the zoologists of all countries. Yet a great deal of work is accomplished, and useful results obtained. Professor Wilson, who has been there since September, writes that he remains busy most of the time.

ion, weakened the belief in the existence of a Creator. Rather it has tended to accentuate the existence of an Omniscient One.

Universities, according to Dr. Venable, should cease to exist if they fail to continue as creative institutions. Universities must and should create.

Dr. Venable experienced a rather severe illness this fall and since that time has not been, as was his custom, at his office in Venable hall. However, when weather permits he still clings to his old habit of taking walks and manages, despite the effects of his illness, to maintain an active interest in the world about him.

Newspaper Institute As A Wet Gathering Was A Complete Flop

tional reason for my lack of excitement over the American ante-room parties.

From New York I had come back to Chapel Hill, where, as a student, I had got my toe-hold in the newspaper game. I had been out of the state for four years—long years they seemed, too — and, as was indicated above, I had yet to attend my first newspaper convention here or anywhere else; although I do recall having taken a look-in on the first newspaper institute held here in 1917.

It Was a Dry Party

Consequently when my friend told me that night in the Sir Walter to get ready for a bunch of drunks, I came back to Chapel Hill with the thought that if these newspaper people were expecting to do much drinking they had better bring along their own liquor. For Chapel Hill whiskey—if one may be pardoned for calling it that—had at that time, and still has, about the sorriest reputation in the state.

To make a long story fairly short, the newspaper institute as a wet party was a complete flop. Nobody seemed to have any liquor or to want any. Not a soul inquired of me the name of a Chapel Hill bootlegger. I did learn later that at least two or three drinks were imbibed during the three day sessions but those who did the imbibing must have been careful souls, for they never made themselves conspicuous by their presence.

Excepting ministers' and educators' conferences and meetings of women's groups that I have reported from time to time, this newspaper institute was, I believe, the driest convention I had ever attended. It didn't bear out the popular conception of what newspaper men were presumed to do on such occasions, and I wondered what the explanation might be. Perhaps it was the benign influence of Josephus Daniels or Rufe Clark or maybe Miss Beatrice Cobb had something to do with the situation.

Seeking the Explanation

I confessed to one of the brethren my surprise that none of the editors had yet come up and put his arm around me and sworn the sort of eternal affection that is inspired by something stronger than ice water.

"But you just wait until next summer, and then you'll see a frolic," he replied. "The Press Association has its summer meeting in June or July, you know, and then you'll see some of the boys cut up for fair. They're all on good behavior now, just because they're here at the University. They don't want to leave a bad impression with President Chase and the young boys who are growing into manhood here. But you just wait until the summer meeting comes around," he confided.

I went to the summer meeting that year, and I have attended every summer meeting and newspaper institute since then. But I must confess that the statements of my two informants mentioned above haven't been borne out by my own observations.

I still insist that, with the possible exception of the preachers, the teachers, and the women, these North Carolina newspaper folk probably hold the driest conventions in the state. And I say that with all due respect to the American Legionnaires and the Shriners.

This observation would have no news value were it not for the popular conception of the amount of liquor newspaper men are supposed to be able to tote without falling when they stump their toe—a conception that has much less foundation, in fact, now than it formerly did but one which, nevertheless, has been handed down from generation to generation without the modifications to which it has been entitled. Any oldtimer on the staff of papers in the metropolitan centers will tell you without hesitation that in the old days just about everybody in the shop got "high" along about midnight when the paper was being put to bed and that it was quite a mystery sometimes how the paper ever got out. But he will tell you in the same breath that it never failed to reach the subscriber the next morning and that it was a pretty good paper, too.

But such conditions no longer remain in first-class newspaper shops. The staff may get "high" now, but if they do, they wait until after the paper has been put to bed. And managing editors usually have little patience with members of the staff who insist on getting drunk on the job. I have been told that some 80 percent of the men on the editorial and reportorial staffs of the daily papers in this state now take a drink when they have the inclination. I can't vouch for those figures, but if such should be the case those who imbibe evidently do it with a bit more grace than in the olden days.

I am, however, about to let this yarn wander away from my original subject, which concerned North Carolina newspaper conventions. These conventions are attended mostly by the editors and publishers and other executives, although reporters and other members of all departments are always welcomed. In making the above observations about the apparent sobriety of this group I am not attempting to draw a moral or to make out a prima facie case for the Anti-Saloon League. It may turn out, in fact, that I don't know what I'm talking about; that, as one man opined, "these big boys keep on their good behavior at these conventions because they want to set good examples for the hired help." I frankly confess that I have no idea what percentage of these men would take a drink were they protected by all the privacy in the world. In fact, I'm not concerned with that. In recording these observations I've merely considered myself in the role of a reporter, and as a reporter I think these facts would be interesting because they will likely prove a revelation to a great many people. A reporter is not supposed to express opinions in a news story, and I've tried to follow that rule. And therefore it must be recorded, whether you like it or not, that North Carolina newspaper conventions are what temperance unions might be pleased to call "models of sobriety." As strange as it may seem!

HOBGOOD CHOSEN FROM U ORATORS TO ENTER FINALS

Contest For Legion Prize Offered University Students Also Attracts E. C. Daniel, Jr.

Hamilton Hobgood will represent the University in the state oratorical contest being sponsored by the American Legion. He was the winner over E. C. Daniel, Jr. in the tryout last night. The contest was held in Gerrard in the presence of the judges.

Two prominent Chapel Hill legionaires were on the judging committee: R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, and J. O. Harmon, manager of Swain hall. Mr. George McKie, professor of public speaking, was the third judge.

"Our Flag," as chosen by the Legion committee, was the subject of both speeches. The winning speech traced the development of the American flag from savage beginnings, and explained the symbolism of the stars and stripes as it is known today.

Hobgood has previously identified himself in public speaking as the state champion in the national and international oratorical contest two years ago, and as a member of the University debating teams meeting the teams of Marquette, Harvard, and State College. He is also a member of the Phi society. On February 22 he will compete with the representatives from other colleges and universities in the state for a prize of $50.

Daniel, a freshman, has previously participated in the high school division of the Legion contest. Last year he was declared winner of the Wake county contest in the international competition sponsored by the newspapers of the nation, and was entered in the state finals.

ASTRONOMY WILL BE OFFERED HERE

The Course Will Be Taught For First Time In Two Years.

Dr. Otto Stuhlman, head of the physics department, announced yesterday that physics 14, a course in astronomy, will be offered during the spring quarter under the instruction of Dr. K. H. Fussler.

Under the direction of Dr. H. A. Patterson, late dean of the school of applied science, this course was one of the most popular on the campus. At times there were more than a hundred registered for the course.

The course offered will be one of historical and descriptive astronomy for which there will be no pre-requisites nor will it involve any mathematics. The course is to be a freshman-sophomore elective, but cannot be taken to fulfill the requirements for a required science course nor will it be recognized as a course fulfilling the requirements for a science major.

Dr. Fussler, who is to teach the course, is well qualified for the position, for he has taken work in astronomy at the Kirkwood Observatory which is attached to the University of Indiana and also taught astronomy at the U. S. Shipping Board School of Navigation in Philadelphia during the World War.

Wisconsin Students Ask Dean of Men To Hand In Resignation

Madison, Wis., Jan. 31.—(IP)—A pole of student opinion at the University of Wisconsin has been taken by the Cardinal, undergraduate newspaper, to determine if the students wish to have abolished the office of dean of men.

The poll was the latest move in the war opened by several groups against Scott M. Goodnight, dean of men, who recently caused the dismissal from college of a couple found spending the night together.

Professor W. E. Leonard has protested to President Glenn Frank that Dean Goodnight has become a "campus constable" and that the dean's action in discovering the couple was "an entry into the bridal chamber." The students were married a short time after the incident and Leonard said they already had exchanged wedding rings.

Leonard and Goodnight both made statements, the dean of men defending his action and denying he forced his way into the apartment. President Frank has taken no action. The dean of women, Miss F. Louise Nardin, entered the battle by asserting support of Leonard would be support of free love.

The Daily Cardinal printed ballots to learn what the sentiment of students is.

A weekly round table of 100 student leaders censored the expulsion of the two students but declared the student leaders did not believe the dean's office should be abolished.

Chief Lloyd Gets Spoiler Of Record

Bradshaw Massey, 30, colored, who last week escaped from Police Chief L. B. Lloyd and spoiled a record of nine year's standing during which time Lloyd had never lost a prisoner, is again in the hands of the law.

Wednesday night Chief Lloyd, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff G. A. Hearne and officers U. M. Rackley and C. H. Wright, surrounded a negro home where Massey was believed to be hiding, closed in.

The negro was strong, and he did not care to be arrested. Some time was required to subdue him, but he was finally handcuffed and brought to the local jail.

The next morning he was tried for illegal possession and sale of liquor, and, although he pleaded "not guilty" was held guilty by Judge C. P. Hinshaw.

Yesterday he began a visit of six months with the county road crew.

Paddle Business Is Declining This Year

"Carolina fraternities are much too easy on their pledges this year. The old, hard days of a few years ago were better," according to D. S. Long, hardware merchant, cabinet maker, and Chapel Hill Paddle King.

"In spite of the fact that we have reduced the prices of our paddles from 25 cents to 20 cents, and increased their weight and quality, the demand is falling off alarmingly.

"Something should be done," said Long in a recent interview, "or the paddle business will be a thing of the past. During the season of 1927-28 we made and sold 700 paddles. During the year of 1928-29 the total was 400, and this year so far orders have not exceeded 150."

Back In Those Good Old Times When Frosh Knew Their Places

(By K. P. Yarborough)

In this modern day and time, the presence of a heavy snow on the University grounds means no more to the average freshman than to his fellow students higher up—save, perhaps, a more or less vicious contest with his immediate superiors, the sophomores. But such was not always the case. Back in the olden days of Chapel Hill, when Dr. Venable was president of the University, and Dr. Chase was still a lanky young instructor at Dartmouth, when T. R. occupied the seat of Herbert Hoover, and the great majority of the present generation of seekers after truth were yet unborn,—back in the good old days,—the slow falling of snow boded no good for first year hopefuls.

The University then numbered its inhabitants by the hundreds, and everybody knew everybody else. Especially well were the freshmen known. An unfortunate member of this class, spotted as soon as he came into the vicinity of his betters, was mercilessly snowballed, and his only defense was flight. Occasionally, when sufficiently large numbers of freshmen were gathered together, the worm would turn, or would make the attempt. But, for the most part, the lot of the poor frosh was hard.

And interesting story is told of those days. Two students who had entered the University as sophomores had made themselves offensive to their classmates by their aggressive assumption of all the privileges and rights of second year men, including that of pelting freshmen with snowballs. To teach this duet a lesson, a band of fellows, one snowy day, set them upon a certain professor as he was emerging from what was then the library (the present Playmaker building), and the too-willing two, under the delusion that said prof was a freshman, attacked him with a volley of snowballs, chased him for a distance, and left him thoroughly shaken up.

Their dismay, when they were told of their victim's identity, may be imagined. Meanwhile, a junior employed in President Venable's office sent to each of the "sophomores" a letter in which their "shameful" treatment of a member of the faculty was referred to a full explanation to the latter. Both letters were signed "the President." To the indignant pro-

Dr. Bagby Explains Lack Of Interest In Class Routine

"Long dreary classes," said Dr. English Bagby to his Psychology 1 class yesterday, "will end just as quickly as students learn to be articulated."

Bagby deplored the present conditions, wherein college instruction is on a very low level, due to the fact that students have no way of expressing their appreciation of good teaching. As a result, he pointed out, no good professor can afford to prepare his own lectures, if he cares to advance financially, for he becomes known to other institutions who might pay him more money, only through his investigation, writing and research.

Students will, in time, make themselves heard in the realms where power lies, and then good instruction will come.

"When Dean Hibbard was in Japan," said Bagby, "he was mortified one morning upon being snowballed by the entire personnel of one of his classes. Many of the native instructors were not, and, when Hibbard sought to resign, was informed that this was a method by which students placed a stamp of great approval upon particular members of the faculty.

"Some other strange ways of showing approbation exist in old Northern schools. In one of them, the habit of bringing dogs into the classrooms of the well-liked instructor is prevalent. The more dogs that come to class, the more pleased the instructor. But he is obliged to make a wise crack for each dog, else the compliment falls very flat.

"One man in the English department holds the prize for the best of these. A big dog was brought in one morning, and the professor asked that the animal be taken out, glancing rapidly among members of his class, from one face to another.

" 'We've gotta draw the line somewhere!' " he said, with finality."

Denatured Alchohol Problem To Judge

Is possession of denatured alcohol (the kind used to keep automobile radiators from freezing) a violation of the prohibition law? Judge C. P. Hinshaw of the Chapel Hill recorder's court wants to know.

If it is, then all persons who use it in their cars are liable to arrest.

If it is not, then Pink Guthrie, elderly Chapel Hill negro, has been unjustly confined in the local bastile.

Local authorities agree that something must be done about Pink, who drinks radiator alcohol as nonchalantly as the average collegian downs a "dope."

Pink was arrested this week when he was found to possess several flasks of the poisoned radiator liquid, and released upon $50 bail pending the Monday session of recorder's court.

The negro is a problem. A perennial drunkard, he is arrested regularly about once in six weeks, with occasional apparent reforms, but it is estimated that he is drunk at least six times unknown to the officers, for each time he is arrested.

Judge Hinshaw wishes he would emigrate, but Pink has lived long in Chapel Hill and probably will never do so.

Orr and Yarborough Buy Repair Dept. From Burroughs Motor Co.

L. L. Orr, a former employee of Tull's Club Service Motor Co., and Clarence Yarborough, for four years in the employ of the Burroughs Motor Company, have purchased the automobile repair department of the latter concern and will operate it under the name of "Chapel Hill Motor Co."

The new owners are both skilled mechanics and will continue to specialize in repair work on all makes of cars. They will retain their present location just above the city hall on Columbia street.

Hour Changed

The time of the debate scheduled between Howard Y. Williams and E. J. Woodhouse on the Third Party Question has been changed from 8:30 p. m. February 4, to seven o'clock on the same evening in order not to conflict with the address of Rabbi Wise.

ARMY OF EAST VICTOR IN FIGHT

Old East Forces Come Off Successful In Snow Battle.

All out Old West! Go get 'em Old East! Thus the great battle between the East and the West began in all its glory last night. Snowballs flying; glass crackling; and wounded moaning. With such a scene the Old Well soon found itself penned in between the two advancing forces of the enemies, each intent on killing.

The forces of the West, greatly out-numbered, slowly retreated, while the advancing line of the Eastern troops poured shot into the diminishing line of the West. With their backs to the wall, the almost defeated Westerners fought like wounded bears, but with all their bravery they were unable to withstand the charge of the mighty Oriental forces.

With only a small number of men, the West made a last attempt to repel the enemy. As the small band fought, the large Eastern army slowly gave way. Finally, angered by the fighting spirit of the little band, the huge army tried to rally. A first attempt failed, and likewise a second. By this time the reserve forces of the small Western troops had been brought up and their army was now almost equal to the slowly retreating men of the East forces. For some reason, however, the Easterners gained more strength, and with a final attempt to rally they succeeded. The retreat of the West was immediately brought about. Fighting up to the front line trenches of the West, the East slayed the last man. Everything in sight was totally destroyed, and the East claimed the day.

Oh! The East is East, and the West is West, but never the twain shall meet—until another snow.

Brown Petition Fails

Mrs. E. A. Brown has been refused a petition to change the local fraternity zone to permit her to sell her residence property to a Carolina fraternity. There was slight discussion Thursday evening when a hearing was held. The board of aldermen sustained the present zoning plan.

Ford Catches Fire

A Ford coupe belonging to a traveling salesman whose name was not learned, caught fire on East Franklin street near the 700 block yesterday morning, but before firemen arrived, the blaze had been extinguished.

Tentative plans are being made by the endowment campaign committee of the University of Oklahoma, delegated to raise $1,000,000 for new buildings and additional equipment.

There will be an important meeting of the University band tonight at 7:45 in the band hall.

GLEE CLUB WILL PERFORM BEFORE CHAPEL GROUPS

Appearances In Gerrard Hall Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Prelude to Contest.

The University glee club, under the direction of Professor Harold S. Dyer, will appear in chapel Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

These performances will serve as an opportunity for students to hear the club, since the closing of Memorial hall has caused the regular campus concerts to be abandoned. The chapel appearances should also serve to strengthen the club's singing before an audience during the southern association contest at Greenville, for which the group will depart Thursday.

The program will occupy almost the entire chapel time each morning. Numbers selected from the regular concert repertoire will be sung, and, in addition, Ewen Clark, student, will direct the three songs to be used in the contest: the prize song, "Hark, Jolly Shepherds" by Morley; "Ave Marie" by Arcadelt; and the new "Hark the Sound" composed especially for the 1929-30 glee club by Arthus Edward Johnstone.

Final selection of the men to represent Carolina at the contest of February 7 is now being carried on. Fifteen new men have joined the squad since the winter quarter opened. Many of these possess vocal talent which is equal or superior to that of many already on the squad, and it is with particular care and thought that Director Dyer is making the selection.

The character of the three contest songs is so different that they will be presented in Greenville by three separate groups. The prize song will be presented by a group of about 24 without the student director. The song demands equality of balance and strength throughout the four parts of the club, and to meet this need, Professor Dyer is reducing the baritone and bass sections each by several men. A still further reduction from the usual group of thirty is the prospect for the "Ave Marie." The school song, however, will be given by the entire club.

Only those men who went on the fall tour will participate in the concert at Gastonia on February 6, but this will have no hearing on the contest club which competes the following night.

Basses among whom the competition is strongest for places on the contest club are: Prouty, Wilson, Brown, Goodwin and Atwood. Among the baritones the competition is keener: Hammond, Hunt, Patten, Trull, Bremer and Overman are all hoping to get the call. The student director is a baritone, which leaves an additional place in that section to be filled from the list of competitors. Second tenors will be selected from: Commolly, Slaughter, Boynton, Stewart, Stimpson, Lyon and Barfield. First tenors are: Duffy, Lynch, Whitsett, Swain, Winston, Petty and Midgett. Due to competition, a singer who has a single absence, loses. This rule has been in effect two weeks, and has resulted in the loss of several club members.

The glee club has not participated in the southern contest

THOUGHT A DAY

There are tropical lilies which are venomous, but they are more beautiful than the frail and icy-white lilies of the North.—Lafcadio Hearn.

The Great Snow Battle of '27

Like the fabled equine of song and story, the frosh "ain't what they used to be." Yesterday morning the first-year men challenged their deadly enemies, the sophs, to a snowball fight around the Old Well at Chapel period, but not more than a dozen hardy souls responded to the time-honored appeal. The opposition was equally wary, however; the sophomoric mind is evidently cautious and discreet this year. Thus the first snowfall suitable for a frosh-soph warfare in three years failed to produce anything more than a sporadic guerilla campaign.

Time was when every sizable snow occasioned a fierce and relentless series of battles between the first and second year men here. The last of the great snow battles occurred during the winter of '27, when the members of the persent senior class struggled bitterly for an entire afternoon with their sophomore adversaries.

Led by president Nelson Callahan, now a linotype operator in Louis Graves' Orange Printshop, the frosh ran their class banner to the peak of the flagpole adjacent to the Well in the early afternoon. The class officers marshalled their forces, about 400 strong, in compact formation about the flagpole. In a series of fierce sorties the sophs attempted to dislodge them, but every attack was repulsed with great execution on both sides. Many were the casualties who retired from the fray with lacerated faces and frozen toes.

Late in the afternoon, when dusk was settling upon the battlefield and enticing odors of steaming food were issuing forth from Swain hall, a band of determined upperclassmen rushed from the rear of Old East in a desperate surprise attack. Kenneth Motsinger and Bunn Hackney were at the head of the charging column. A desperate hand-to-hand battle ensued, and the issue was in doubt for more than half an hour. Finally a trio of daring sophs leaped upon the shoulders of the densely packed mass of struggling forms and succeeding in shinnying the greased pole. They siezed the frosh banner, but eager hands dragged them down beneath a frenzied rush of freshmen. A few segacious bystanders succeeded in prying the bloodthirsty throng from the recumbent pile of bodies; it was discovered at least a half dozen members of both classes had "passed out," among them freshman Brownlow Jackson. The banner had disappeared.

Jackson was carried to a room in Old East and several buckets of cold water dashed into his face in an effort to revive him. A bit of colored rag was protruding from his mouth. His clenched jaws were forced upon and the rag extracted. It was spread out and discovered to be the frosh banner! So ended the last of the great Carolina snow battles.

Indications are that there will be no more frosh-soph snow fights comparable to the epic struggle of the winter of '27. Although that strenuous battle will never be forgotten by those who engaged in it, the recollection of blackened eyes, broken fingers, bruised bodies and frozen ears will serve to remind them that fighting is not all fun.

The passing of the annual snow fights at Carolina indicates, perhaps, that the collegian has grown up. Undergraduates seem to be saner, more aware of the fundamental seriousness of college life than they were a few years ago. Reports from all over the country tend to show that the college student is becoming more interested in the vital problems of the curriculum, more cognizant of the fact that four years are all too short a period in which to gain the fundamentals of a college education. Prep-schoolish frotheries such as snow fights are exciting and rather enjoyable incidents in undergraduate life, but college men are discovering that they cannot spare time from the more serious affairs of the curriculum, athletics and other activities which produce tangibly beneficial results, for these worthless pastimes.

The Radio And Profanity

Widespread objections are being raised to the use of profanity on the radio. Just why objections to this practice have not been apparent long ago is a matter of conjecture. Although proposed prohibitive measures along this line have been put off for a long time, the public seems to have become awakened to the evil at last. Decent language on the air is a demand which must be met.

The use of profanity in public places is always nauseating. To use it on the radio is inexcusable and unpardonable. Positive measures should be taken to guarantee the isolation of profanity from the radio. Only decent language should be used on the air. Profanity is not any more expressive in the opinion of the average man than ordinary terms. To some it is well nigh meaningless; to many it is disgusting. All agree that its use should be confined to private discourse. If a man is incapable of using decent language, then his line of disgusting chatter should be stopped. Anybody who has such an undeveloped mentality that he cannot talk over the radio without resorting to profanity, should not be allowed to tax the air waves with his voice.

For spreading news the radio is the greatest instrument that science has yet produced. Its influence in the matter of moulding sentiment can be either harmful or detrimental. The art of profanity spreads rapidly enough from "father to son," and from "mouth to mouth." The radio should be used to war against its use, rather than to spread and encourage it. We welcome, therefore, the recent action to outlaw the use of profanity in connection with the radio.

Readers' Opinions

MR. HOUSE DISAGREES

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Hodges has written an able editorial on "The Practice of Booting," and I agree with his main thesis—contempt for student insincerity in all its forms and methods. But I disagree with the implications of his argument.

(1) Does not Mr. Hodges depict the booter as too much of a fox and the instructor as too much of an ass? I can not conceive of a student's getting by on nothing, except with a fool.

(2) Does not Mr. Hodges characterize discussion, questions, argument, seeking personal contact with the instructor, as methods of booting, whereas they are perfectly legitimate methods of exercising the mind, getting help, and making friends in a human sort of way? His error is, I think, in failing to distinguish between a fair and an unfair motive.

(3) Does not Mr. Hodges' argument foster a sort of aloofness on the part of instructors and students, which certainly will prevent normal relations between them, and which may prevent students from seeking help that it is the instructor's business to give?

I am deeply interested in faculty-student relations, but do not expect ever to see them ideal. In the meantime, some students go at the business of getting help from and making friends with the faculty in a direct, human fashion. Others simply bewail the fact that they do not have friends among the faculty. I fear that the dread of booting may convince others that the only thing a gentleman can do is to have as little to do with the faculty as possible. And it may make it equally impossible for the faculty to be human.

Sincerely yours,
R. B. HOUSE.

IN ANSWER TO THE EDITORIAL ON "BOOTING"

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

This letter is prompted by an editorial on "The Practice of Booting" appearing in Thursday's Tar Heel.

One must admit the presence on the campus of those types of students who engage in the obnoxious practice of deceiving their professors and courting their favor both by unethical means and for unethical purposes. This is indeed a distressing element, but it seems that one must accept it as an inescapable evil. For wherever there are grouped heterogeneous people in large numbers there will be some who will lend themselves to some forms of moral or social turpitude. (This is merely an observation and not a sermonization.)

While admitting the above, I detect a distressing lack of differentiation between the student who attempts to create "the illusion of having an intelligent interest in the subject" and the student who actually does have an intelligent interest, between

Dressy Dope

By Beau Gent

Very few accessories for the well dressed man are new. Some are adaptations or revivals and some are so old that we have already forgotten them. The novel accessories have a distinctly modern touch.

One of the newest things is a watch in a belt buckle. It lies face inward to prevent breakage, but may be easily opened by a flick of the lever attached to it. Another achievement in the line of watches is the watch without hands. The time is read by numerals that appear through two openings in the otherwise opaque face. And since the watch chain is passe, they are not equipped with rings for a chain.

Another neat little trick is in the form of a book—usually the Bible—from which the corner unscrews revealing a most useful flask.

One of the surprises of fashion is the revival of the white linen handkerchief, plain or cross-barred, for breast pocket embellishment instead of the gayly colored affair.

Monotone cravats and, as usual, the small figured foulards and Spitalfields are in vogue and, since the fashion in neckdress is veering toward narrower openings, scarfs that take a smaller, snugger knots are favored.

The penchant of southerners for the black tie and white shirt and sundry somber effects is to be deplored. One should endeavor to give range and color to one's clothes. The monotonous repetition of the black and white effect should long ago have bored its wearers to a change.

For the benefit of those men—mostly New York collegians—who are addicted to the "sloppy collegiate" mode of dress, let me say that they are far behind the time. The new collegian attempts to convey his familiarity with the fashions of the day, and to combine utility with effectiveness of dress. The students on other campuses realize the absurdity and inevitably boorish appearance of a "sloppy" and it is high time that we too learned something about dress.

A sloppy appearance is no asset to you. Despite all arguments to the contrary a man's appearance is noticed by everyone and a neat looking man enjoys a priority over the "sloppy."

The appearances of many of the men on the campus would be greatly enhanced by the use of a collar pin. Nothing is more annoying to the wearer and the observer than flying collar points.

The well-dressed men on the campuses of the south are giving added impetus to the growth of popularity of the tab shirt. All of the wearers of tab-shirts recommend them. The idea seems to be that if you wear it once you will wear no other . . . and my words must not be interpreted so that they are disparaging.

We deplore the lack of enthusiasm for spats on the campus and we can only attribute it to a fear of the derision. We firmly hold to the belief that the majority of the campus are a bunch of farmers when it comes to a matter of dress and despite the cries of "your underwear is hanging out" and "look at the feet gloves" we recommend them as a prerequisite of the wardrobe of the well dressed man.

THE SHOW-OFF
By George Kelly

Presented by the Carolina Playmakers at the Playmaker Theatre Thursday, January 30, 1930.

THE CAST

Clara	George Wilcox
Mrs. Fisher	Penelope Alexander
Amy	Sara Falkener
Frank Hyland	Eveland Davies
Mr. Fisher	Joseph P. Fox
Joe	Whitner Bissell
Aubrey Piper	Richmond P. Bond
Mr. Gill	Discum B. Roberts
Mr. Rogers	George E. Stone

Presenting their third production of the season the Carolina Playmakers gave George Kelly's The Show-Off Thursday evening before an audience somewhat smaller than those which Playmake bills usually attract.

The Show-Off, which the playwright Kelly has sub-titled "a transcript of life," is in itself a fine three-act comedy. It is a play of middle-class life with the scene in the home of a suburban family in West Philadelphia. The characters in this domestic comedy are true to type; and well-done dialogue throughout gives the play a sparkle of good-humor and good sense.

The Playmakers, however, fell below their level of acting in this production. The actors themselves lacked the maturity which the play inevitably demands for a good performance. There was a youthful tang in the voices and actions of the players which betrayed them despite the excellent make-up and costuming designed to give them more mature and aged appearances. The machinery of the play ran smoothly enough; cues were nicely and promptly caught; and the stage settings were excellent, giving quite a suitable atmosphere to the production.

Penelope Alexander as Mrs. Fisher lacked the poise that her part demanded. She was too obviously not the type to play the part of the aged mother. Her voice gave her youth away, and her motions were too quick and lively. The part was a difficult one. Loretto Carroll Bailey recently portrayed a similar part in Job's Kinfolks with extraordinary success. But, after all, that part was written for her, and one gains but little by a comparison. The same criticism may well be applied to Joseph Fox who played Mr. Fisher. His expressions and gestures, however, helped considerably in his portrayal.

Richmond P. Bond as Aubrey Piper, the "show-off," the "sign on the dotted line" maniac, the ineluctable jester, put everything across except his laugh. A stage laugh nearly always sounds quite artificial, and Aubrey Piper's was as forced and awkward as any of them. That laugh had a prominent place in the performance. In other respects, however, he was excellent. All of his rowdyism, his bluffing, his reverberating panegyrics he "put across" with a gusto fitting the part of the little braggart clerk. Mr. Bond's broad gestures and his facial expressions were executed with facility.

As Joe, Whitner Bissell was admirable. He portrayed with credit the youthful, exuberant son. Even in the rather tense moment preceding the death of father Fisher, he gave an excellent performance. Of all the players on the stage he was the most at ease. Sara Falkener as Amy also gave a creditable performance. Though sometimes she appeared a trifle ill-at-ease, on the whole she carried the part with better control and more finish than the average amateur actress. George Wilcox as Clara had but one little difficult acting to do. She "got across."

Descus B. Roberts, playing the part of Mr. Gill, a day laborer, shows excellent promise. Eveland Davies as Frank Hyland and George Stone as Mr. Rogers were capable.

The dialogue of the play offered excellent possibilities for fine expression and acting, but too seldom the players took complete advantage. As a whole the group gave a performance inferior to their usual high standard. The Playmakers are certain to be "at home" in their field of Folk Plays and Carolina Comedies.

"Georgia" Plays "Virginia" This Afternoon At 3 O'Clock

FIRST WINTER GAME

Contest Will Take Place Regardless Of Weather Or Conditions.

"Georgia" vs. "Virginia" this afternoon at 3 o'clock, the second winter football game of the session, will take place as stated, regardless of weather conditions. Coach Collins stated yesterday that the game would be played if it were possible to see the sidelines.

The head coach was undecided as to which team he would call his own, but hinted that the choice would be one of the two that roll in the slush today.

The "Georgia" aggregation is composed of 23 men, including Reid, Davis, Grantham, Smith, White, Zovesus, Kerr, Gilbreath, Petrie, Oliverio, McDade, Johnson, Brown, Singletary, Herman, Branch, Croom, White, Landis, House, Nash, Frazier and Morrisey. This is one of the strongest teams of the group. In fact, one can see the strong backfield that is equal to almost any that romped around in the fall—Johnny Branch, Croom, Henry House and Captain-elect Strud Nash. They will be supported by Landis, Frazier and Morrisey.

The starting line will have Reid and Brown at ends, Smith and McDade at tackles; Zovesus and Petrie at guards, and Gilbreath at center.

The "Virginia" eleven will be composed of Nelson, Cole, Oliver, Skinner, Thomas, Crew, Gant, Greer, Dunavant, Underwood, Liberstein, Allen, Kozart, Blackwood, Peacock, Magner, assiter, McNeil, Sickler and Newton.

The Virginia team will have four varsity men in the lineup: Rip Slusser, Jim Magner, Crew and Nelson.

This is thought to be one of the strongest pair of teams on the Hill and much action will be seen out on the field this afternoon.

Instead of the regular practice yesterday afternoon, the coaches permitted the boys to have a little fun in a snowfight. The squad was divided into teams and the battle ensued. Another snow battle took place in Kenan stadium. Anyway, the workout kept the boys from getting stiff in the joints.

Reid	L. E.	Nelson
Smith	L. T.	Oliver
Zovesus	L. G.	Crew
Gilbreath	C.	Greer
Petrie	R. G.	Dunavant
McDade	R. T.	Underwood
Brown	R. E.	Allen
Branch	Q. B.	Peacock
Croom	L. H.	Magner
House	R. H.	McNeil
Nash	F. B.	Slusser

Carolina and Duke Well Balanced at Guard Posts

Carolina and Duke each will present one big forward and one smaller, lightning-fast boy in their clash here Saturday night. Chalky Councillor, Duke ace, is one of the fastest forwards in the south, while Rogers is a big boy who is a dead shot from any angle, and especially from the side of the court. For Carolina, Neiman, broadjumper and pole vaulter, has all grades of speed and cleverness, while Dameron, a big boy, is a fine defensive man and is a consistent forward.

"TENNESSEE" AND "TECH" INCREASE THEIR TEAMS

Coach Collins yesterday announced additions to "Tennessee" and the "Georgia Tech" teams.

Philpot, Johnson, Young, Chaconas, Daniels, Margolis, Huffman, Battley, White and Coates will be added to the Tennesee eleven, while Bartley, Brooks, Collier, Hutter, Worn-am, Dunn, Froneberger, Donnel, Staples, Glascot, and Erickson go to the Ga. Tech team. "Chuck" Erickson is a varsity back, replacing Thompson on the same team.

DUKE-N. C. TUSSLE TO BE BATTLE OF TWO BIG CENTERS

Joe Croson And "Puny" Harper Will Occupy Spotlight In Tonight's Game.

After holding snappy practice sessions yesterday afternoon, both Tar Heels and Blue Devils are anxiously awaiting the whistle which will precipitate what is expected to be the most hectic game on the local court this season. The varsity game will begin at 8:30 o'clock following immediately after the Tar Baby-Blue Imp tussle.

The game tonight is expected to largely revolve around an individual battle of centers. Joe Croson, the Duke pivot man, has led the Devil scorers in almost every game for two seasons. "Puny" Harper, Tar Heel ace, has consistently been the backbone of the Tar Heel's defense. Both stand 6 feet 6 inches, towering over their respective fellows.

Basing their assumptions on past history, prognosticators are inclined to think that provided Harper stops Croson, the game will be anybody's. Should the Tar Heel center fail to do this, however, the verdict is conceded to Duke. Last year in their first meet, Croson ran wild on Harper and Duke won. In the next game in which the two teams met Harper covered Croson like the dew, held him to one lone field goal, and Carolina beat the Devils for the state title.

Coaching strategy is also expected to play a great part in the game tonight. Both teams have been reported as altering their tactics especially in preparation for the other, and it may be a question of Ashmore's Tar Heel strategy versus Cameron's Duke strategy.

Sandy Dameron and Dave Neiman, Ashmore's new forward combination, which proved so successful in the Wake Forest and State games, worked together in the final practice yesterday afternoon, and it is almost likely that these two will start against the Blue Devils tonight. Tom Cleland and Johnny Greene, another forward combination, will probably be held in reserve. "Puny" Harper will start as usual against the lanky offensive star, Joe Croson, while Artie Marpet and Billy Brown will hold down the guard positions.

LOVING CUP TO RELAYERS

A silver cup presented by the London House of John Wanamaker will be awarded to the winning school in the interscholastic one-mille open relay scratch. Permanent possession of this trophy goes with a three time victory.

The Amateur Athletic Union of the United States rules will govern the games.

Massachusetts was one of the first states to build railroads.

Tar Babies To Meet Blue Imps Tonight

Although they suffered defeat at the hands of the Durham high school Bulldogs Thursday night, the Tar Babies are preparing to give the strong Blue Imps a good reception when, together with the Duke varsity, they come to Chapel Hill for a double-header tonight.

The Duke freshmen have one of the strongest quints in the state. Their Big Five victims to date are State and Wake Forest, while the Tar Babies defeated the Wolflets 24-19 but lost to the Baby Deacons 34-24. The Imps will enter the contest as slight favorites. Immediately after the freshman game, the varsity will take the floor against the Duke Blue Devils in a game that will have an important bearing on the state title chase.

The probable lineup for the Tar Babies will be: Lineberger and Henry, guards; Hines and Dunn, forwards; and Beale, center.

Tuesday the Tar Babies will start on their northern swing, playing the various teams in Virginia. The trip will last through Sunday.

COACHES TO PLAY EXHIBITION "DOUG" MATCH AS TRIAL

If Practical The Game Will Be Included In Intra-Murals.

Coach Kenfield brings another game to Chapel Hill this morning. It is called Doug. While he was in California several years ago, he used to play the game two or three times a week with Douglas Fairbanks. Doug in turn had brought the game from Europe and had begun the fad in California. It seems that Coach Kenfield took a liking to the game because of the thrills it has. One sees the ball coming at him, but it never reaches the place where one thinks the ball is going.

The game is played with regulation tennis equipment, the counting being the same. But the ball is different. Instead of the regulation rubber ball, this one is made of cork with feathers in one end. The feathers retard the speed of the ball, thus disconcerting the players because of the illusion it creates. When the speed of the ball is retarded, it drops to the earth, and the purpose is to hit the ball before it reaches the ground.

It is stated that the game provides many thrills, although it is not quite as fast as the other racquet games.

The coaches, Kenfield, Ashmore, Collins, Cerney and Enright will give an exhibition of the game this morning at 10:30 in the Tin Can. If the game is found to be practical, it may become an intramural sport.

Steele Whips Grimes

Steele overwhelmed Grimes yesterday in a game whose only interest was in wondering how many points Steele would pile up. Purser was the individual star, playing only three quarters and making a total of 18 points.

The lineup:

Grimes (9)		Steele (51)
McMichael (5)	Right Forward	Fussel (4)
Hodges (1)	Left Forward	Farrel (8)
Gentry (1)	Center	Purser (18)
Justice	Right Guard	Crane (6)
Long (2)	Left Guard	Smith (7)

Substitutions: Steele—Manning (6), Simpson (2), Sanderson.

CAROLINA ENTRIES TO BE NAMED FOR MILROSE GAMES

Track Events In Gotham Will Include Events For Women.

Final trials for the University's mile relay entries in the twenty-third annual Milrose Indoor games at Madison Square Garden will be held Monday afternoon. A series of tryouts is being held for men making the trip, rather than any one day's trials.

Outstanding among the candidates for the team are Minor Barkley, Dick Garrett, Ken Gay, Charlie Farmer, and Lionel Weil. Captain Dave Nims, the most promising of the candidates, may be lost to the team on account of sickness. He has been confined to the infirmary for a week with a cold and it is improbable that he will be able to get in shape in the short time left. In case he should not be able to make the trip his loss will be a severe blow to the hopes of Tar Heel followers for a victory in this event.

The University's opponents in this event will be Rutgers, Lafayette, and New York City College. Ken Gay, winner of the 100 and 220 yard dashes in the state meet last year, and Charlie Farmer are entered in the 50 yard sprint race.

The games will start at 8:00 p. m. Saturday, February 8. The Milrose banked track, which measures 11 laps to the mile will permit the wearing of short-spiked shoes. The standard Milrose diamond (gold, silver, bronze) medals will be awarded to athletes finishing first, second and third in all events; diamond medals (gold and silver) will be awarded to members of relay teams finishing first and second. A special prize will be awarded to the athlete who breaks an American indoor record.

The program of invitation and open handicap events is as follows: Rodman Wanamaker mile, one mile walk-open handicap (30 seconds limit), special sprints scratch, 50 yard sprint handicap (6 foot limit), 1000 yard run-scratch, two mile run-miss and out scratch, 880 yard run-scratch, 50 yard high hurdles-open handicap high jump-scratch (entrant must have record of 6 feet, 2 inches), pole vault.

The "Milrose 600"—this event has been an annual feature of the Milrose games. The beautiful Post Trophy was won twice by Meredith, Caldwell, and Eby, and became the possession of Allan B. Helffrich by virtue of his three time successes in 1923, 1924, 1925. The Haughton trophy likewise was won outright by Helffrich through successive wine in 1926 and 1927.

In the one mile inter club relay scratch a silver cup presented by the Parish House of John Wanamaker will be awarded to the college or club whose mile relay team makes the fastest time. Permanent possession of the trophy goes with a three time victory.

A sterling silver cup is awarded to the winner of the Rodman Wanamaker mile. The trophy must be won three times before it becomes the property of the winner. This trophy is the third presented by Mr. Rodman Wanamaker for competition in a distance event. The first two trophies were won outright by Joie Ray of Illinois A. C. The first leg on the new trophy was won by Ray in 1924, the second by Paavo Nurmi in 1925, the third by J. J. Connolly of New York A. C. in 1926, and the fourth and fifth by Lloyd Hahn of Boston A. C. in 1927 and 1928.

Says Us

by

Browning Roach

This basketball outfit down at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, appears to be making a resolute attempt to regain on the court the prestige which it held a few years on the gridiron, and so far as the season's standings are concerned, it has succeeded in establishing its position pretty firmly. Having implanted herself in the lead in the conference circuit with five victories, Alabama bids fair to go on through the schedule without a loss, while the remaining undefeated quints face more probable elimination.

Only one strong opponent stands between Alabama and an unblemished record. On the other hand, the four additional unconquered quints, Kentucky, Washington and Lee, Sewanee and Georgia, must dispose of several redoubtable opponents in the coming weeks of play. Two of these, Kentucky and Georgia, meet tonight at Athens, and it is a toss-up as to whether the wildcats or the Bulldogs will come through unscathed. Kentucky also had a strong foe with which to contend when she met Tennessee in Knoxville last night. The Wildcats were barely able to nose out the Volunteers 23 to 20 in an early season game. At the time the Tar Heel went to press we had not received word of the result of the Kentucky-Tennessee fracas, but if the Volunteers settled down to a little more accurate shooting we consider Kentucky extremely fortunate to break through with another win.

Washington and Lee has anything but a soft snap in the next few weeks. Besides ...cing Kentucky and Sewanee of the undefeated group, the Generals are slated to meet Maryland and V. P. I. twice each, Carolina, Virginia and Duke. The Generals have already defeated some of these teams this season, but will have a difficult time repeating against one or two of them—Duke, especially.

It looks as though the local high school boys are in for a feed at the close of the basketball season. "Dean" Paulsen, local sports enthusiast, and M. H. Jones, coach of Chapel Hill high, have entered into a gentlemen's agreement which, from the point of view of the high school boys, is a "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition. According to the bargain, Mr. Paulsen is to set the boys up to a banquet early in March, providing they win the state class B championship. If the boys fail to annex the title, Coach Jones is to put up for the eats.

The Chapel Hill athletes are also beneficiaries in another manifestation of generosity on the part of a local business man. Last fall E. Carrington Smith, manager of the Carolina theatre, promised to issue free passes to the show to all players taking part in a high school game in which Chapel Hill proved victorious. Since the boys lost only two football games and to date the same number in basketball, these passes have been presented at the box office regularly after almost every contest.

Matches came into general use about 1834.

MEBANE LOSES TO HIGH QUINTS HERE

Girls Win 29-8; Boys Run Away To Tune Of 48 - 14.

Chapel Hill continued the fast passing and shooting style of play begun early in the season and triumphed over Mebane high school in both games of a double-header here last night. The girls won 29 to 8, while the boys kept up their side of the affair with a 48 to 14 margin over the visitors.

In the girls' game Leigh of Chapel Hill found the basket at odd intervals throughout the play and topped the scoring on both sides with seven field goals. Taylor, forward, and Jordan, guard, also showed up well for the locals. Hornby and Moore played a good game for the visitors.

In the boys' game Lawrence, Council and Prouty opened up a scoring attack, backed by the excellent floor work of Captain Williams at guard was only rivaled by that of Jackson at the same position for the visitors. Both men played a fast, fighting game and did much to speed up the play. Council and Lawrence led the offensive for Chapel Hill, while Prouty also did some clever shooting but let individual efforts somewhat mar the team play carried out by the squad as a whole.

The fact that Mebane was state class B champion last year adds somewhat to the credit the Chapel Hill boys deserve for the victory of last night.

Lineup for the girls:

Chapel Hill (29)		Mebane (8)
Leigh (14)	R. F.	Moore
Taylor (11)	L. F.	Satterfield
Andrews (2)	C.	Hornsby (8)

Williams (4)		Jackson (6)

Substitutions: Chapel Hill—Neville (3), Barber; Mebane—Hornby, Thompson, Parnell.

Aycock Wins

The fast Aycock (F) team defeated New Dorms, 22-18, in a close game. Aycock held the lead consistently, with New Dorms staying just behind. Hooks, of Aycock, was high scorer with ten; Carpenter, New Dorms was next with eight.

Ministers Should Change Ways Says Shailer Mathews

Chicago, Jan. 31, 1930.—(IP)—The preacher of the future has got to be able to distinguish between sin and merely a bad case of tonsilitis, Dean Shailer Mathews of Chicago University said in announcing a closer hook up between science and religion in the university's divinity school.

"It seems wrong to me," he remarked, "to frighten people with threats of hell when their hell may be only a bad case of tonsilitis. How may we cure despair and the sense of sin unless we know the workings of the mental states involved?"

In other words, according to the dean, the new type of minister must be something of the country doctor or general practitioner in the field of religion.

He must stop scaring people into being good and substitute for this outworn practice a religious doctor's knowledge of what is psychologically or pathologically wrong with his parishioner patient.

"Priests and ministers should be intelligent as well as pious, said Dean Mathews. "In the past, indigestion has been confused with piety. I can see no reason in the world why a saint should look as if he had just swallowed a green persimmon."

Dean Mathews' plan of fusing religious instruction with that of science is in line with the new policy of President Robert Maynard Hutchins for closer cooperation between the various departments of the university in the solution of the major problems of human relations.

RUSE WORKS ON TWO CAROLINIANS

Two heroic Carolinians displayed faintly noticeable marks of their defense of the name of "Carolina" in the face of most overwhelming odds last night.

They were strolling aimlessly past the Y.M.C.A. in Durham when they were greeted by a volley of snowballs and cries of "Boo Carolina." Perceiving that the originators of the attack numbered about ten or twelve, they continued on their way with dignified demeanor.

When they retraced their steps later, however, they saw two of the attackers still hanging around. Being of a pugnacious frame of mind, the loyal Carolinians waded in. They found to their dismay that the remainder of the gang had been in hiding for this very opportunity.

After delivering a few well placed "socks" they retreated before the reinforcements could overpower them. The escutcheon of Carolina remains unblemished, we think.

STUDENTS ARRESTED FOR ISSUING SCANDAL SHEET ARE FREED IN OHIO TOWN

Delaware, O., Jan. 31.—(IP)—Two youths were freed here by police following their arrest in connection with the circulation of a so-called "scandal sheet" ridiculing students, professors and fraternities at Ohio Wesleyan University. The sheet was printed in Marion, O., and is believed to be the work of a student in the University. Sale of the paper was supressed by police and all available copies confiscated.

No girls' teams will be invited to compete in the annual high school basketball tournament held at Northwestern this year. This change was caused by the ruling of the National High School athletic association which is recommending the curbing of competitive sports for girls.

Clemens' Relative Tells Good Story

Probably the best source of college stories the writer ever knew was a westerner, a man of fifty, but who was more collegiate than his children were, even then. This man was a relative of Samuel L. Clemens, known as Mark Twain, which perhaps accounted somewhat for his ability as a story teller. He had graduated from college on his eighteenth birthday, then gone from one institution to another for a few postgraduate courses, establishing a chapter of his fraternity wherever he went. The editor of the Tar Heel willing, this writer will from time to time set down favorite yarns of his old friend.

"How would you vote on this bond issue, Mr. Clemens?" I asked one election day, "it seems like a good idea, doesn't it?"

"There are too many bond issues. The electorate is really very thoughtless about such matters. It reminds me of the time at 'Western State' when the students were given the franchise.

"How was that, Mr. Clemens?" The humorous smile in his eye foretold a story.

"Well, the town was small—so small that students of voting age outnumbered other registered voters. For that reason students had been denied the franchise for many years.

"But there was always a fight on the matter," he continued, "and finally the state supreme court ruled for the students, and for the first time in years students who made proper residence declaration were allowed to vote."

"Well, what happened?"

"Some of us, to celebrate our victory, pleased because we'd been recognized as fit to have a part in the government, came forth with a brand new bond issue. Because of our superior numbers, carried overwhelmingly. Of course, it was foolish, but —

"Would there be no way to set aside a foolish or ill-advised bit of municipal legislation?" I inquired.

"Legally, none, if the election were regular and without fraud."

'By the way, what was this bond issue for?"

"It called for the sale of bonds," he said, gravely, "to provide monies with which to pave all the streets of Collegeville with bricks made of—pure gold!"

College Officials Arrested for Fraud

Chicago, Jan. 31.—(IP)—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of all officials of Greer College, an industrial school here, on charges of conspiracy to defraud. The charges were signed by four youths who said they came to the college to "earn while they learn" and found the college's advertisements "didn't mean anything."

Those whose arrest was asked in the warrants included Erwin Greer, president of the school; Herman Schneyer, first vice-president; T. D. Nairn, second vice-president; Frederick Greer, treasurer, and Emil Blast, secretary.

The youths, who came here to become master mechanics and airplane pilots, are Joacuin Reyes, Wayne E. Wolf, Leo A. Soulek and Henry Bartel.

The boys said that there were no jobs for them when they got to college, as had been advertised, and that the college officials informed them the course would take longer than specified in the advertisement.

Greer, the president, denounced the students as "underhanded."

"We do not guarantee work to every student who enters our school," he said.

College President Is Glad That Enrollment No Longer Increases

Pittsburgh, Jan. 31.—(IP)—In his annual report, President Thomas S. Baker greets with satisfaction the report that the percentage of increase in the total enrollment in American colleges is less now than in recent years.

"The rapid expansion of the American universities after the war has not been an unmixed blessing to the intellectual life of our country," President Baker said.

"It has not been possible to secure a sufficient number of well-trained and inspiring teachers to direct the flood of young people who have been pressing for admission to college."

Dr. Froelicher Dead

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 31—(IP)—Dr. Hans Froelicher, acting president of Goucher College since the death of Dr. William W. Guth in April, dropped dead in Alumni Lodge here recently just after he had finished dinner with his wife and Homer Saint Gaudens, director of the Fine Arts college at Carnegie Institute.

Dr. Froelicher had been on the faculty of Goucher college since 1888. He was born in Switzerland 63 years ago. Death was due to heart disease.

CHARM AND THRILLS IN PLAYHOUSE FILM

Fox Films' widely proclaimed drama, "Romance of Rio Grande," featuring Warner Baxter, Mary Duncan and Antonio Moreno, opens a day's engagement today at the Carolina Theatre.

Alfred Santwell, director, has captured all the charm and stirring action contained in the novel by Katherine Fullerton Gerould, "Conquistador," from which the all talking film version was adapted. Its conversion into a speaking drama has given him opportunity to obtain a more poignant realism ind vivid character exposure.

"Romance of Rio Grande," a Fox Movietone with music, is a story with a background of the untamed region of the cactus, the hotbed of lawlessness, feud and racial conflict.

A score of lovely Spanish tunes and two special songs are introduced in the picture, "Ride On, Vaquero," and the theme song, "You'll Find the Answer in My Eyes," products of the gifted composers, L. Wolfe Gilbert and Abel Baer.

Erskine College is an unknown quantity, this being its first year in the contest. The Carolina club hopes to be classed by the judges among the "top three."

The Little Theatre club of Northwestern gave such an excellent play in "Why the Chimes Rang," their first offering of this year, that a second night was required to take care of the overflow crowd.

fessor the true situation was explained, and he agreed to play his part. Consequently, when the hapless sophomores, the one after the other, presented themselves at his home with what excuses they could find, he partly to do his share, partly, too, perhaps, to ease his own ruffled feelings, made the situation none too comfortable for them. The unfortunate pair, later apprised of all, took their well-deserved, well-administered lesson in good part.

Well, times do change. The victimized professor is still a member of the University's faculty. The junior who dispatched the letters is now the chief justice of the state supreme court. One of the students who engineered the trick, the raconteur of the story, now holds a position of responsibility in the University administration. But of the fates of the two sophomores, of their future successes and failures, and whether they became better and wiser men, we have not heard.

the student who goes up after class to "flatter" the teacher and the one who wishes to obtain information or be cleared on a certain point, between the student who wishes to make a "hit" with the prof and the one who wishes to indulge in a relationship which will be profitable, not for the sake of his record card but for more fundamental reasons.

These "virulent" practices on the part of those who wish to "boot" their professors and obtain something for nothing has brought about the formulation of an almost universal opinion that every student who in any way appears to be interested in a subject or who is on intimate terms with his instructor is attempting to "boot" the instructor. Indeed, opinion is so firmly fixed that in order to escape such accusations the undergraduate must either silently swallow what his profs say as infallible doctrine or audibly, but briefly, agree with him. Anything else which he might do or say will be dubbed "booting." This attitude on the part of the students practically removes the possibility of taking an active part in class discussions or associating with professors unless one is willing to disdain fellow-student opinion in favor of more essential elements. An intimate relationship with a reputable professor will mean considerably more to a student a score of years after leaving the University than will the facts which he absorbed from the text books and formal lectures of that professor.

In conclusion, I hope I am speaking for the majority of the students when I say that there are a great many who, though interested in their subjects and sociable with their professors, do not court the favor of their instructors in order to get a good grade for a little work. There are those who attach less import to the grades which are tabulated in the registrar's office than to the real and lasting benefit which they derive from their courses. They attach less weight to the varying attitudes of students than to the results of a wholesome and profitable contact with their professors. I believe I am not alone in lamenting the gradual disappearance of this valuable contact between professor and student.

NOTED RABBI TO GIVE TWO TALKS HERE THIS WEEK

To Speak On "My Vision Of America" And "Jew And Christian: Agreements And Disagreements."

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, founder of the Zionist Organization of America, will be the guest of the Y here Tuesday and Wednesday, February 4 and 5, to deliver two addresses. His first address will be given Tuesday night at the Methodist church at 8:30 on the subject of "My Vision of America." Immediately following this talk there will be an informal reception given to Rabbi and Mrs. Wise at the Carolina Inn. This reception, being given by the Jewish students at the University, will be for all students and faculty members who care to meet Rabbi and Mrs. Wise.

His second lecture will be given Wednesday morning during chapel period at 10:00 in Gerrard hall. At this time he will speak on "Jew and Christian: Agreements and Disagreements." All 9:30 classes will be cut short 25 minutes so that the speaker will have more time for his address. It was previously announced that this lecture would be given in the Methodist church, but because of the distance of the church from the campus, it was thought that it would be hard for the students to get to the lecture and then get back to their classes without having to cut the talk short. Although Gerrard hall is small it is hoped that many townspeople and faculty as well as students will be present to hear the address.

WOLF TO SPEAK BEFORE SOCIETY

Professor To Discuss Technological Unemployment Before Taylor Society Tuesday Night.

Dr. H. D. Wolf, associate professor of economics and instructor of labor problems, will speak before the University student branch of the Taylor Society Tuesday evening on the topic, "Management and Technological Unemployment."

Dr. Wolf will cite concrete examples of industries in which the problem of technological unemployment has appeared, and will show how the problem has been met in certain plants where it has arisen.

The Taylor Society, which is an international organization for the promotion of the science of business management, meets weekly on Tuesday evenings to hear talks by faculty members. The programs for the remainder of this quarter is as follows: February 11, Professor C. T. Murchison, "Management Problems in the Textile Industry"; February 18, E. D. PHARMACY GROUP ELECTS OFFICERS

L. G. Barefoot, President; B. B. Forrest, Vice-President; C. B. Clark, Secretary; and H. M. Dellinger Treasurer.

The University of North Carolina branch of the American Pharmaceutical Association held its regular meeting January 29 in Pharmacy hall.

The main feature of the meeting was the election of the officers for the ensuing year. They are: president, L. G. Barefoot of Four Oaks; vice-presidents, B. B. Forrest, Hillsboro, and C. B. Clark of Williamston; secretary and treasurer, H. M. Dellinger of Stanly.

The organization decided to hold bi-minthly meetings the second and last Wednesday of each month. One of these meetings will be devoted to a student program in which various students in the school of Pharmacy will present subjects of pharmaceutical interest. The other meeting will be talks by the faculty of this and other schools.

It has been the custom of the A.Ph.A. to bring several prominent speakers to Chapel Hill every year and this practice will be continued.

The branch will be very glad to have anyone interested in pharmacy to attend its meetings which are held in Pharmacy hall.

The next meeting will be held February 12 at 2:15 p. m. The speaker will be announced later.

Mr. C. E. Burwell of Miami, Fla., has recently presented to the school of pharmacy a copy of the U. S. Pharmacopeia of 1890, and also a copy of the National Dispensatory (second edition). These books will be catalogued and placed in the pharmacy library.

Dr. Wager Granted Leave Of Absence

Dr. Paul Wager of the rural-social economics department of the University has been granted a leave of absence by the University until September so that he may serve as taxation economist for the United States Forest Service.

He has just gone to New Haven, Conn., where he will begin his research. On his way to Connecticut he is to stop in New York to attend a meeting of the county manager committee of the National Municipal League. He will return to North Carolina in a few days.

Y CABINETS TO MEET TOMORROW

All Cabinets Will Conduct Forums On Subject Of Recent Speeches.

The usual weekly meetings of the freshman, sophomore and junior-senior cabinets will be held at the Y at 7:15 tomorrow night. A very important meeting has been planned for the freshmen, and the president urges that as many members as possible try to attend. Parson Moss will speak at the meeting.

The sophomore cabinet will conduct a discussion, which will take up all the main points advanced by recent speakers on the negro problem. It has been the habit of the cabinet to have speakers for the first three meetings of the month and then on the last meeting to conduct an open forum discussion.

The junior-senior cabinet will discuss business matters.

After these cabinet meetings the weekly dormitory discussion groups will be held in the dormitories. This meeting of the groups will be the second that has been held this year.

TEXTILE LEADER HERE TOMORROW

Will Speak In Bingham Hall Monday Evening at 8 O'clock On Present Day Textile Problems.

Bernard Cone, head of the Cone textile mills in Greensboro since 1917, will speak in the auditorium of Bingham hall, the school of commerce building, at 8 o'clock Monday night. His subject will be "Some Present-Day Problems in the Textile Industry." The talk will be open to the public.

In view of the keen interest in the textile manufacturing situation in North Carolina, the school of commerce, in keeping with its policy, is bringing to the University men who have had experience in textile milling and who represent various points of view. The idea is to give the school of commerce students, and other persons interested, an understanding of all phases of the industry.

Mr. Cone is a graduate of Johns Hopkins University, where he specialized in economics. After leaving Johns Hopkins he studied law at Columbia. Since then, as head of one of the largest groups of mills in the state, he has devoted constant study to both the manufacture and the marketing of textile products. He is a former president of the North Carolina Cotton Manufacturers' Association.

Village May Have Gas In The Future

Gas for Chapel Hill approached somewhat nearer Friday when the local board of aldermen appointed G. M. Braune, dean of the engineering school, and P. L. Burch, head of the building department, to investigate the feasibility of granting a franchise to one of two companies who have applied for it.

The Durham Gas company is competing for official favor in Chapel Hill with the D. L. Thompson company, a Chicago bond house.

Gas will form a topic of discussion at the next meeting of the city fathers.

GLANDON DRIVE TO BE IMPROVED SOON

Glandon Drive, a winding road to Gimghoul Castle, will be improved and be maintained henceforth at civic expense, according to a decision reached last week by the board of aldermen.

Inasmuch as the rule for street maintenance does not permit acquisition of streets not sufficiently improved, the Gimghouls have agreed to spend $300 graveling, surfacing and draining the road, for a length of nearly a quarter of a mile.

At the same time Collier Cobb agreed to spend a like amount improving Cobb Terrace, and changing its grade. This street leads from the postoffice northward, and terminates in a circle. Upon completion of these improvements, Chapel Hill will also maintain it.

Twenty Law Students Pass Bar Examination

As a consequence of the bar examination held January 27 in Raleigh, the following members of the law school have received licenses to practice: Hal Weaver Blackstock, Henry Bane, Millard Breckenridge, Hubert Lynwood Elmore, John Frazier Glenn, Jr., Alfred Waddell Gholson, Jr., Walter Hoyle, Charles Edward Johnson, John Baker Lewis, James Birney Linn, Balfour Thorn Lord, Glenwood Crowder Meads, Francis Ogden Parker, Henry Thurman Powell, Jr., Parker Roland, Neil Sharpe Sowers, Clay Carter Studdert, William David Pope Sharpe, Jr., Young Merritt Smith and Lawrence Henry Wallace.

Students Requested To Identify Coats

Mrs. Lee, matron of Spencer hall, requests that any boys who attended the co-ed dance Friday night, and who either did not get their coats, or picked up by mistake any coat other than their own, call by Spencer hall and get their own coats and leave those taken through error.

There are three top-coats and a large derby which were left after the dance. The owners of these may get them by calling by Spencer hall and seeing Mrs. Lee or the maid.

BODY OF NEGRO FOUND IN SNOW

Local Coroner Unable To Determine Cause Of Death: Foul Play Hinted.

Jordan Austin, 21, colored, was found dead in the snow Friday afternoon near the New Hope church, nine miles from Chapel Hill.

Coroner S. A. Nathan and a jury of six men, accompanied by Sheriff W. T. Sloan and County Physician R. B. Hayes, were unable to determine the cause of death at a preliminary inquest Friday evening, and planned a post-mortem examination.

A possibility of foul play was hinted, although Coroner Nathan believes that the negro "just lay down in the snow and died." It has not been determined if the deceased man was intoxicated.

Death occurred during the progress of the snowstorm a few days ago, for snow lay not only on the corpse, but beneath it, as well, and the boots worn by the colored man were encrusted with snow, giving evidence that he had walked for some distance through the storm.

The dead man had been employed as a woodchopper, and his body was found by members of a negro family living near the church.

BISHOP DARST TO CONDUCT SERVICES

Bishop Thomas C. Darst, of the Episcopal diocese of East Carolina, arrived in Chapel Hill yesterday afternoon to be the week-end guest of the Chapel of the Cross. During his stay in Chapel Hill, he will be the house guest of the Rev. and Mrs. Alfred S. Lawrence at their home. He will conduct services this morning at the Episcopal church.

Bishop Darst received students from the diocese of East Carolina last night at 7:30 in the Episcopal Parish house. He will have an informal reception at the regular Sunday afternoon tea at the Episcopal parish house. The student vestry of the Episcopal church announces that all students of the University are cordially invited to attend these Sunday afternoon teas regardless of denomination.

Bishop Darst and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence will be the guests of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity at dinner today, and of St. Hilda's Guild at a supper at the rectory tonight at 6:30. Following this engagement, Bishop Darst will have an appointment with Dr. Lay.

Russian Symphonic Choir To Appear Here February 10th

Group Replaces Cancelled Ben Greet Players On Student Entertainment Program.

WILL BE IN SWAIN HALL

Program Divided Into Three Parts: Sacred, Classical And Russian Folk Music.

The Russian Symphonic Choir program, which will be given at Swain hall on Monday night, February 10, is one of the regular series of student entertainment programs, having been scheduled to take the place of the cancelled Ben Greet performances. The regular entertainment tickets will admit students to the performance.

The program to be sung by the choir is in three parts.

The first of these will be made up of Russian sacred music. No country today is as rich in this type of music as Russia, due to the fact that the Russian Catholic church has one of the oldest heritages of any of the churches now active.

The celebration of feast days and other occasions on the church calendar have been so frequent that the volume of musical literature which has been created is much greater than that of other churches. The calendar calls for some 250 liturgical occasions annually in addition to the 52 Sundays. Hence, the Russian composers have created an abundance of religious pieces, many of which will be represented on the first part of the program.

The second division is that of classical music, opening with Rachmaninoff's famous "Prelude in C Sharp Minor," arranged for the choir by Mr. Kabalchich, the director. No number will display the marvel- The choir begins to sing each selection without any preceding tone being given, as if perfectly trained on which note to begin. ous bass quality of the Russian

WHITE DOG TRUE TO LOCAL FIRE EATERS

Her grandfather was with the High Point fire department and her mother, Sadie, was for many years the only feminine member of the Chapel Hill department.

Now the granddaughter of the High Point veteran is one of the three paid employees of the local volunteer fire fighting organization. The other two are men, and they receive a crisp check every month for their services.

But the lady gets no check. Bones and a free license constitute the only pay of "White Dog," as the mascot of the Hill fireman is called. Half English Bull and half Pitt Bull the young daughter of Sadie is invaluable.

She has formed a great friendship with the 20 men who fight the fires. She knows each of them, and her job keeps her on the truck during its working hours. Woe betide anyone else who attempts to unwind fire hose or take an axe from the truck, or who attempts to ride to a fire.

In bygone days, negroes had been troublesome, but they are so no longer. White Dog, with one exception, dislikes the colored race—the exception being Johnnnie Johnson, a member of the department, with whom she is on cordial barking terms.

A THOUGHT A DAY

The more fiercely a man or a cause is attacked the more certain it is that they will be victorious.—Count Michael Karolyi.

Plans For The College Fraternity Of The Future

Speaking before the Interfraternity Conference in 1928, Dr. Francis W. Shephardson, president of Beta Theta Pi, declared " . . . I was . . . very greatly interested the other day to read of Harvard groping after something that would furnish that institution with some contact with a smaller group of people in the student body so there would be the human touch and not the mere conciousness of belonging to a great organization called a university.

"It may be that the destiny of the American college fraternity in the unfolding of the American educational system will be something like the small college of Oxford, and there may come a time when a chapter will have a house in which to live, a hall in which to meet, and one or more resident teachers in the chapter taking care of the elementary courses of life in college—something of that kind which will develop the life of the individual . . . "

Writing in the winter quarter number of The Rainbow, official publication of Delta Tau Delta, Daniel L. Grant, recently appointed national executive secretary of that fraternity and director of the University of North Carolina Alumni Loyalty Fund until his resignation last fall, urges that his organization adopt plans which will eventually produce the benefits suggested by Dr. Shepardson. The most important of Mr. Grant's proposals are that a leader, a preceptor, be placed in each chapter house to suggest, stimulate and aid the chapter and its members, especially in regard to scholastic difficulties; and that a comfortable, well-lighted and quiet library be established in each house. This library "is the workroom for more effective scholastic work whenever it is needed as such. Primarily, however, it is an intellectual playroom, the purpose of the preceptor being to develop in the men an intellectual life for its own sake. Of course, the library should contain all the standard reference works such as dictionaries, encyclopaedias, atlasses, and similar equipment which can always be at hand for studying in the house; equally it should contain the great, standard works of literature and the most interesting current literature."

Mr. Grant cites the experience of Delta Chi fraternity as an example of the practicality of his proposals. One chapter of this fraternity employed a tutorial adviser last year after a disastrous decline in scholastic standing. He developed into "what we call almost a personnel manager." Making direct contacts with the faculty members, he made an individual study of every member in the group and of the situation in the house.

At the end of this tutorial adviser's first semester of work, the chapter had advanced from the 24th position in scholastic standing to third. The total cost to the national organization was the board and room and $35 per month, which resulted in less than $200 to pull the chapter from 24th to third place.

"The preceptor will have no direct connection with grades (because the fraternity now requires good grades of its members)," Mr. Grant states. "He will be there to supply constantly that maturity which makes for civilization and for an understanding of that for which men come to college. A dozen men working for the backfield positions on any football team will have from one to four coaches. Surely it isn't too much to give thirty or forty men, living together—or trying to learn to live together—one coach in the vtals of social existence and intellectual endeavor."

Mr. Grant's proposals are worthy of serious consideration. If they are properly placed in operation, on a large scale at educational institutions throughout the country, it is probable that they will lead to the development of a unit of vast importance in the modern system of higher learning. Fraternities would take on new duties, new importance and new possibilities in their relation to the vital problems of higher education.

It is possible that the almost parasitical role of the fraternity in the educational system at present will be drastically changed if Mr. Grant's proposals are generally adopted and elaborated upon. From the mere social organizations of the present, the glorified collegiate Rotary clubs, might possibly emerge a new type of fraternity chapter. The most sublime, the most profitable moments of a man's life may come in his college days, when he hears musical compositions such as Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, perhaps for the first time, or when he reads the classics of various nations. It is this aspect of a man's intellectual and spiritual needs which would be satisfied by fraternities of the future, evolved from plans such as those presented by Mr. Grant.

Action For The Hilarious Ones

(H. J. G.)

For some unknown and uncivilized reason a wave of hilariousness apparently sweeps over the dormitories on the campus at certain periods of the year and certain hours of the night. With the approach of the Christmas holidays the wave reaches its crest. Just now, the wave is reaching tidal proportions in some quarters, and then, of course, only late at night.

Misguided students (so called for the sake of politeness) seize the still hours of the night to vaunt their irrepressible spirits to the world in general and their dormitories in particular. During the time when the rest of us are either trying to study or deep in sleep, these gentry deem it the proper time to crash burned-out electric light bulbs down the hall, or kick on doors, or turn on the radio. Week-ends are popular periods for this unrest to break out. But even a week-end may be considered by some as an opportunity to catch up on work or sleep.

The nit-wits who favor this form of personal entertainment should, of course, be reported to the proper authorities. There have been cases where this has not sufficed, and so retaliation is in order. Where public opinion is not sufficient to put a quietus on the exuberant ones, as it is in most cases, door-kickers and other nuisances should be quietly corralled, firmly lectured, and hung by the neck until dead. Luckily, there are not many who require such attention, but the few who do should receive it immediately. We will gladly attend any such hanging parties, and will even supply the rope.

Instructor-Student Relationship

In an editorial appearing in Thursday's issue of the Tar Heel I attempted to bring out the less favorable side of the relationship existing between instructor and undergraduate by stressing that doubtful art of the campus known as booting, the practice of attempting to curry favor with a professor by questionable methods.

There is a side to the question of personal contact between those imparting knowledge and those receiving it which is a great deal more pleasing, a side readily apparent in the expression of a mutually intelligent interest in a subject by a student and an instructor. Often, contrary to many current opinions about the lack of interest a collegian feels in his studies, an undergraduate has a desire to learn all he can about something appealing to him, and his obviously sincere attention to the subject forges a bond between him and his teacher that is of value to both.

An individual interest of this sort is by no means exceptional, in spite of the fact that the average student seems to remain passive to the appeal of learning. Still, when an individual with an obviously better background about the course comes under eye, an instructor is both surprised and pleased. This often leads to an actual friendship between the younger and the older man, stimulating an already active interest on the part of both. In any case such contact compels an instructor to change his opinion regarding the hopelessness of students, and the opinion of the student regarding the dry pedantry of instructors undergoes a change; he learns that they can be human and interesting if given an opportunity.

But this personal contact between undergraduate and faculty member is not nearly so common as it should be. Carelessness, lack of interest on the student's part, indolence, and above all, fear of his classmates' sneers at his "booting," are the main factors in this separation. This fear is one of the most woeful results of booting; the average student, not interested in the subject himself and too quick to judge the sincerity of others, often affixes this stigma too casually to an earnest desire for the expression of attentive interest. And the student remains in his shell of reserve, working out the subject by himself.

A large university can not be other than impersonal—to some degree, at least, and the opportunities for faculty and student contact are of necessity restricted. But there are very few instructors who do not welcome a display of intelligence on the part of some member of a class, and they respond accordingly, to the benefit of both. The faculty can usually differentiate between sincerity and hypocrisy in the attitude of conspicuous members of a class; the students should attempt to discriminate between the two also,—then there will not be this unfair judgment.—R. H.

Putting One Over On Rhodes

In changing the will of the late Cecil Rhodes so as to divide the United States into eight groups of six each, the British Parliament seems not to have been aware of the defects of such a regional plan of distribution. Heretofore students have been selected for study in England from individual states. The new plan provides that the scholarships be awarded by districts. Under the old plan, North Carolina and each other state, in the two out of the three years in which they were entitled to make appointments, would each make its appointment. Under the new plan, North Carolina and the five other states in the southern group throw the six appointments to which they are entitled into a pot, and the six appointments are made from that group of states without regard to state boundaries. Although it is conceivable that North Carolina, for example, might get all six of the appointments, it is equally possible that she might not even get one appointment. The new plan allows things other than merit to influence the appointments.

Students from sparsely settled states will no longer have an equal showing with students from the more powerful states when the appointments are made. In the Southwest it is certain that California will try to monopolize the appointments. In competition with the sophisticated youths of populous California what chance will the few provincial boys of Nevada and Arizona have? The change in Rhodes' will setting up the regional plan of distribution is going to mean that Arizona, Utah, New Mexico, and Nevada will seldom get an appointment, if ever.

The writer can see no reason for the unwillingness to continue giving each state the quota which it has had in years past. Even those states which are most sparsely settled ought to be able to furnish, as often as twice in three years, students worthy of Rhodes scholarships. Rigid examinations have heretofore guaranteed this. Just why this system should be discontinued is difficult to ascertain.

But regardless of the good or bad points of the new system of regional grouping, we feel that the will of Cecil Rhodes should not have been broken. He stipulated that each state should have appointees, there being nothing said about regional grouping. He stated that the state should be the unit of distribution rather than the eight sections of the country. There is no reason why the several states of the United States should surrender passively what Rhodes left them.—J. C. W.

Readers' Opinions

A BIT OF UNDERGRADUATE TOMFOOLERY

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Thursday night the occupants of the quadrangle dormitories were witnesses of one of the rarest and most delicious spectacles seen here in a long time. This was furnished by the Ruffin troupe. The stage was set between Ruffin and Mangum, with a background of falling snow and a dimly shining lamp post. The first act was "Children at Play" by eight boys clad in shorts, bath towels, and lesser clothing. The Farmer in the Dell scene was particularly impressive. This was followed by a number given by Baldwin and Arnold, service room managers of Ruffin. This was entitled, "On Receiving a Nickel." Mr. Baldwin was clad in suspenders. We wonder why he wore them. They were entirely unnecessary to his costume. The last act was given by Runt Johnson and Osmosis Moore. It was not named, but the writer got the impression of two young stags fighting for a doe.

THE REVIEWER.

DISAGREES WITH "R. H."

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

After having read R. H.'s article on booting, one could come to the conclusion that unless one had a bored expression on his face, never uttered a word in class, never asked questions or had any interest in the class whatsoever, he was guilty of that insidious practice of booting.

When he mentioned matters of this sort, in my opinion, he shouldn't be so dogmatic, as he may not be altogether right in his opinions or attitude.

If I'm interested in a course, ask questions on class, start a discussion, speak to the teacher after class about something in which the rest of the class may not be interested or show any interest at all, I should, in his opinion, be put into coventry.

Well, strange as it may see, I am inclined to disagree with his views. Of course, this is only my opinion and naturally does not necessarily have to be considered a criterion, but I would like to see the subject given more thought and explained in a more precise manner, thereby elucidating the intricacies which we humble freshmen may not comprehend.

Yours respectfully,
J. DRASNER.

THE CHAIN STORE EVIL

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Some time ago I read an article in your paper written by a Mr. McNairy giving his views on whether or not the chain stores were hurting the community. My opinion of this is altogether different from that of Mr. McNairy. I believe that out of the last four business failures in our town, at least, three of them were caused directly by chain stores.

The way I see it, the best thing that you can hope for your children is that they will receive about the pay of a private in the United States army if the chain gang continues to gain control in the future as they have in the past few years. It is true that some of your children will be doctors, some lawyers and some politicians who will make good money, but they will have to make it out of the chain store fellows because when the chains monopolize all the retail trade they will, to a very large extent, control the prices of agriculture and manufacture, and affect professional fees.

I would like to give an experi-

Pen Points

By H. J. Galland

"Yep," said the Oldest Inhabitant, carefully aiming at a grease-spot midway between the floor and the ceiling on the opposite wall, "yep, this here snow we've been havin' ain't nothin atall, nothin' atall. Now, I mind when we had a real snow back in '88, and the horse-cars in Chapel Hill—" "You're not," we interrupted, "by any chance referring to the Blizzard of March, '88, are you?"

"Yep," said the O. I., "you're durned right. Now this here little flurry we've been havin'—" It was at this point that we picked up a large, heavy, red brick and carefully crowned the Oldest Inhabitant on the center of his bald and hoary head. We will not have the Blizzard of '30 insulted.

Heywood Broun, the well known New York colyumist, stated recently that he had two ambitions in life—to get down to 200 lbs., and to have a sandwich named after him. We've attained one of Mr. Broun's worthy ambitions, for we've been told that there is now a Special bearing our moniker—or more politely, a sandwich has been given our name. We understand the chief ingredient is cheese. At any rate, reciprocity being what it is, we hereby state that Harry's Carolina Grill is the brightest, finest, cheeriest, and most flattering eating place in town.

We suggest that Harry make up a Co-Ed Dance Special. To be composed entirely of sardines—with rushin' dressing.

Note: If the gentlemen of Smith who cheerfully rallied round when they heard drinks were to be served, only to be offered Castor Oil, will call at the same place they will each be given a beautiful new box of matches, which, if lit and swallowed one at a time, are guaranteed to burn their tonsils—the effect they originally desired.

To settle several arguments we wish to state that the gentleman by the name of George Wilcox who played the part of Clara in "The Show-Off" ain't no gentleman. That is, he isn't a he she's a she. We mean, of course that in spite of the name, George is a perfect lady. Well, anyway she's a gal, and a swellegant actress, and that's that.

Another firmly-intrenched belief has just gone blah. For many years Carolina students have venerated the Davie Poplar as the tree most closely associated with the founding of the University. And now, according to recent research, the Davie Poplar isn't a poplar at all. Oh, well, a rose by any other name—.

Tales of the days that were, when men were men and snow was used to fight with, are particularly rife just at present. These stories of "the good old days when," however, can generally be taken with several grains of salt. If anyone believes the present fall didn't serve to move a few to the primal urge, let him examine a few of the bandaged and war scarred veterans now parading the campus. Then let him ask the bandaged hero if the days of campus snow-fights are past—and duck.

Duke Conquers Fighting Tar Heel Quintet In Fast Game

3,000 See Carolina Aggregation Go Down In Defeat 36 - 14.

MARPET AND BROWN STAR

Duke Blue Devils defeated a fighting Tar Heel quintet 36-14 last night at the Tin Can before a crowd estimated at 3,000. The superior offensive and defensive play of the Blue Devils was evident throughout the game, although the scoring attack did not begin until the second half. In this part of the game the Duke cagers had things their way, and notwithstanding the loss of their star forward, "Chalky" Councillor, who was taken out on account of fouls, kept up a scoring attack that lasted until the final whistle.

Carolina scored first with a goal from the side line by Billy Brown, acting captain for the Tar Heels. Councillor soon answered this with a goal for Duke and a foul shot following netted the Duke three points and the lead. Marpet answered with a goal for Carolina, but three successive Duke goals ended the struggle for leadership, and never again during the game were the Blue Devils in fear of losing their lead.

The Duke system of fast offensive play was vindicated in the game last night, when the hitherto excellent Tar Heel defense was shattered long before the game ended. The Duke passing, on the whole, was accurate, and short shots were responsible for the large score.

The all-around play of Rogers and Werber was most outstanding for the Blue Devils, while the work of the veterans Marpet and Harper was most outstanding for the Tar Heels. Rogers was high scorer of the game with 11 points, and his teammates Werber and Croson tied for second place honors with 7 points each. Farleigh, Tar Heel sub, did good defensive work.

Summary:

Duke (36)		Carolina (14)
Rogers (11)	R. F.	Neiman (2)
Councillor (5)	L. F.	Dameron
Croson (7)	C.	Harper
Werber (7)	R. G.	Marpet (5)
Farley (2)	L. G.	Brown (5)

Substitutions: for Duke, Conrey (4), Shaw; for Carolina, Choate (1), Greene (1), Farleigh, Edwards.

TAR BABIES LOSE TO DUKE FROSH

Blue Imps Fight Hard To Win 36-19 Score.

A well balanced, smooth working machine from Duke defeated a fighting Tar Baby quintet 36-19 in a thrilling encounter at the Tin Can last night before a capacity audience. The battle, which was the preliminary to the Carolina-Duke varsity game, gave the Blue Imps a strong lead in the race for state honors.

The Tar Babies were defeated but surely not disgraced. They fought to the last ditch, but they could not cope with the machine like perfection of the Blue Imps.

For the first 10 minutes the game was very close, the lead see-sawing back and forth between the two clubs, but the imps started hitting on all cylinders and gradually increased the lead. Hill, the Imps' versatile center, started the scoring by sinking a beauty from the sidelines, but Lineberger evened the count by caging a long one; then first one team would grab the lead and then the other would even the count. At 8 all, the Imps went on a scoring rampage which lasted until the end of the half. The half ended 23-10.

With the opening of the second half, the Imps started going again and garnered 5 points before Dunn could break the ice for Carolina. Dunn and Lineberger then accounted for 6 straight points before Duke could score again. The action from this point on was slow, neither team seeming to find the basket. With about 7 minutes to go, the Imps went on a scoring bee garnering 8 points. The game ended 36-19.

Capilli, the Imps diminutive forward, captured the scoring honors for the evening and was closely followed by Dunn, Carolina, and Hill, Duke, who scored 7 points each. For Carolina the most outstanding players were Lineberger and Dunn, while Cappili and Robertshaw starred for the Imps.

The lineup:

Carolina (19)		Duke (36)
Dunn (7)	Forward	Cappilli (8)
Hines	Forward	Horn (7)
Beale (4)	Center	Hill (7)
Henry	Guard	Robertshaw (6)
Lineberger (6)	Guard	Colley (6)

Substitutions: N. C.: Brown, Peres, Parsley, Hamlet, Moore (2), Markham.

Duke: Waller (2).

Referee: Goodwin (N.C.S.)

SIDELIGHTS

by "Heinie"

CAROLINA'S INVITATION to the Milrose track meet in New York is attracting an unusual amount of attention throughout the state. W. N. Cox, sports editor of the Greensboro Daily News, says that this is merely another one of the many recognitions given to Coach Bob for his work in developing outstanding track teams. Mr. Cox went further and stated that he had urged the nomination of Coach Bob as the southern representative to the Olympic Council last year. Nothing definite has come out of this suggestion but we hope that action will be taken in this line at the proper time in the future.

COACH BOB is now assisted in track by several of his former pupils. Coach Dale Ranson is the most active of these assistants and is really bearing the burden of the hard work in training the track men. Dale is one of the distinguished pupils of Coach Bob, for he won recognition as a stellar miler and captain of the 1925 track team. In addition to the track captaincy he was also leader of the cross country team of that year. Vernon Cowper, Dale's assistant, was one of the most outstanding pole-vaulters in the south last year and set a new high record of 12 feet 5 inches for the pole vault.

GALEN ELLIOTT is one of Coach Bob's biggest boosts to the present hall of fame. Galen is now teaching and coaching track at Charlotte high school, but he has been in several important meets since he stopped setting records in college. While at Carolina, Galen was the most outstanding miler and half-miler in Southern Conference circles and certainly the most outstanding seen at U. N. C. in recent years. Since leaving Carolina, Galen has competed against such outstanding distance men as George Hahn and Ray Conger. In one meet Elliott ran a close second to Hahn, and has distinguished himself in almost every meet which he has entered. In the 1928 Olympic tryouts he finished well up in the crowd, but missed the team by a very small margin. According to many sports writers he will have a much better chance of making the Olympic team in 1932 than he did in 1928.

THE BIG FIVE standings place Carolina in third place with a .500 average. Carolina has lost to Davidson and Duke, but has won from Wake Forest and N. C. State. Duke leads the North Carolina teams with a clean slate of three wins and no losses. Davidson follows closely but has accounted for only one game in the Big Five series. N. C. State has lost to Carolina and Duke, but won from Wake Forest. Wake Forest has lost all three of the games it has played. Carolina, Duke and State conquered the Demon Deacons. The standings follow:

TEAM	W	L	PCT.
Duke	3	0	1.000
Davidson	1	0	1.000
Carolina	2	2	.500
N. C. State	1	2	.333
Wake Forest	0	3	.000

TAR HEELS FACE HEAVY SCHEDULES

Winter Sports Teams Have Fourteen Contests In Week.

University athletic teams will face 14 contests during the coming week.

Northern tours by the varsity and freshman basketball teams, carrying four games for each quint, head the program. Both teams begin their campaigns on Wednesday night. The varsity faces four strong Southern Conference foes in V. P. I., Washington and Lee, Virginia and Maryland. The freshmen will meet the V. P. I. frosh, Augusta Military Academy, Woodberry Forest and Washington and Lee.

The southern championship Tar Heel varsity boxers and the freshmen will each face action twice. The boxers take on Duke's varsity and freshmen in the Tin Can here Tuesday night in the one event carded for Chapel Hill, and meet Virginia in Charlottesville on Saturday night.

The varsity wrestlers will meet Princeton at Princeton on Saturday night in their second big test of the season. A previous ambitious engagement was lost to Navy, but the Tar Heels have learned many things there.

The trackmen will see their first action of the new year when the picked mile-relay team goes to fill the Tar Heel engagement at the select Milrose Games in New York City on Saturday.

Only the freshmen wrestlers are without a contest.

The Tar Heels showed new life and punch in Big Five battles with Wake Forest, N. C. State and Duke. They lost an early-season game, 27-17, to Washington and Lee, but the meeting with V. P. I., Virginia and Maryland will be the first of the year for the Tar Heels.

The boxers face in Duke and Virginia two of the strongest foes in the path of their retaining their Southern Conference title of two years. The Carolina-Duke boxing meet, to get under way here Tuesday night at 7:30, is expected to draw a large crowd.

"GEORGIA" WINS OVER "VIRGINIA"

House, Nash, and Branch Oppose Magner and Slusser In Game Between Mythical Teams.

Henry House, varsity back from the 1929 edition of the Tar Heels, crashed over the goal line yesterday afternoon at Kenan stadium to put the game on ice for the mythical "Georgia" team. The score was 6-0. A line buck for the extra point was unsuccessful.

The game was played in a pond of melting snow. The slush was so bad that it was almost impossible for the players to get a toe hold in the ground. They slipped around ends, slid through the line, and sometimes stood on their heads.

When one heard Johnny Branch calling signals and saw Jimmy Magner tossing his bullet like passes, it reminded one of last fall. But yesterday the boys were not playing side by side; they were facing one another. Such men as Henry House, Captain Nash and Slusser and some of the others from last year's squad faced each other instead of being on the same team.

The longest run of the day was by Johnny Branch when he slipped and skidded around end for 23 yards. It looked like the Johnny Branch of old. Another time he received a punt and eluded every man, but the slick ground came up and hit him in the face. One must not forget next year's captain, Strud Nash. He got away for several nice gains and also came to the front when backing up the line.

The forward wall of the "Georgia" eleven seemed somewhat stronger than the mythical "Virginia" eleven, while the backfields of both teams appeared to be about equal.

One should not begin to pick outstanding stars for the players were so covered with snow and mud that they were hardly recognizable; but as far as the writer could see, it appeared that McDade, House and Nash were outstanding for the "Georgia" team and Magner and Slusser and Underwood were outstanding for the "Virginia" eleven.

The lineups were as follows:

Virginia		Georgia
Nelson	L. E.	Reid
Oliver	L. T.	Smith
Crew	L. G.	Zovesus
Greer	C.	Gilbreath
Dunavant	R. G.	Petrie
Underwood	R. T.	McDade
Allen	R. E.	Brown
Peacock	Q. B.	Branch
Magner	L. H.	Nash
McNeil	R. H.	Croom
Slusser	F. B.	House

Substitutions: for Virginia—Lassiter, Eskew, Sickler, Thompson, Liberstein; for Georgia—Davis, Frazier Johnson.

Officials: Enright and Cerney.

SIGMA XI SUPPER MEETING TUESDAY

Medical Professors To Outline Respective Research Work To Group.

At the February meeting of the North Carolina Chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific research fraternity, which is to be held Tuesday evening at 6:15 o'clock in the Carolina Inn, members of the faculty of the medical school will present brief outlines of their research work, and two doctors from outside the University will describe their research work.

In very brief talks Professors MacNider, George, Brooks, and McPherson, all of the medical school, will outline the research problems they are working on and will tell what progress they have made in their work.

Dr. Carrington, of the school of medicine at Duke University, will describe his research work, and Dr. Carrington, of Rainey Hospital, Burlington, will explain to the fraternity the work he is doing.

The meeting Tuesday will be one of the series of supper meetings that are being given this year and at which various departments of the University are presenting the research work being done in the department. Supper will be served in the Inn Annex at 6:15, but all members are requested to assemble in the lobby of the Inn before going to the Annex.

At The Carolina

A King who would be king will soon begin his reign in America.

His coronation takes place first of all in New York and Palm Beach, in both cities on February 19.

In New York winter snows and rich furs will mark the King's ceremonies.

At the same hour of the same night, ultra-smart Palm Beach will saunter in the thinnest of fashionable dress to the splendid hall where the King who would be King is to be acknowledged ruler of his adopted country.

Then the king will extend his reign to one hundred great cities of America simultaneously, when Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation and Publix Theatres Corporation adopt the innovation of presenting on the same night in theatres from coast to coast the brand-new all-technicolor, all talking, all singing, all everything entertainment, the "Vagabond King," starring Dennis King.

There you have the King—Dennis King—who would be king. The ambitions of this tall, lithe young Englishman with blue eyes and light brown hair, tremendous personal charm and a singing voice pure and flowing as liquid cold will be realized when first the fashion centers of America and then its prosperous cities give him an opportunity to show his stuff.

As a king should, Dennis King has a background of the theatre which makes his accession to popularity logical. John Drinkwater's famous repertory company in Birmingham, England, provided King's first opportunity. The war interrupted; a 16-year-old lad claimed he was 18 and so went to the front. There Dennis King was wounded, but he lived to return to London, where after the War he played the lead in "Monsieur Beaucaire," which movie fans will remember provided one of his best roles for Rudolph Valentino.

In America, Dennis King has played in Bernard Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra" and "Back to Methusaleh" for the Theatre Guild.

STUDENTS DEVISE ODD SORT OF SLED

The ingenuity of students, co-eds included, can no longer be questioned where pleasure is the matter of concern. However unusual and sudden the beginning of the snowfall Wednesday, by five in the afternoon a small group of students on Columbia street were energetically arranging a device for bob-sledding.

An interesting feature of the party was the presence of two co-eds, who were, possibly assisting in, but most likely providing inspiration for the proceedings. At any rate there were, also, some novel ideas, promising much fun and more excitement, being executed.

The sledding apparatus was devised from quite commonplace articles. Bed springs were hitched behind an automobile and on these were fixed a mattress. This was indeed, a very simple arrangement, but what fun couldn't it supply! It was a two-passenger affair.

J. O. U. A. M. Initiates

About half of the neophytes were initiated at that time, and the remainder held over until next Friday.

Readers' Opinions

nce I had with a big finance ompany that were operating on chain basis. To begin with, hey reduced the price of financng automobile notes to such a ow margin that the small, tate-owned finance company hat I was dealing with found it nprofitable to do business, herefore, discontinued. The arge chain financing company equired of the dealer unusual uarantees in this connection, which of course, would reduce heir cost of doing business. When times got a little hard in North Carolina they, without a moment's notice to me, refused o take my papers that had already stood the test that their ocal representative put all of them through. The advance notice that I had from these people that they were discontinuing business with North Carolina automobile dealers was not a second. Just advised me they were refusing papers already sent to them. To prove this discontinuance was no fault of mine; I have a letter that they wrote me, stating they hoped to do business with me when they re-opened in North Carolina. I believe this is the kind of treatment that we should expect to receive from any big chain gang.

I have in mind one family in Chapel Hill, consisting of a father, wife and several children. He finally became so poverty stricken farming that he bought a small grocery store and from time to time added to that small store until he had what we call a general mercantile store. Through his efforts in this store he supported his wife and 14 children. He sent half of his children to college, six of them having graduated and made useful citizens. Now, can we expect the manager of one of the chain stores in a small town to do this much for his family, since he works no doubt on a salary and a small percentage of the sales? The chain store manager has to work just as hard as did the farmer-merchant I referred to above, but the real owners and profit takers in this chain mercantile business are not local people and are the only ones connected with the chain business that really have worth while profits to build up communities. Certainly with profits going out of our community, taxes will become higher on us home folk or progress of schools, etc. will not continue. The chain stores have articles priced in their windows that they call leaders, or as I call "baits." These articles can be bought at a reduced price but it is hardly believable that this bargain price is not made up elsewhere. I was talking to one of the professors in the University in regard to the chain stores yesterday. He remarked that, everything being equal that he traded with the home stores as he would consider paying the other merchant a higher price a donation. I told him that I did not consider it a donation at all but a protection. He wanted to know what I was trying to protect. I told him: The future prices of groceries and the welfare of our communities and children. When these great capitalists gain full control of all retail business it is pretty reasonable to think that they will charge a tremendous profit and make it impossible for a citizen to go into business in a community that they control. It has been reported that in some towns they sell their goods at or below, cost until they gain control. I do not remember what town it was, but I have been told that one chain store would sell an article much cheaper than another store owned by the same concern twenty-five miles away. The one that sold it at a higher price had already run the old home town merchant out of business.

Another thing, here in our village we had two manufacturers that were making reasonable profits and paying to our town taxes on whatever they invested their profits in. When the chain stores came along they were approached as prospective customers for these articles but were immediately informed that they bought their goods in bulk quantities and were not interested in buying same locally. They did not even have the courtesy to ask one of our home town people the prices on his products.

Still another thing that I consider worth some attention is the fact that our home town merchants would deliver your goods to your door in any kind of weather and if you did not have the money to pay cash they would carry accounts for you. Of course, this added to the expense of doing business and it would not be reasonable to expect as low a price as the chain stores charge. Fortunately, we have in our town a home owned cash and carry store and I believe that those who want the cash and carry prices will eventually fall in line and spend their money with home town merchants.

We have a lot of poor people in this community that need help and I doubt very seriously if any of them ever received a donation or help of any kind from the chain stores. I know the Boy Scouts of the town are not sold on these fellows.

The loans that the banks are able to make are based largely on the amount of money that they have on deposit. According to my understanding, based on reliable sources, the chain fellows keep practically no balance in small town banks. I think this is worth considering as most all homes and businesses are started on borrowed capital. I think there are two ways of maintaining our progress. One is to stay out of the chain stores. The other is to place a sales tax on all articles sold that are manufactured out of our state. If neither of these are done then I believe we should teach our children to raise rice instead of going to school.

Noted Rabbi To Talk Here Twice This Week

of the most outstanding Jewish Rabbis in the United States. He is well known as a literary critic as well as being prominent for his advanced position on all liberal and social questions of the day. He has taken an active part in all movements to bring about international peace, having been a representative of the American League to Enforce Peace.

As well as being founder and president of the Jewish Institution of Religion (training of men for Jewish ministry), Rabbi Wise is also the author of numerous books; namely, "The Ethics of Solomon Ibn Gabriol," written in 1901; "How to Face Life," and "Child Versus Parent." Many volumes containing his sermons have also been published.

He is founder and first vice-president of the Oregon State Conference of Charities and Correction, and a late commissioner of Child Labor in that state. Having been very active in all Zionist movements, Rabbi Wise, besides being founder of the Zionist Organization of America, is also vice-chairman of the executive committee of the World Zionist Organization. He has done a great deal of work in the Near East Relief, being a trustee of this fund.

Coming through the country by way of Greensboro, Rabbi Wise will stop there with a few friends for lunch, and will drive here during the afternoon, arriving in time for his address at the Methodist church at 8:30.

Relation Of Science And Religion Sermon

Today at eleven o'clock at the Methodist church Rev. C. Excell Rozzell will give the first of a series of sermons dealing with science and religion. The subject today will be "The Gospel According to Science," a message showing wherein religion can profit from the scientific discoveries and attitudes. Mr. Rozzelle will not make an attempt to reconcile science and religion for the reason he does not consider that they have ever had a quarrel. The public is welcomed to these services.

Russian Symphonic Choir To Appear Here On February 10th

voice as much as this one. In this group there will also be two numbers from the popular Russian operas, Eugene Onegan and Prince Igor.

The final group will be one of Russian folk music. Practically no country has a richer folk lore than Russia. The native peasant is as capable of reflecting the true folk atmosphere through song as the Spaniard is through a bull fight; the Italian through opera; the French through exquisite cuisine; the American through baseball. In other words the folk song comes absolutely naturally to the Russian, and in most cases no new arrangements are needed, the songs being sung exactly as in the native surroundings. "The Song of the Volga Boatman," which will be sung in this group, means to Russia what the "Swanee River" means to America.

The entire program as sung by the choir will be in the Russian tongue, but the printed programs will carry the English translations, so that the audience will understand the character and mood of each number.

The director is responsible for the selection of the program, as well as for the arrangement of many of the selections. He regards his group as a symphony orchestra. It has been correctly named a "symphonic choir."

The performance will be given without the aid of an instrument, and one of the most mysterious features of the evening will be the absence of a given pitch before the numbers.

FAMOUS ZIONIST TO SPEAK TWICE IN CHAPEL HILL

Rabbi Wise To Be Heard Tonight In Methodist Church At 8:30, And Tomorrow In Gerrard Hall At 10:00.

Rabbi S. S. Wise, founder of the Zionist Organization of America, will speak here tonight at the Methodist Church at 8:30 o'clock.

The subject of tonight's address will be "My Vision of America." Following this lecture there will be an informal reception given to Rabbi and Mrs. Wise at the Carolina Inn by a group of Jewish students at the University. This reception is for all faculty members and students who desire to meet Rabbi and Mrs. Wise.

At 10:10 tomorrow morning Wise will deliver his second address in Gerrard hall. The subject of this talk will be "Jew and Christian: Agreements and Disagreements." All 9:30 classes will be cut short 25 minutes so that the speaker will have more time for his address. This lecture was previously announced to be given in the Methodist church, but on account of the distance of this church building from the campus, it was thought that it would be difficult for the students to attend the address, and then return to their 11:00 classes on time without cutting the talk short. In spite of the fact that Gerrard hall has a small seating capacity, it is hoped that many townspeople and faculty members as well as students will attend.

Rabbi Wise is well-known in literary life and is also probably one of the most outstanding Jewish Rabbis in the country. He has been very active in many movements to bring about international peace, having been a representative of the American League to Enforce Peace in recent peace movements. Besides being founder of the Zionist Organization of America, he is also vice-chairman of the executive committee of the World Zionist Organization. He is founder and president of the Jewish Institution of Religion (training men for the Jewish ministry) and is also an author of numerous books; namely, "The Ethics of Solomon Ibn Gabriol," "How to Face Life," and "Child Versus Parent." Many volumes containing his sermons have also been published.

While here Rabbi and Mrs. Wise will be the guests of the local Y. M. C. A.

LAWTON TO DELIVER ILLUSTRATED LECTURE

An illustrated lecture on roadside beauty, to be delivered by Mrs. W. L. Lawton, president of the National Society for Roadside Beautification, is scheduled for 8 o'clock Wednesday evening at the Carolina Inn, under the auspices of the Jefferson Davis highway committee of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

National organizations which have for their objects the preservation of natural beauty along the nation's highways, have chosen Florida and North Carolina as their demonstration fields, because these states show the most promise and are willing to cooperate extensively in the movement, according to officials.

Third Party Question To Be Debated Here Tonight

Howard Y. Williams Opposes Professor E. J. Woodhouse On Need Of Third Party In United States; Debate In Gerrard Hall.

Howard Y. Williams, executive secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, and E. J. Woodhouse, professor of government in the University, will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in Gerrard hall on the question, "Resolved, that there is need for a third party in the United States." Mr. Williams will support the affirmative and Professor Woodhouse is to oppose the plan.

The debate is to be held at 7 instead of 8:30 o'clock as was previously announced, so as not to conflict with the address of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, which is to be in the Methodist church at 8:30 tonight.

In 1926 Mr. Williams was candidate for mayor of St. Paul on the Labor-Progressive forces, receiving over 26,000 votes and coming within a few hundred votes of election. In 1928 he was the Farmer-Labor candidate for congress and again received a large vote.

Mr. Williams has traveled extensively in this and foreign countries, meeting personally many of the social, political and labor leaders of Europe. He is now traveling over the United States organizing, stimulating and cooperating with local third-party political movements that will eventually unite to create for this country a critical opposition party comparable to the British Labor party.

Professor Woodhouse is a graduate of Randolph-Macon College, the University of Virginia law school, and has studied at Chicago and Yale Universities. For several years he was professor of government at Yale and later held the same chair at Smith College. For several years he practiced law.

He came to the University in

DURHAM LAWYER EXPOUNDS LEGION MEMBERSHIP AIM

Robert E. Denny, Durham lawyer, stressed the importance of the membership drive which the American Legion is now staging in an address before the local post in the Episcopal parish house here last Saturday.

"The ultimate aim of the Legion," Mr. Denny said, "is to create a citizenship that will inculcate into the leaders of the coming generations the things for which we thought we fought for in 1917. The Legion is striving to make a happier citizenship."

"The importance of the membership drive," the speaker pointed out, "lies in the fact that only through a membership that is representative of the number of ex-service men can the Legion bring sufficient weight to bear on Congress to secure legislation favorable to the Legion."

Foreign Scholarships

There are several hundred foreign scholarships being offered to American students this year. Some of them provide tuition while others give expenses as well.

The travelling fellowships by the American-Scandinavian Foundation for studies in the Scandinavian countries will probably be of interest to a number of students here. The Foundation offers felowships of $1,000 each for graduate study in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark.

Anyone who is seriously interested in foreign study should see Dean Hibbard. Only juniors and seniors are eligible.

Attention is called to a letter appearing in the Open Forum today by a University student stating the qualifications of Josiah William Bailey, Raleigh attorney and candidate for the democratic nomination for United States Senator in the June Primary. The writer, a Raleigh Boy, is well acquainted with Mr. Bailey and writes on Mr. Bailey's qualifications without condemning other candidates.

DOWNING WRITES IN LAST ISSUE OF SCHOOL JOURNAL

February Number Of Publication Of School Of Education Is Released.

The February issue of the High School Journal, which is published monthly during the school year by the University school of education, appeared yesterday. The first article of the issue was contributed by Dr. E. R. Downing of the school of education of the University of Chicago. Dr. Downing, an authority on science in the United States, sketches the introduction and growth of the laboratory method in the teaching of science in the high school, with a summary of investigations made for the purpose of comparing the laboratory method with the demonstration method. The results of this survey indicate that the demonstration method is on the whole the superior.

In an article, "Building School Morale," by Miss Kate Finley, principal of the Rockingham high school, the importance of a system of student self-government in the high school is stressed, and an account is given of the work and success of this system in the Rockingham high school.

Miss Mary T. Peacock, formerly of the Salisbury high school, now a member of the state department of education, contributes an article containing suggestions for teachers' meetings.

The following special departments, contributed principally by members of the University school of education, are contained in the issue: The English column, by P. C. Farrar; the Latin column, by J. M. Gwynn; the Mathematics column, by H. F. Munch; the Science column, by C. E. Preston; the History column, by A. K. King; the French column by Hugo Giduz; the Parent-Teachers Association column, by Mrs. Binford; the Vocational Agriculture column, by R. H. Thomas; School Notes and Comments, by Dr. J. Henry Highsmith; and Debate Query, by C. R. Rankin.

DR. H. D. WOLF TO ADDRESS TAYLOR SOCIETY TONIGHT

Specialist In Labor Problems Will Talk On "Management And Technilogical Unemployment."

H. D. Wolf, associate professor of economics in the University and a specialist in the field of labor problems, will speak before the University student branch of the Taylor Society this evening on the topic "Management and Technological Unemployment."

The meeting, which is to be held in room 103 Bingham hall, at 7 o'clock, is the second that the society has held this quarter, and Dr. Wolf is the second of a series of faculty speakers who are to talk before the meetings of the society.

In his talk this evening, Dr. Wolf will discuss the problem of unemployment arising in certain industries since the introduction of labor-saving methods of production. He will present examples of the problem as it has arisen in certain industries and will show how the matter has been handled in certain plants where a satisfactory solution has been worked out. Dr. Wolf stated yesterday that he would not advance any solution of his own for the problem, but that he would tell what had been done to solve it satisfactorily in some definite industries where it had arisen.

The Taylor Society is an organization for the promotion of the science of business management, and in keeping with the purpose of the body, the meetings this quarter will be given over to talks by faculty members on subjects related to the general subject of business management.

Dorm Council Gives List Of Goods For Agencies To Handle

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the University it was decided to refer to the Carolina Dormitory Club the question of what the dormitory agencies should be allowed to handle. This was done because it was believed that the dormitory president should be well acquainted with the necessities of the members of the dormitories, and that it would be fair for both parties, the students and the agents, to have the presidents determine what should be sold.

The following list was agreed upon:

Package candies and mints, chewing gum, bottled drinks, milk and chocolate milk, sealed sandwiches, apples and oranges, salted peanuts, cigarettes and matches, package raisins, smoking tobacco, tooth paste, shaving cream, soap, hair tonic, take up pressing and cleaning, handle shoe repairing, writing materials, pennants, pillow cases, belts, on consignment and commission from local merchants, socks.

For other articles to be handled, it shall be necessary for the dormitory agents association to petition the buildings department for permission.

Bernard Cone Says Present Plight Of Textile Industry Is Caused By Over-Production

Speaks Here Under Auspices Of School Of Commerce.

PRESIDENT CONE MILLS

Declares Solution Not In Mergers, Labor Unions, Surveys Nor Legislation; Production Must Come Down To Consumption.

"The present plight of the textile industry is due to the simple fact that in recent years there has been overproduction and underconsumption, and the way out lies neither in mergers, labor unions, surveys nor legislation," Bernard Cone, head of the Cone textile mills in Greensboro and a former president of the North Carolina Cotton Manufacturers Association, declared here last night in an address before an audience of University students and faculty members.

Mr. Cone spoke under the auspices of the school of commerce. He was invited here to present the textile situation from the manufacturer's point of view, in keeping with the University's traditional policy of seeking the truth through the presentation of all sides of controversial matters. He spoke in the auditorium of the school of commerce and was heard by a large audience.

Mr. Cone was introduced by Dean Dudley D. Carroll, who presided and who explained that this was one of a series of addresses on the textile situation. Prior to the address Mr. and Mrs. Cone were the guests of a group of University officials and their wives at a dinner at the Carolina Inn.

"I am sorry, but I have no remedy to offer," Mr. Cone said after enumerating at great length the ills of the textile industry. "The thing will have to work itself out like an epidemic in influenza or the aftermath of a stock market debacle or a tidal wave.

"Either production will have to come down to consumption or consumption catch up with production. Some of the less efficient mills will have to go under and the remainder put upon some sort of efficiency basis. There will have to be even greater curtailment in the future than in the past.

"This means further unemployment, and I should think that the thoughtful citizen would see that these are no times to try and force the issues of higher wages or lower hours upon an already over-burdened industry."

Declaring that he had come to the University to try to straighten out what seemed to be "a serious misunderstanding and misapprehension as to the aims and ideals of the cotton manufacturers," Mr. Cone asserted that "the labor difficulties in this state are by no means as general or widespread as a reading of recent newspapers would lead one to suppose."

Confessing that he was once a collegian himself, the Greensboro manufacturer said he was at a loss to understand why the "average collegian of today seems to be so intrigued by this idea of labor unions. Perhaps the explanation is that their sympathies, rather than the calm reflective judgment of

Faculty To Consider Requiring Average Of Grade C To Graduate

At the next meeting of the undergraduate faculty in Bingham hall at 4:30 p. m. Friday, February 14, the following ruling will be introduced for decision: "To be eligible for graduation a student must secure the grade of C or higher on at least half of his courses."

Interpretation of this ruling:

(1) The rule will go into effect in September 1930 to apply to all undergraduate students for work passed subsequent to that date.

(2) A student who completes thirty-six required courses but with grades which do not entitle him to his degree will be allowed to take additional junior-senior courses until such time as he meets the requirement of the rule.

(3) Transfers with advanced standing will come under this rule only for those courses pursued at this institution.

Wilmington Bishop Guest At Church

Judging by attendance and the unusual number of entertainments, the Episcopal tea of the past Sunday afternoon was the most successful of the winter quarter. Given in honor of Bishop Darst of Wilmington, the affair attracted a large number of students and townspeople to meet the Bishop and to enjoy the musical program.

Mr. Urban Holmes of the romance language department, gave a group of two baritone solos, accompanying himself on the piano. Following Mr. Holmes, Jack Wardlaw's Banjo Boys gave several popular selections, including a few old tunes. The musical program was concluded with music by Bill Stringfellow's Orchestra, which also played for the singing of several hymns.

Tea, sandwiches and candy were served by the ladies of the parish.

Memorial Hall Goes

The former tranquillity of famed Memorial hall is being ruthlessly disturbed by the crew of men in charge of its demolition. There is an unusual amount of activity going on in and outside of the building.

The benches are being taken out and the rest of the building is being minutely probed for possible salvaging of materials. Linoleum, window sashes, heating apparatuses, and electrical appliances are being rigorously tested for future use.

The contractors, Atwood and Nash, have intimated that the tablets taken from the hall will be stored in the basement of Phillips hall in a safe dry spot where they will remain until the new auditorium is completed.

The new building will be made of red brick, with stone trimmings, and will be in harmony with the architecture of surrounding buildings. It will have a seating capacity of 1300, and a gallery seating capacity of 500. The stage, larger than that of Memorial hall, will have on it a movable screen to facilitate the presentation of major productions and to provide a more artistic background.

A THOUGHT A DAY

Tar Heel Topics

Current rumor has it that the co-eds are in training for the track team which they are to have this spring. Covering a lot of laps, no doubt.

The former Margaret Couzens, daughter of Senator James Couzens, has eloped because she thinks "big weddings are messy." Having seen the bills for one or two of these "big weddings," we agree most heartily.

The new cruiser "Augusta" was launched at Newport News Saturday while the London Naval Conference was busy abolishing big navies. Uncle Sam seems to believe in building before he talks about abolishing.

Suggestion to aspiring campus political candidates: follow Cy Edson's example and persuade Harry to name a sandwich after you. Buy up a flock of them and give them away just before elections. That's publicity plus!

Professional Drama For The University At Last

Although the architects and the building committee have not announced definite plans for the auditorium which will replace Memorial hall, it is generally assumed that a large stage with curtains and backdrops suitable for the presentation of dramatic performances will be an important feature of the new building.

The University has never had a public building adequately equipped for presentations of the drama before large audiences; the need for such a building has been great, especially during the past decade, when the student body has almost doubled. With the condemning of Memorial hall and the decision to erect a new auditorium has come an opportunity to satisfy this need, one of the most pressing that the University now faces.

Ample overhead space, comfortable dressing rooms and curtains of good quality are necessary to the adequate staging of a dramatic performance. It is expected that the architects will provide these things when they draw up plans for the new auditorium.

Last year the student entertainment committee had an opportunity to book the Theatre Guild, probably the finest dramatic organization in the country, for a performance here. The performance would have been included in the regular entertainment program without extra cost to the students, but in view of the woeful inadequacy of Memorial hall for the staging of such an attraction the committee was forced to omit the Guild from its program. This year the Ben Greet players, renowned Shakespearean troupe, were booked by the committee, although with much misgivings concerning the suitability of Memorial hall for the performance. When Memorial hall was condemned the Ben Greet managers were induced to break the contract, as it was then entirely out of the question to present them here.

The drama is a vital part of American life; it is almost essential that the University students be enabled to attend dramatic performances of genuine merit. Intense interest in the work of the Playmakers is exhibited by the students, faculty and townspeople alike, and all of their performances attract capacity audiences here. Handicapped as the Wigue and Masque has been by the lack of a suitable auditorium, its annual presentations have been enthusiastically received.

That amateur dramatic productions are very popular here is an indication that professional performances will be keenly appreciated, and that at least two or three should be presented on the campus every year. The seating capacity of the Playmaker theatre is far from sufficient to accommodate the large audiences which are essential to the financing of professional performances; the new auditorium must be provided with the equipment necessary for the staging of these performances if the University is to have them within the next several years.

Especially during the summer schools is the professional drama desirable here. Thousands of school teachers and other persons who are not financially able to travel from their comparatively isolated communities to attend professional performances in the large cities are here for the summer sessions. These people desire and need the intellectual and spiritual inspiration and enjoyment which real drama provides; they will not obtain it unless it is provided here.

Adequate facilities for professional dramatics have long been needed here. It is fortunate, perhaps, that venerable Memorial hall has at last succumbed to the ravages of time, for its passing has removed the last barrier to the construction of an auditorium in which professional performances may be presented.

Mr. Beard Defines The Constitution

This is the season of oratory; in the next few weeks ambitious high school and college students will be expounding the glories of our flag, the virtues of our constitution, and the nobleness of our country, before audiences throughout the land. The newspapers are sponsoring a national oratorical contest among the high schools and colleges on the subject of the constitution. Many intrepid young orators will declaim in mighty tones that our constitution is the greatest instrument ever devised for governing a nation, without once thinking of the meaning of their words.

In a remarkably lucid article in the current issue of Harpers Charles A. Beard writes on "The Dear Old Constitution." While a reading of this article might take some of the youthful enthusiasm and fire from the false platitudes and maxims of the youthful orators, a reading will prove beneficial to one who has swallowed the hokum generally handed out in constitutional orations. Mr. Beard is a man of immense learning, deep understanding, and keen insight. He writes of the constitution with a wealth of historical background and a close association with present day problems. His conclusions are illuminating and interesting.

Among other things Mr. Beard finds that "the theory that the constitution is a written document is a pure fiction. The idea that it can be understood by a study of its language and the history of its past development is equally mythical." He defines the constitution as "what the Government and the people who count in public affairs recognize and respect as such, what they think it is."

One of the favorite practices of young orators is the use of strong similies to show the stableness and permanence of the constitution. "As strong as the rocks, as enduring as the sphinx, as everlasting as sands of the desert"—these in general are stock phrases known by every young speaker. "The constitution is always becoming something else," Mr. Beard finds. He traces numerous instances of changes in the interpretation of the constitution and shows how it is always being interpreted differently to meet new problems and new demands. The interpretation of the document changes as often as the personnel of the Supreme Court changes. The reasoning of Chief Justice Marshall was quite different from that of Justice Taney; yet each interpreted it for his own day.

There is sarcasm in the title of Mr. Beard's paper, "The Dear Old Constitution." He dares to poke jibes at a document said by many to be as sacred as the Sermon on the Mount. He points out the ridiculousness of the procedure of the Supreme Court in trying to interpret the constitution as the framers would interpret it; only scanty records are left of the proceedings of the constitutional convention and few of the framers have left their opinions. By a substantial argument Mr. Beard establishes the soundness of his judgments.—J. D. M.

A business of $200,000,000 a year has been built up out of materials dumped into waste-baskets. There's a value in those poems people send to newspapers, after all.—Altoona Mirror.

Stephen S. Wise

When Stephen S. Wise returned to New York some 20 years ago from Portland, Oregon, to take charge of the Free Synagogue, which he founded, the Outlook praised the organization for having at its head a man who was a civic leader as well as a pulpit leader. As commissioner of child labor of the state of Oregon, he was largely responsible for the famous child labor law of that state. His interests also extended to reform of the juvenile courts, and his efforts were very effective in this field.

It has been since his taking over the Free Synagogue, however, that he has gained most prominence as the leader of the new Jewish faith in America. He is a member of the pioneer generation which broke away from the orthodoxy of the old church and organized the new school on more liberal principles. And it may be said that when he founded the Zionist Organization of America he assumed the position of one of the world's great Jews.

Besides being a theologian of the first rank, he is an author with a large group of readers, a sociologist of note, and a vigorous advocates of world peace. His interests are versatile, and he is regarded as a man of action and thought.

In men such as Dr. Wise, Bertrand Russell and William Beebe, the community has the opportunity of hearing men who have achieved noteworthy success in their respective occupations. The appearances of such men on a program of lectures constitute one which is to be proud of.—B. M.

Readers' Opinions

BAILEY FOR SENATOR

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Bailey is well qualified to be senator from North Carolina. As Editor of the Biblical Recorder he was distinguished for his ability to analyse problems clearly and for his power to express them eloquently. As a lawyer he is recognized for his splendid intellect and forceful persuasion. His career in politics is peerless beside that of any other for the vigor of his fighting spirit, his honesty and sense of fairness, and his zealous adherence to democratic principles. He has been Collector of Internal Revenue, and his entire record is clear of any hint of grafting.

He has been a "regular democrat" in every sense of either word. In the recent presidential election he managed Al Smith's campaign in North Carolina and gave up every other consideration to tour the state in behalf of the "Happy Warrior." His reasons were twofold. Primarily he admired Smith's ability and wished as well to support the Democratic nominee. Besides, he was infuriated by the stupid prejudice against Smith that lay directly in religious bigotry. He was not only fighting for the democratic party but for the principles of religious liberty, which found in him a worthy and a jealous champion. Mr. Bailey is an outstanding figure in the South's progress. In the Senate, his tremendous analytical mind, coupled with his superb vision, would prove a credit to the state that would not soon be forgotten.

The modernist has adopted a number of fallacious beliefs. As for the reason, it is difficult to say. Perhaps in this modern age the glory and beauty of former times has lost its lustre. To become trivial, we present a list of modern credoes. The modernist believes:

That the sun at late evening is no longer beautiful because in being beautiful through countless centuries it has so scraped and scarred its surface on the sharp points of the horizon that it has marred eternally its former brilliance.

That the Ragged Robin is an uncivilized weed that grows in meadows and lacks all semblance of beauty and attachment to romance; and that Orchids and American Beauties are far more to be desired.

That one must read all of the books on the Best Sellers and Book of the Month Clubs lists and not forget oneself so far as to attempt a choice for oneself.

That one must take one's afternoon walk down the frequented promenades and not stray off into country bypaths where one will accumulate cockle-burrs and dust on newly-pressed trousers.

That one plays classical music only when entertaining distinguished friends, and that when one is alone one always reverts to the latest jazz.

That day-dreaming is absurd and the inevitable sign of a worthless youth who will never amount to anything; and that to say that air-castles hurt one's head (and heart) when they topple down is to make oneself a fool (and a liar).

That to believe in this age of enlightenment that George Washington chopped down a cherry tree and told the truth about it is a sign of backwardness.

That the talkies are "just grand!" and that every movie is better than the one which preceded it.

That all geniuses are stoop-shouldered and have a far-away look in their eyes and run around in the rain bare-headed.

That it is uncouth and ill-mannered to eat hunks of rye-bread and drink milk out of bottles before a fire late on rainy nights.

That when one does not choose to dance and carry on absurd conversations with one's partner, one is a social outcast.

That writing poetry is a sign of love-sickness and that reading the classics without being forced to do so is unmistakable proof of imbecility.

That all dramatic critics and reviewers on the campus will boost a production if the manager has given them passes for all of their friends or if they have a "crush" on one of the actors (or actresses) in the performance.

That South Carolinians live solely off of rice and that they are so backward that most of them who come to this University don't know that the War is over.

That all co-eds sit on the front row in their classes and cross their legs and smile serenely at their professors.

That getting dates with numerous girls at the "co-ed shack" is a sure sign that one is "getting along."

That using polysyllabic words is evidence of a marvellous vocabulary, and that when one indulges in simple words, he doesn't make the impression that he should.

That proper college atmosphere is created by running up and down the halls of dormitories at midnight and shouting "fire" and overturning the beds of incautious and unsuspecting students.

That newspaper columnists are the biggest liars on the face of the earth and that they never say what they believe.

COMER SPEAKS AT SOUTHERN PINES

Mr. Harry F. Comer, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. here, was the chief speaker last Sunday night on the Platform Hour held each Sunday night at the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines, N. C.

Mr. Comer's subject was "The New Morality."

Following the talk was a half hour of violin and piano music given by Arlindo Cate and Harold S. Cone, students at the University.

Dr. Metzenthin To Do Research In Europe

Dr. E. C. Metzenthin, of the German department, expects to go to Europe sometime this year to do some research work in relation to the 6000 verse, old Saxon epic, "The Heliand."

Philologists have tried in vain to discover the authors' name or the date and place of composition. The original copy has never been found, but Dr. Metzenthin intends to make photostatic reproductions of the extant four copies and work with them. He intends to visit the libraries of Europe with a view to comparing his reproductions of "The Heliand" with as many as possible of the Germanic manuscripts of the 9th and 10th centuries.

Dr. Metzenthin expressed the hope that he would be able to contribute his share to the solution of this perplexing problem.

No Esperanto Club Meeting Tuesday

Dr. E. C. Metzenthin announces that this Tuesday's meeting of the Esperanto Club will be postponed because of the appearance of Dr. Stephen S. Wise. The next meeting will be held on Thursday at 5:00 in 109 Saunders. Dr. Metzenthin also announces that a number of Esperanto books which have been paid for are still in his office and, as there is a great demand for them, he wishes the owners to call for them.

CAROLINA MEETS DUKE BLUE DEVILS HERE

Tar Heel Boxers Defend Conference Title Tonight

Rowe Has Veterans In Good Condition For Bouts With Duke.

IS SCHEDULED FOR 8:30

Saint Amand-Sheffield And Carper-Davis Fights Are Expected to Feature Card.

The undefeated Tar Heel boxers, southern champions for two years running, are planning to shoot the works against Duke here tonight at 8:30 in a meet that promises thrills galore.

So much does Crayton Rowe, crafty Tar Heel boxing coach, respect the ability of the Duke mit crew that he sent his team against V. M. I. Saturday night with but one veteran in the lineup.

Captain Archie Allen, who got the one knockout of the meet, was the veteran. Cohen, Gatlin and Smathers, who won decisions in the 125, 135 and 160-pound classes to give the Tar Heels a 4-3 victory, were all substitutes.

So also Rosenfeldt, 160-pounder, whom Crayton Rowe sent against the Cadets' heavyweight, and Avery, whom he sent against the V. M. I. light heavy. The Tar Heels forfeited the 115-pound match rather than fight Evan Vaughan, suffering with a cold.

This means the Tar Heel lineup of Vaughan, Sheffield, Goodridge, Captain Allen, Davis, Warren and Koenig, with every man a veteran but Koenig and he with previous boxing experience, will probably be in the best shape of the year for Duke.

Coach Rowe thinks the Tar Heels are going to need all this and more. The Devils boast some of the best college boxers in the country. Outstanding especially are St. Amand in the 125-pound class, and Carper, who scored five knockouts last year, in the 160-pound weight.

The teams will probably line up as follows: Edwards, Duke, vs. Vaughan, 115-pounds; Captain Saint Amand, Duke, vs. Sheffield, 125; Starnes, Duke, vs. Goodridge, 135; Matheson, Duke, vs. Captain Allen, 145; Carper, Duke, vs. Davis, 160; Bolich, Duke, vs. Warren, 175; and Hyatt, Duke, vs. Koenig, heavy.

The Sheffield-Saint Amand, Davis-Carper and Hyatt-Koenig fights, the latter pitting two outstanding gridders against each other, are expected to prove especial thrillers.

Mangum Beats Lawyers

S. I. C. SPORTS

(By Browning Roach)

The fourth week of conference play ended Saturday night with only three teams remaining in the undefeated list. Alabama replaced W. and L. at the top of the list by taking a pair of close tilts from Mississippi and boosting her total to five wins, while the Generals held on to their four victories by steering clear of conference opponents. Sewanee also held her own and retained third place with two wins.

Tennessee dropped the Kentucky Wildcats from the undefeated rank with an extra-period victory in Knoxville Friday night. Tennessee's sole defeat of the season was at the hands of the Wildcats a couple of weeks ago and the Volunteers were trailing Kentucky until the final minutes, when they opened up a scoring barrage that tied the count and then ran up a four point margin in the extra period to win 29 to 24. The Wildcats then attempted to make up for the loss Friday by eliminating Georgia, another member of last week's undefeated class, in an extra session contest Saturday night at Athens in which they eked out a 22-21 verdict. Georgia had won over the luckless Auburn quint 43 to 35 early in the week.

Mississippi seemed to have been playing under a hard luck jinx last week. After dropping the two to Alabama, the Mississippians proceeded to New Orleans where they lost two to Tulane, 27 to 17 and 33 to 27. Vandy also continued in a losing streak and dropped two in a row, one to Clemson Friday night 32 to 27, and the second to Georgia Tech Saturday 46 to 25.

North Carolina members of the conference had a fairly successful week, their only losses being to each other. Carolina broke even in two games, winning from N. C. State Tuesday and losing to Duke Saturday. State pepped up her offensive after the loss to Carolina and made a successful invasion of Virginia, taking one from the University of Virginia 36 to 31 and nosing out Maryland 28 to 26.

L.S.U. advanced her percentage with a win over the Mississippi Aggies and claimed the middle position in conference standings. Virginia, with successive losses to V. M. I., N. C. State and V. P. I., gained the doubtful distinction of having lost more games than any other conference team and is pushing Florida and South Carolina for the cellar berth.

The team standings:

Teams	W.	L.	Pct.
Alabama	5	0	1.000
W. and L.	4	0	1.000
Sewanee	2	0	1.000
Kentucky	5	1	.833
Georgia	4	1	.800
Duke	4	1	.800
Tennessee	4	1	.800
N. C. State	4	3	.572
Clemson	4	3	.572
Tulane	3	3	.500
Maryland	2	2	.500
L. S. U.	2	3	.400
V. P. I.	2	3	.400
Mississippi	3	5	.375
Ga. Tech	2	4	.333
North Carolina	1	2	.333
V. M. I.	1	2	.333
Auburn	1	4	.200
Miss. A. and M.	1	4	.200

BASKETBALL TEAM LEAVES TONIGHT

Courtmen Invade Virginia And Maryland For Four Games With Conference Foes.

A squad of 11 Tar Heel basketeers, Coach Jim Ashmore and Manager Lloyd Thompson will leave tonight on Carolina's annual invasion of Virginia and Maryland. Players making the trip are Dameron, Cleland, Neiman, Green and Hutchinson, forwards; Harper and Edwards, centers; and Choate, Brown, Marpet and Alexander, guards.

In V. P. I. the Tar Heels will meet a formidable foe, inasmuch as the N. C. State basketeers won from the Gobblers several days ago only after a hard game. After this loss the Tech cagers administered a beating to the Cavaliers, also after a hard fight.

In the Washington and Lee encounter, the Tar Heels will be out to avenge a 27-17 defeat handed them several weeks ago by the fast General quintet. The Maryland battle promises to be especially interesting because both State and Duke beat the Old Liners, but only by hair-breadth margins of 28-26 and 28-27 respectively. The Old Liners will undoubtedly lay for this third North Carolina invader with a vengeance.

Albright Gets Only Fall Against V. P. I.

DUKE - CAROLINA TONIGHT

Wrestlers Have Tough Match With Princeton; Trackmen Enter Millrose Games Saturday Night.

(By Will Yarborough)

Opening with the Duke-Carolina boxing bouts tonight the Tar Heel athletes will hit the toughest week of competition of the winter quarter. The week's card is climaxed by participation in the annual Millrose games by Carolina's mile-relay group and the wrestling match with Princeton. Only one event of the thirteen is listed for the Tin Can—tonight's bouts with Duke.

The latter part of the week the teams travel north. Varsity and freshman basketball teams will invade Virginia and Maryland. The wrestlers go to Princeton, the boxers to Virginia, and the trackmen to New York.

Carolina has scored wins in its first three matches of the season, W. & L., V. P. I., and V. M. I. lost decisions to the Tar Heels. The big test of the season is with Duke tonight. Packing a heavy hitting group of pugs, Coach Tilson is preparing to give the 1929 Southern Conference champions the hardest tilt of the year. A freshman match scheduled as a prelude to the varsity encounter was called off.

Wednesday night the basketball teams hit the road for Virginia. Contests with V. P. I., Washington and Lee, Virginia and Maryland will give the basketeers work for the week. The freshmen match these contests with engagements with V. P. I. frosh, Augusta Military Academy, Woodberry Forest School, and Washington and Lee frosh.

Virginia, long contenders for the conference title in boxing will entertain the Tar Heels Saturday night at Virginia. But Carolina's first bid for fame on the boards will be made this same night when Coaches Fetzer and Ranson take a picked quartet to New York for the annual Millrose games. The Tar Heels have been working for over a month in preparation for this event and the coaches are planning to have a group of speed boys on hand for the affair.

Coach Quinlan will lead the wrestlers against tough opposition in Princeton. The New Jersey team is the second hard contest in a row for the Tar Heels.

The week's card is a big one. It gets going tonight in proper style with the boxing bouts. It is climaxed with the teams hitting the hardest competition of the season—Maryland, Virginia, picked relay teams from all parts of the country in New York, Princeton.

Best Trims Lewis

Best House won over Lewis 28 to 11. Wright, for Best house, led the scoring with 11 points while Leonard was close behind with ten. McKinney and Latham also played well.

The lineup:

Best House (28)		Lewis (11)
Leonard (10)	Right Forward	Morgan (0)
Powell (0)	Left Forward	Rankin (2)
McKinney (6)	Center	Latham (9)
Wright (11)	Right Guard	Michael (0)

Tackle vs. End

Football days of '29 will be recalled in the Tin Can here tonight when Bill Koenig, Tar Heel tackle, squares off with Don Hyatt, Duke end, in the heavyweight match that promises to be one of the biggest thrillers of the meet between Carolina's Southern Championship boxers and Duke's outstanding contenders. Ends and tackles, it seems, square off in more places than on the gridiron.

Six Vets Fight Tonight

When North Carolina's Southern Championship Boxers faced V. M. I. last Saturday night, and won a 4-3 victory, Coach Crayton Rowe saved six regulars from the lineup. The dope is that the wily Rowe is planning to shoot the works against Duke, when the Tar Heels and Devils clash in the Tin Can here tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

A THRILLING MATCH

The Davis-Carper 160-pound match promises to be one of the real thrillers of the Carolina-Duke mit meet here tonight. Both boys are rangy, fast, and hard hitters. Both are veterans, but they have never met before. Davis fought out of his weight to take care of the 175-pound post for the Tar Heels last year. Carper, who had five knockouts for the season, got the best of the Tar Heel's Charlie Brown. Now Davis will be fighting to square Charlie's old account.

CHARLOTTE LEADS CLASS A IN WEST

Durham, Raleigh, And Wilmington Hold First Place In The East.

A rather dull week in class A high school basketball competition was concluded with Charlotte and Durham maintaining the lead in their respective leagues. Charlotte is credited with seven wins for the only perfect record in the western conference. While Durham, Raleigh and Wilmington in the East have averages of 1.000 percent, Durham holds the lead by virtue of having three wins. Raleigh and Wilmington have two victories.

Sponsored by the High School Athletic Association of North Carolina, the class A conferences are made up of the 14 largest schools in the state, with seven schools in each section. The conference standings are determined on a percentage basis, the winner in each district meeting here in a final contest for the state championship.

Standings up to date in the East are as follows:

Raleigh	2	0	1.000

ACADEMY OFFERS PRIZE FOR ESSAY

Science Group Will Award Loving Cup For High School Paper On Chemistry.

The North Carolina Academy of Science will award a prize this year for the best essay written by a bona fide high school student on any subject in the field of chemistry or physics, it was announced here today by Dr. H. R. Totten, secretary of the academy.

The essays are not to exceed 2500 words and should be sent to Professor R. N. Wilson of Duke University, at Durham, N. C., not later than April 10 of this year, the announcement stated.

Further specifications were that all manuscripts should be typewritten on one side of regular 8½x11-inch paper with a title page bearing the subject of the essay, the writer's name, the name of the school to which the student belongs, and the courses taken in science. It is not necessary that the student be registered in the subject in order to compete in the contest.

Contestants may receive aid from instructors only in securing materials, the composition of the essay being wholly that of the competitor and so certified by the principal of the school. In case more than three students from a given school submit essays, the school authorities are to select the three that rank highest and submit them.

The judges will be selected by the academy and will announce the winner of the prize at the annual meeting of the academy to be held May 1.

The prize, a silver loving cup, was won last year by Miss Lila Aaron of Lexington high school, Lexington, N. C., the subject of the essay being "Community Health."

Glee Club Entertains Sophomores In Chapel

The glee club entertained the sophomores in chapel yesterday morning with a number of selections, three of which are to be given in the southern intercollegiate glee club contest to be held in Greenville, S. C., February 7.

The performance, though much in the order of a practice preparatory to the coming contest, was well done, and a loud ovation, expressing sophomoric appreciation, was accorded the singers.

The first two numbers given were "The Long Day Closes," by Sullivan, and "Now Is the Month of May," by Morley. "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt, which was given next, is the choice song of the Carolina glee club, to be sung in the contest in the group in which each school sings a song of its own selection. The club rendered next "Hark, Jolly Shepherds," Morley, the selection to be sung in the contest by all contestants. The sophomores then stood to the strains of the new alma mater song, composed recently by Johnston. The new alma mater is, as H. S. Dyer, who was directing, said, more musical than the familiar air, and hence better suited to the purposes of the contest.

MISS METZENTHIN WILL RECEIVE SCHOLARSHIP

Miss Esther Marie Metzenthin of the German department, who is a student assistant at Bryn Mawr, will receive next year a traveling scholarship or an instructorship, according to officials of the college.

Miss Metzenthin is a graduate "cum summa laude" of Duke University where she completed the course in three years, specializing in French and German.

A Correction

The Sunday Tar Heel carried an announcement to the effect that the U. of N. C. branch of the A. Ph. A. would meet February 12, at 2:15 P. M. This should have read—7:15 P. M.

Coroner Lays Death Of Negro To Cold

Jordan Alston, 21, colored, who was found dead in the snow last week near the New Hope church, came to his death as a result of exposure to the cold, according to the findings of Coroner S. A. Nathan and a jury of six men.

Witnesses who were examined brought forth the information that the dead man had been paid $1.75 shortly before he was last seen alive, and, since no money was found on his person, it was believed that he had spent it for liquor and in a befuddled condition lost his way.

Half-obliterated tracks in the snow indicated that the negro had walked through the woods in a big circle, falling down sometimes, clutching at trees from which he tore pieces of bark, to save himself from falling, at other times. His "last walk" began at 5:30 in the evening of the coldest day of last week, and the body was not discovered until late the next afternoon.

Coroner S. A. Nathan declares that the negro was one of the finest physical specimens he had ever seen, which accounts largely for the long struggle of the man in the storm before death finally overtook him.

Recorder's Court

C. L. McBrair, boarding house proprietor, was found guilty in Recorder's court yesterday of passing a worthless check. He was ordered to pay the amount of the check and costs of case.

Clifford Williford, 19, white, was fined $50 and costs for driving while intoxicated. Williford is not a Carolina student.

F. B. Meadows, 25, white, paid the costs of prosecuting him for operating an automobile without a license. Meadows is a clerk.

A case against J. Bryan, a traveling salesman, for overtime parking, was nol prossed.

"Pink" Guthrie, 55, was given three sentences of a month on the road each for appearing in public places in a drunken condition at three different times, to run consecutively. A previous suspended sentence of a month on the road was ordered served concurrently with these.

maker production, we feel sure that the reviewer, although he made a number of true observations, overlooked some of the most commendable qualities of the production. Or perhaps we have only a different viewpoint!

True, there were some noticeable deficiencies and inadequacies in the technicality and the machinery of the performance so far as voice, gesture and focus is concerned. Only time will iron out such defects! But the important fact is that neither the company as a whole nor the players as individuals violated the basic elements of drama in-as-much-as they did catch the spirit of the play and they did interpret it genuinely and intelligently.

May we correct Mr. Mebane and point out that he misread the part a senility that was Kelly's characterization of Mrs. Fisher? He has inserted into never intended and missed the sprightliness that was intended. True, Miss Alexander's voice betrayed her youth from time to time but no one can take from her the excellency of her gesture and carriage nor the efficiency—almost finesse—with which she got through so difficult a scene as her last one in the second act. She managed a veritable cross current of emotions. Even veteran players have quailed under the strain.

We agree with the reviewer as to the artificiality of the "Show Off's" laugh. Chronic laughter always carries with it an unconvincing ring. And we reiterate with Mr. Mebane that George Wilcox, as Clara "got across' after a fashion. Although endowed with a pleasing voice she lacked modulation and precision of enunciation.

But, considered as a whole, The Playmakers, far from falling below their usual level of performance, revealed unsuspected possibilities in attempting and carrying through with distinction a type of play foreign to them. The fact that the Playmakers have achieved renown for the perfection of their Folk-Play interpretations is no reason for curtaining their experimentation in other direction. Drama, in all its phases and diversities and not genre, is the aim of the Playmaker organization. Versatility is the essense of good theatre.

And may we suggest that the work done by the production committee was also worthy of mention?

Bernard Cone Speaks On Textile Situation

their minds, have been influenced," he ventured.

"I am thoroughly convinced that it is because they have not had the actual, the practical experience either on the one hand with the labor unions and their methods or on the other hand with the employer and his problems and difficulties. The collegiate mind is dealing with a theoretical man on both sides of the issue. He thinks of an ideal laborer—a home-looking, peace-loving, law-abiding citizen—and on the other hand he pictures a greedy, miserly, slave-driving exploiter of cheap labor in the manufacturer's office."

Overproduction and underconsumption were cited as the chief causes for stagnation of the textile industry.

"The trouble with the textile industry in the south for the last two years has not been too long hours but too short hours," Mr. Cone asserted. "The workingman's plight is not that he has been overworked but underworked. The mills have all been more or less on a short time run for fully two years."

Declaring that the stretch-out system had benefitted employers and employees alike, Mr. Cone asserted that "in the vast majority of cases where this system has been introduced, increased work has been accompanied by an adequate increase in pay."

Mr. Cone said that personally he was not opposed to a survey of industry, but that he did not see what good a survey could do. The Bureau of Labor, he said, already gathers and publishes statistics of wages and hours, "which after all is the meat of the cocoanut."

"If a survey is to be used as a basis for legislation, such legislation will not help," Mr. Cone declared. "You can't legislate more money for our goods; you can't fix the price of our fabrics; you can't compel anybody to buy them. The average investigator comes to a mill with a preconceived bias; he is not looking for the truth. If there is to be a survey, it should not be confined to the textile industry."

Discussing the labor union, Mr. Cone said: "Conditions in the textile industry in North Carolina are such that the laborer does not need the union. The union can do nothing for him. It cannot increase his wages, because there is nothing out of which to pay increased wages.

"The big reason why the manufacturer doesn't like the idea of a union is because of the methods of the union. It isn't collective bargaining at all. It's collective dictation or collective domineering where the formulation of terms is concerned and collective intimidation in putting them into effect.

"The cotton mills in New England are in a worse plight than those of the south, and this plight has been brought about largely by the labor unions," Mr. Cone said.

RULES ANNOUNCED FOR CONTEST ON THE CONSTITUTION

Limit Of 1500 Words Now Replaces Former 10 Minute Restriction.

FIRST PRIZE IS $1500

Many changes have been made in the rules governing the 1930 national intercollegiate oratorical contest on the constitution, according to a statement made recently by the director of this year's contest. The ten minute limit has been abandoned and a word limit of 1500 words set. The amount of the prizes remains $5000, the lowest prize being raised to $400, but the first prize remains at $1500.

A new list of subjects, more in keeping with the maturity of college men and women, has been announced. The 1930 subjects are: The Constitution of the United States, Constitutional Ideals, Constitutional Duties, Constitutional Aspirations, The Constitution and the Supreme Court, The Place of Constitutional Law in American Life, The Constitution and National Progress, The Constitution and Contemporary Executive Practices, The Constitution and American Economic Policies, Constitutional Incentives to Individual Initiative, Constitutional Guarantees to All American Citizens, The Constitution and International Affairs, American Youth and the Constitution, The Constitution and Its Founders.

This contest was inaugurated and is conducted by the Better America Federation of California. Last year 542 colleges and universities entered the contest. Every college student in America is eligible to compete. The finals will be held June 19 at Los Angeles. The entries close March 25 and each college or university should have selected its orator by April 15. Information concerning the details of the contest may be obtained from P. Casper Harvey, contest director, Liberty, Mo.

Fire Threatens Tau Epsilon Phi House

Tau Epsilon Phi's home, one of the few remaining frat houses on Fraternity Row, experienced a slight fire early yesterday morning which might have ended its existence in the same manner as most of the other houses on the Row. Due to the titanic efforts of Artie Marpet, varsity basketball guard, and Phil Sher of Blue and White fame, the fire was smothered before serious damage occurred.

The fire was discovered about 4:30 a. m., when the heavy smoke awoke most of the Tep fellows. While Marpet and Sher labored to extinguish it, Dave Neiman and several other fraters garbed themselves in Sunday array, prepared to lose their everyday clothes but by no means their best.

Before the local fire truck arrived, the blaze was out. As a result of the fire, which left several large gaps in the floor, the Tau Epsilon Phi house today has a better ventilating system, it is believed, than any other frat house on the campus.

A Third Party Is Subject Of Open Debate Between Woodhouse And Williams

Held Last Night In Gerrard Hall; Principle Point Is Whether A Third Party Can Be Created More Quickly Or Reform Brought About In Existing Parties.

(By K. C. Ramsay)

In the Williams-Woodhouse debate of last night in Gerrard hall on the question, "Resolved: that there is need of a third party in the United States," the principal point of discussion was whether or not a third party powerful enough to be influential in elections could be organized quicker than needed reforms could be executed in the present parties to correct the admittedly existing evils.

H. Y. Williams, secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, declared that the old parties have been tried and that they will not enact legislation for handling such matters as unemployment, government controlled power facilities, labor disputes, and the like. He contended that they took such steps as were necessary to maintain the party strength, but that the leaders, being Industrialists and supporters of big business, failed to get at the root of things and try to settle such matters properly.

He maintained that the farmer is being carried along in the present system only by relatively unhelpful action as compared with what could be done along this line with more liberal political regimes in force. He also emphasized the need for better international relations, particularly stressing the need of a great reduction of armaments, recognition of the Russian government and the Soviet policy of outlawing war.

Professor E. J. Woodhouse agreed with Mr. Williams on the points stated about needed social and international reform, questioning only the recognition of the Russian government because he believed that Russians in general do not approve of the present Soviet government.

Mr. Woodhouse stated that concentrated political thinking as was greatly in evidence during the colonial days and up to shortly before the civil war, but that people are now allowing themselves to be guided by political bosses, instead of leaders and thinkers, and are not finding and developing such leaders as Jefferson, Hamilton, Jackson, and many others of that period. He further stated that at present we are living on the fine work done by our country fathers in forming our constituton, instead of solving the present problems.

Professor Woodhouse stated

HILL WILL DELIVER ILLUSTRATED TALK TO LOCAL A. S. C. E.

H. O. Hill, a senior in the school of engineering, will deliver an illustrated lecture on "Mississippi Flood Control" at the meeting of the William Cain student branch of the A. S. C. E. to be held Thursday evening in room 319 Phillips hall at 7:30.

The lecture to be given by Mr. Hill is one of a series of three that have been prepared by the national office of the American Society of Civil Engineers for presentation by student members before meetings of the student branches.

In the lecture, which is to be illustrated with lantern slides, Mr. Hill will present the problems that have to be met in undertaking to control the flood waters of the Mississippi, and will show what has been done to meet these problems.

This lecture is the second of the three to be presented before the William Cain Society. The first was given by C. C. Howard four weeks ago on the subject of "Flood Control in the Miami Conservany District." The last of the talks will be given later in the quarter.

Charlie Waddell, president of the society, announces that refreshments will be served at this meeting.

Case No. 4. Two freshmen, college and pre-medicine, respectively, suspended for fall quarter, 1929; and three freshmen, college, commerce and premedicine, respectively, denied credit for French 1 in fall quarter, 1929, for violation of the honor system in connection with a quiz in French 1.

UNEMPLOYMENT IS ECONOMIC FAULT SAYS DR. H. WOLF

University Professor Addresses Taylor Society On "Management And Technological Unemployment."

"If we accept the doctrine that a man has a moral right to an opportunity to earn a livelihood for himself and his family, the responsibility for unemployment rests on society as a whole for having built up an economic organization accompanied by unemployment," stated Dr. H. D. Wolf in an address before the University student branch of the Taylor Society last night.

Management is particularly responsible for the problem, said Dr. Wolf later in his talk, which was entitled "Management and Technological Unemployment." Management has this responsibility because the entrepreneur is entrusted with the capital, labor and land to produce goods and services effectively, and if there are men unemployed the production is being done inefficiently.

The problem of unemployment is one of the easiest ones of solution today, stated Dr. Wolf, but of the three types of unemployment—cyclic, seasonal, and technological—the last is by far the hardest of solution.

Instead of arising from a condition of depression as is usually taken for granted, this problem of technological unemployment springs up in periods of apparent prosperity. It arises simply from the introduction of labor-saving machinery, but the problem created by the unemployment of replaced workers is one of prime importance.

Presenting data from several studies of unemployment, Dr. Wolf showed the length of the period of unemployment varied from zero to over a year and also that the wages rates received by the worker when he obtained employment in another trade were lower than those in the original work in almost half of the cases investigated.

The speaker presented several plans which have been applied in cases where unemployment has been caused by the addition of new machinery. Some of the means used to relieve the situation of the discharged worker were payment of a dismissal wage and payment of an insurance fee.

Dr. Wolf had no definite program to present for the solution of the problem of technological unemployment, and he stated that the fact that there was no apparent solution was the saddest part of the whole matter.

After showing that the problem had been a subject of investigation by the government for only a short period of time and that very little serious consideration had been given the matter by governing bodies, he stated.

"I believe that the problem of technological unemployment is the most difficult problem of it all, but if we get to work we can solve it, and I am sure we can solve the others."

Americanism Not Matter Of Birth Says Rabbi Wise In Talk At Methodist Church

Declares That Americans Are Self-Made And That Ancestry Is Not Important.

AMERICANISM AN IDEAL

An American Is One Who Lives For That Ideal Says Noted Zionist.

Rabbi Wise

"Americanism is not a matter of birth and ancestry," said Rabbi Stephen S. Wise last night at the Methodist church when speaking on the subject of "My Vision of America." He went on to say that Americanism is not a birthright-privilege, but, instead, "it is a lifelong responsibility." Continuing, the speaker stated further that America is not a place, a region, but a locality; it is an atmosphere, an ideal, a vision as yet unfulfilled.

Taking up the point of America as an ideal, Rabbi Wise said that an American is one who lives by and for this ideal. "The basis of this ideal of Americanism is the duty of each to all, the responsibility of all to each," he continued.

He was of the opinion that the best way to reveal the soul of America to a foreigner is to bring him the majesty of the American ideal of liberty under law. "Let it never come to pass," said Rabbi Wise, "that we have laws for the poor and lawyers for the rich."

In closing the speaker stated that no man was an American who does not place America first. "He is no American who cherishes prejudices, whether these be social or racial or religious, who thinks foreign-born Americans as 'filling the European liners with human freight'," said Rabbi Wise.

Rabbi Wise will speak again this morning in chapel at 10:10 in Gerrard hall on the subject of "Jew and Christian: Agreements and Disagreements." All 9:30 classes will be cut short 25 minutes so that the speaker will have more time for his address. This lecture is not for students alone; townspeople as well as faculty members are invited to attend. spite of the small size of Gerrard hall, it is hoped that a great many will take the opportunity of hearing probably one of the most prominent Jewish Rabbis in the United States.

Rabbi and Mrs. Wise are here as guests of the Y. M. C. A.

A THOUGHT A DAY

Mr. Cone And The Textile Situation

Speaking Tuesday night in Bingham hall, Bernard M. Cone, head of the Cone textile mills in Greensboro and recognized throughout the South as one of the most humanitarian as well as one of the most efficient of southern mill owners, made out a strong case for the manufacturer's side of the mill controversy. He impressed upon his auditors in convincing fashion the great difficulties faced by textile mill owners at present.

Mr. Cone did not offer a remedy for the situation; he stated that "the thing will have to work itself out like an epidemic of influenza or the aftermath of a stock market debacle or a tidal wave." But he was emphatic in asserting that the generally suggested remedies—mergers, labor unions, surveys and legislation will not help. To overproduction and underconsumption was attributed the present situation. Business in the staples, the necessities of life, has been suffering as a result of the popular demand for luxuries, which has diverted most of the worker's income to installment buying of non-essentials and left him little money for the purchase of the basic essentials. And, particularly in this respect, Mr. Cone's arguments were well night iron-clad. He cleared up many points which had been obscure in the minds of those present and enabled them to see with startling clarity the mill owner's side of the question.

In dealing with the labor situation Mr. Cone went into great detail. He explained why the manufacturers are opposed to labor unions: first, because the union can do nothing for the textile employees, since the employers cannot pay increased wages as they have nothing to pay them with in the present condition of the industry; and second, because of the methods employed by the unions "collective dictation or collective domineering where the formulation of terms is concerned, and collective intimidation in putting them into effect, rather than 'collective bargaining.' "

In these words Mr. Cone expressed the basis of his attitude toward the labor problem:

"I believe a man who is fortunate enough to have acquired or built a cotton mill, in this free country of ours, has the right to say in the first place, whether he will run it or not; in the second place to invite other free men to come and work in his mill at prices he feels he can afford or is willing to pay. If anyone does not want the job at that price, he is free to refuse it. If after accepting it, he becomes dissatisfied with the terms, then if the owner is not willing to change those terms, let him go elsewhere and seek another job more to his liking. Don't let him stand at the mill door and seek by violence to keep others from working who want to work and are satisfied with the terms."

We realize that we are qualified in neither experience nor wisdom to take issue with a man of Mr. Cone's abilities and long years of familiarity with the textile industry. But there are certain questions arising from his statements, for which we cannot discover an answer.

If, in accordance with Mr. Cone's views, a man applies for a job in a cotton mill and is offered a wage upon which he cannot live except in the most uncomfortable and poverty-striken fashion, he may go elsewhere to seek a job. But suppose there is no other place for him to go? That the mill owners who do pay decent wages have no vacancies, and that the rest will not pay as high wages as they are able? In this case there is no alternative, even though the employers can afford to pay higher wages. The man must accept the job or starve.

It is doubtless true that many labor unions employ highly unfair and destructive methods. But the fact remains that they do give their members some defense against unscrupulous employers who have no compunctions about exploiting the workers. Mr. Cone expressed the belief that most of the mill owners are men of high principles, men who pay their workers as much as they possibly can. That is certainly true in Mr. Cone's case (we are familiar to some extent with conditions prevalent in his Greensboro mills), but there are without doubt some exceptions. How are the workers to protect themselves from the unscrupulous employers unless it is through the medium of labor unions? They can't do it through legislation—laborers as a class have very little voice in government in this country.

We hold no brief for labor unions except that they give the workers an opportunity to balance the power of the employer. Under the outworn philosophy that every man has a right to do what he will with his own property, even though he use the economic power that it places in his hands to oppress other men, labor unions have no place in the scheme of things. But this philosophy and its attitudes are rapidly passing out of existence. It is generally recognized that sometimes men with unlimited economic power can, and do, use it unfairly, and logical thought as well as humane sentiments will convince the unprejudiced mind that some check should be provided for this power. Labor unions offer the only effectual check of this sort at present.

Close cooperation between workers and employers can certainly have no harmful effects upon either class, and it may produce greater efficiency, resulting in the mutual benefits of increased wages and higher profits. Certainly the employees would have more incentive to work at their maximum efficiency if they were assured of receiving a share of the fruits of this increased efficiency. Labor unions, admitting that they are deficient in many respects, nevertheless give the workers this assurance.

Our government is presumably a system of checks and balances. It is perhaps too idealistic and far-fetched to carry the analogy system, but it must be admitted that an efficiently functioning system of checks and balances, with social legislation and labor unions on one side of the scales evening up the count with manufacturers and merchants associations and the inherent power of capital on the other, would be preferable to the one-sided economic system of the present.

Social legislation has made rapid strides during the past few years. Mr. Cone and others of this type place decent limits upon the hours of work demanded from the employee, upon child labor, night work and other evils. Why is it that they are so unalterably opposed to legislation which would force all mill owners to observe the same limits? It seems that the unfair competition of employers who do not adhere to these principles would be eliminated by legislation enforcing the very things which Mr. Cone has already put into practice.

As Mr. Cone has pointed out, there is a great deal of unemployment at present among textile workers. With great competition for jobs, employers have more opportunity for exploiting the workers; from this standpoint textile labor unions are more desirable now than at any other time.

The Greensboro man inferred in his speech here that the southern mill owners want to be left alone entirely; they desire no outside assistance or interference. It is possible that skilled economists, studying the situation impersonally and without prejudice, will work out solutions for the problem. It would seem the better part of wisdom for the mill owners to welcome suggestions with open minds and to investigate proferred assistance thoroughly before spurning it.

Probably a combination of legislation and labor unions, with legal restrictions on both unions and employers, will finally result from the textile industry strife. But unless the determined attitude of the mill owners, as expressed by Mr. Cone, and the equally dogmatic attitude already exhibited by labor, are materially changed, many years of bitter warfare before this combination is brought about.

Political power for labor is to a great extent a prerequisite to passage of legislation favorable to the workers. In this connection the debate on the need for a third party, held here last night between H. Y. Williams, secretary of the League for Independent Political Action, and E. J. Woodhouse, professor of governemnt, is significant.

Let's Be Tolerant

It seems paradoxical that college students, who have a general reputation for being open minded and tolerant, should be so critical and intolerant of individualism within their own group.

A student makes it known to his fellows that philosophy or poetry is one of the controlling influences of his life, and thereafter he is looked upon with a sort of vague reprehension. A man walks about the campus with an introspective countenance and a fixed gaze that takes no notice of those he meets, and the word goes out that he is a bit queer.

Let a fellow have any unusual hobby or peculiar trait, and he had better keep it a secret; else he will be subject to suspicion and even ridicule. If he rides a bicycle to and from classes he encounters glances of more than mild surprise. Let him wear spats or a solid red cravat, and mild surprise gives place to 'wild surmise.'

How often, in reading of the college life of great men, we find them shunned and rejected by their fellow students; usually because of the manifestations of their strong individuality. Milton at Cambridge studied all night, and was hounded by those who should have been his friends. Stonewall Jackson at West Point sat for hours at a time staring at the blank wall of his room, and the other cadets laughed and called him 'that queer countryman from the Virginia backwoods.' James K. Polk when here in the University was extremely unpopular among the student body, chiefly because he said and did things according to his own convictions.

Though we have a long way yet to go, there is no doubt but that our student body has become more lenient toward its diverse elements since the undergraduate days of Pope. That such should be true is quite natural, for during that time we have advanced in enlightenment, and surely enlightenment and tolerance push forward hand in hand.—J. J.

A Third Party Is Subject Of Debate

that a third party must be based either on political emotions or on concentrated political thought and he was of the opinion that political thought does not exist at present.

The speaker on the affirmative in rebuttal stated that liberals and progressives should unite with each other, because of the fact that, in the past, part of this group has alligned itself with the Republicans and part with the Democrats, thereby cancelling its strength. If a progressive leader gets into power through one of the old parties, so much pressure is brought to bear on him by the old line politicians that he cannot efficiently carry out a progressive policy, he believed.

In the rebuttal for the negative side of the question, Mr. Woodhouse declared that there could be no two men who are taking so great a stand to preserve the water and electrical power of the country for the people than the two Democrats, Alfred E. Smith and Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt. He endorsed Woodrow Wilson's statement that we need a government of men rather than laws, rules, party platforms, and the like, declaring that it is outstanding men who are needed to push the needed political reform, and that reform within the parties is the most feasible means of bringing forth needed social legislation.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Urban Tigner Holmes

(By F. J. M)

Editor's note: This is the sixth of a series of thumbnail sketches of prominent University men.

URBAN TIGNER HOLMES, JR. If it hadn't been for an incorrectly addressed letter, this 30 year old native of Washington, D. C. would have been a naval officer as was his father . . . he did spend a year in Annapolis until they told him he would have to leave on account of his ears . . . he wrote a letter to his father, who would have been able to intercede for him and reinstate him had he received the letter in time . . . but young Urban put the wrong address on the envelope and by the time his father received the appeal for help, our hero was on his way to the University of Pennsylvania. He studied there for three years, studying Arabic, Sanskrit, Russian, Romance languages, etc. . . and majored in Greek . . . he had serious intentions of studying for the ministry and it was for that reason that he majored in Greek and took so much of the Semitic tongues . . . but the ministry lost him.

As a boy, he was queer about foreign languages . . . he wasn't much good at athletics . . . in fact, he was terrible . . . and all his spending money did he spend on purchasing foreign books. He has an edition of the Oxford Readings in Spanish Verse that he bought at the age of twelve.

While in Philadelphia, which is his favorite city, he became a drill-master in the naval training ship there . . . he was court-marshalled for not getting up to do the Swedish exercises—but again he was saved by virtue of his father's position.

After getting his A.B. at Pennsylvania, he went to Harvard . . . and in two years he had completed the work necessary for a Ph.D., but due to his cherubic appearance, Harvard sent him off on a year's fellowship to Paris . . . when he came back he looked old enough to get the coveted degree. Now a Ph.D. with a wife, an ambition to do things, etc., he went to the University of Missouri, where he remained as assistant professor for two years . . . he hated the place . . . and when he had an opportunity to come to the University of North Carolina, he did so and was here for two years as associate professor. He was commissioned a full professor three years ago—being at that time

J. E. Dungan

R. H., the young Emersonian of the campus, not satisfied with the re-opening of the religion question, the "stagnancy of the South," and various controversable issues of the day, has lately through these columns evidenced some research work on that much mooted and highly provocative field of booting. He says in the progress of a column editorial that "boys will be boys" and deducts that booting is therefore an adolescent trait, or rather that boys will be booters. But then, of course, we are all boys together. R. H. himself and this columnist while lamenting the folly of booting have occasionally slipped into friendships with profs which may have given the campus the impression that R. H. was booting but really it was merely admiration for the profs we were working under. Like his famous forerunner, however, R. H. is as inconsistent in practice as the rest of us.

The co-eds are in favor of no-break dances. Some dances with co-eds are genuinely no-break affairs, which state should be highly pleasing to the femmes of the campus.

The editor of The Daily Tar Heel in commenting on Commissioner Dan C. Boney's report on the late Chi Psi fire has this to say, "Someone pulled a boner in releasing the Chi Psi fire investigation story. . . " It seems rather evident to us that the admirable commissioner is the man in question.

Professor Bond, the witty and scintillating addition to the faculty and professor of the comma, according to all rumor is well on his way toward filling the niche lately vacated by another Doctor of Letters who is now busily occupied in the reanimation of Johns Hopkins.

Manuscrips, one of the latest semi-professional journals for the encouragement of creative work, has succumbed to efficiency and the machine-age. During its short-lived existence it attracted the interest of several Chapel Hill persons. Mary Margaret Russell, nee Wray, a graduate of the University was contributing verse as well as Richard A. Chace, a current sophomore, who also was publishing poetry in its pages. John Mebane, editor of The Carolina Magazine, is sadly reflecting over the quick demise of the publication which died immediately following the receipt by him of an acceptance letter informing him that certain of his contributions had been accepted for publication by them.

Contemporaneously with the announcement of the failure of Manuscripts comes the news of the establishment of another paper for the same idealistic purpose. Miscellany has been founded by four Yale graduates and will also pay for contributions by young authors. The first issue is exceptionally good; the subscription rate is two dollars a year; there is no waiting list.

It has not been stated whether Stephen S. Wise will speak to the student body this morning out of the stock of his wisdom or not, but it is generally inferred.

Mary Marshall Dunlap says that she has seen, heard, and done a lot this last week-end but that she "Don't know nothin'."

This frenzied squad we read of is certainly getting a lot of publicity. There has been considerable debate on the campus lately as to just what this squad does, though.

"DISEASES DECLINED IN COUNTY IN 1929," reads one of our headlines, and so far as we are concerned we are in favor of declining them in 1930 also.

Along with shrdlu etaoin now comes a device which will make for efficiency. The author has applied for a copyright, and while his application is being considered will grant permission to persons who desire to make use of it and when they acknowledge their indebtedness. It is to follow all "pop' quizzes, all midterms, and all examinations. It is really quite as valuable as a quiz book or a pencil. It is—ihavegivenandreceivednoaidjedungan.

Carolina's Fast Mittmen Downs Duke's Blue Devils

Sheffield, Goodridge, Allen, Davis And Warren Turn In Wins.

EDWARDS K. O.'S VAUGHN

Koenig Loses To Carper By Decision; Sheffield Stars With Smashing Victory Over Saint Amand; Warren Gets Technichal K. O.

Smashing their way to victories over Duke boxers, five Tar Heel pugs gave Carolina a 5-2 victory here last night before a packed Tin Can audience. With this victory the Tar Heels, 1929 Southern Conference boxing champions, kept their slate clean for the season.

Duke with its hard-hitting youngsters gave the Tar Heels a scare in the first fight when Edwards sent Evan Vaughn to the mat for the count in the second round. Vaughn who has been suffering with a cold looked good until one of Edward's blows put him out.

But this scare was short-lived for the Tar Heel pugs in almost methodical fashion won decisions over the Blue Devils in the next five fights. Sheffield, fighting Saint Armand, captain of the Blue Devils, gave a great exhibition. Rushing his opponent continually, the 135-pound Tar Heel boxer sent blow after blow into the Duke boy's face to win a clean-cut decision.

Following this fight Noah Goodridge, Captain Arch Allen, Obie Davis and John Warren turned in wins. Starnes, Duke wrestler and boxer, opposed Goodridge, but the splendid defense of the Tar Heel gave Carolina victory. Captain Allen had little trouble with Matheson. Toward the end of the fight Allen crashed his fists into the body and head of the Duke boxer with ease to get the decision.

Davis faced Millard Warren, brother of the Carolina fighter, in the 169 pound class. An extra round was necessary before Davis won the decision.

The second knock-out of the evening occurred when John Warren sent Don Hyatt, Duke football star, down in the second round. He was given a technical knockout.

Carper, former Duke captain, gained a decision over Koenig. The Blue Devil boxer has won most of his fights by the knockout route, but Koenig proved too tough. The Tar Heel fought Carper on practically even terms throughout.

115-lb.—Edwards (D) defeated Vaughn by k. o.

125-lb.—Sheffield (C) defeated Saint Amand by decision.

135-lb.—Goodridge (C) defeated Starnes by decision.

145-lb.—Allen (C) defeated Matheson by decision.

165-lb.—Davis defeated Warren by decision (4 rounds).

175-lb.—Warren (C) defeated Hyatt by technical k. o.

Unlimited—Carper (D) defeated Koenig by decision.

Golfers Preparing For Season At Golf Net In The Tin Can

Each afternoon in the Tin Can an average of about 25 golfers may be seen busily preparing for the approaching golf season. Ofter 30 or 40 aspirants may be seen, but a consistent average of 25 is maintained. Pistol-like reports come in rapid succession from the net that has recently been erected, and each day improvement may be noticed in the accuracy of the drivers. The team is rapidly shaping up and is looking hopefully forward to the time when Old Man Winter will ease his grip on Chapel Hill and they can invade the links.

QUINT TO PLAY FOUR GAMES ON NORTHERN TRIP

Squad Of Twelve Men Left Last Night To Invade Maryland And Virginia.

TO MEET W. & L. TONIGHT

A squad of twelve basketball players, accompanied by Coach Jim Ashmore, entrained here last night for the annual invasion of Virginia and Maryland. Four games with four different college teams will be played on successive nights. Players making the trip were: Dameron, Cleland, Neiman, Greene, Hutchinson, Harper, Edwards, Choate, Brown, Marpet, Slater and Alexander.

The strong V. P. I. aggregation which administered defeats to Virginia and V. M. I. last week will be met for the opening encounter Wednesday night. Following the contest with the Gobblers the Flying Phantoms will journey to Lexington, Va., where they hook up with the conference leading Generals.

From Lexington, the squad will return to Charlottesville, where the first Virginia-Carolina game of the present season will be played on Friday night. The game should prove more close than any of the encounters of the past few years.

The University of Maryland, boasting one of the strongest fives in their history, will furnish the opposition on Saturday night. The game will be played in Baltimore.

FRESHMAN FIVE LEAVES TONIGHT

Coach Enright Taking Ten Men On Four-Day Invasion Of Virginia.

With a fair season record behind them, the Tar Baby quintet will leave today to make its northern jaunt through Virginia. The Tar Babies have won six games and lost but three.

Coach Enright will take only ten men on this trip. While he left most of the squad behind, it is not a cut, for there will be practice for those who did not make the trip. The schedule calls for four hard games in as many nights. Wednesday the Tar Babies will play the V. P. I. freshmen in a preliminary game to the varsity Carolina-V. P. I. game. Thursday the freshmen travel to take on the strong Augusta Military Academy; Friday they play Woodberry Forest, and wind up at Lexington where they will meet the Washington and Lee aggregation. These four teams are among the best freshmen and prep school teams in Virginia and the going is sure to be tough for the fighting Tar Babies.

The ten men who are making the trip are: Connor, Parsley, Henry and Lineberger, guards; Hamlet and Beale, centers; and Markham, Moore, Hines and Dunn, forwards.

MILLROSE GAMES ATTRACT MANY NATIONAL STARS

Officials Have Listed Many Of Nation's Greatest Performers For Annual Affair This Week-End.

The Millrose Athletic Association, in keeping with a custom of twenty-three years standing, has arranged another program of championship calibre for its renewal of the games at Madison Square Garden Saturday night. The Millrose authorities have combed the United States and Canada for outstanding athletes who have never competed in indoor events at the games.

In this group of newcomers are listed Bob King, formerly of Stanford, Olympic high jump champion; Cy Leland, Texas Christian University, sprinter and halfback who holds the national junior 100-yard title; Leigh Miller, sprinter from Canada; Howard Kriss of the Cleveland A. C., ex-Ohio State flyer; Bert Nelson of Butler University, national junior half mile champion, and Orval Martin of Purdue, the Western Conference mile and half champion.

Among the old favories entered in the games are Ray Conger, Bernie McCafferty, Phil Edwards, Fred Sturdy, Chet Bowman, Harold Cutbill, and others. Jack Elder, who has run in Brooklyn and Newark this winter, will invade the Garden for the sprints, and Dr. Paul Martin, for twelve years middle distance king of Switzerland three times contender for the Swiss in the Olympic games, is to make his first Garden start in the invitation 880.

The Millrose games committee has completed its restricted field for the 600-yard fixture with the entry of Phil Edwards. Edwards will meet McCafferty of Holy Cross, Eddie Roll of the Newark A.C., and Pete Bowen of Pitt, the national and intercollegiate quarter mile champion. Last year McCafferty beat Edwards to set a new Millrose record of 1:12 3-5.

Ray Conger, who beat Paavo Nurmi in 4:17 2-5 in the Wanamaker mile of last year, is another trophy defender in the games. He has plenty of competition in Joe Sivak and Orval Martin. Both have done around 4:15 in this event. Conger will be running in the distance at which he has beaten Nurmi, Wide, Purje, and Lermond.

Every high jumper entered has done at least 6 feet 2 inches. Bob King, unbeaten in 1928, and unchallenged as the world's best high jumper, is back again under the colors of the Illinois A. C., the club that sent Harold Osborne to a world record of 6 feet, 8 1-4 inches outdoors, and 6 feet, 6 1-4 inches indoors. King has done 6 feet, 6 5-8 inches. entered against the champion are Ben Hedges of Princeton, runner-up to King in the Olimpics; Bert Nelson of Butler, national junior champion; Leo Sexton of Georgetown, Millrose winner last year at 6 feet, 4 inches;George Spitz of Flushing high school, the schoolboy champion at 6 feet 3 1-16 inches; William O'Connor of Columbia; Charlie Major, and William Pump.

Fred Sturdy will be after a new indoor record above 14 feet 1 inch, in meeting Victor Packard, the canadian, Barney Berlinger of Penn, and William Cone of Yale.

Other features of the games will be the reappearance in competition of Ray Barbuti, Olympic 400 meter champion; Chet Bowman, Jimmy Pappas, and William Bruders will oppose Barbuti. It is estimated that a crowd of around 17,000 will witness the games.

SIDELIGHTS

(Sports Editor)

THE INFLUX OF MANY northern students to Carolina has been accompanied by the arrival of many new sports. Fencing is perhaps the most recent one that has been introduced on the campus and, with several prominent meets in view, is well on its way to permanent establishment. The U. N. C. fencing team claims the Southern Conference title by virtue of last year's meets, and this year will defend it against many rival claimants to that throne.

ANOTHER northern sport has migrated south. The recent introduction of associated football, better known as soccer, to the Carolina campus brings another prominent sport of the north, down south. Although many of the high schools and prep schools of the state have soccer teams, there is at present no college in North Carolina that can boast of one.

THE LARGE NUMBER of northern students at Carolina seems to assure the success of this "enfant" into the Tar Heel sports world. Since its beginning several weeks ago the number of those interested has increased rapidly. The eleven men that play on each team makes it hard to gather up two teams to play every afternoon, but many games have been going on between several of the fraternities on the campus.

THE HIGH SCHOOL FIELD is at present headquarters of the soccer fans, and according to those playing there nearly afternoon "all are cordially invited to attend." The only equipment necessary is a soccer ball and two goals. According to one of the soccerites it won't be long before the intramural field will be lined off and goals fixed up for soccer. If so, there is hardly any doubt that all of the fields will be used continuously for soccer.

ALTHOUGH SOCCER is a fall sport up north, the participants say that winter is about the best time for it in the south. The hard winters of the north have prevented soccer at that time of the year up there, but the mild winter of Chapel Hill (in dry weather) makes this season of the year most appropriate in the "sunny southland."

SOCCER HAS ALREADY progressed so far that several informal matches are being arranged with several high school and prep school teams of the state. At present negotiations are being made with Blue Ridge and Winston-Salem high school. If these plans go through, it won't be long before the Tar Heels will have adopted another sport.

WE HAVE BEEN ASKED to add that all those interested in establishing soccer at U. N. C. may gain further information at the Tar Heel office.

Charlie Brown Fights To Draw In Greensboro

Charlie Brown, last year's captain of the University boxing team who fought Buster Newberry, Sumter, ten rounds to a draw in Greensboro Friday night, is visiting friends in Chapel Hill.

The Greensboro Daily News credited Brown with five of ten rounds, gave Newberry three and called the other two all square, but the official verdict of the referee named it a draw.

The Daily News seemed to think Charlie deserved something better than a draw, chiefly because of the aggressiveness he showed throughout the bout. In part here's what W. N. Cox of the Daily News says about the Charleston lad: "Brown, though outweighed, outstretched as to arm measurements and height, kept eternally after Newberry and gave the fans a run for their money.

"The Daily News score sheet shows five rounds for Brown, three for Newberry and two even. The first and seventh being all square, the second, eighth and ninth going to Newberry by a shade, and the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and tenth to Brown.

Young To Compete In Millrose Games

Robert Young, holder of the Southern Conference cross-country championship for the past two years, and captain of the University of Georgia track team, has accepted an invitation to participate in the two-mile event at the annual Millrose A. C. games next Saturday night.

Young has been an outstanding point earner on the Bulldog track squad for the past three years. He formerly attended Lanier high school in Macon, Ga.

"CAVALIERS" TO MEET "TECH" IN STADIUM TODAY

Losers Of Last Week's Winter Football Games To Play At 4 O'Clock.

Today the football coaches send their proteges into the third fray of the winter football season when the mythical "Virginia" team plays "Georgia Tech" at 4 o'clock.

The losing teams of last week's games will face each other today while the winning teams will meet Saturday. "Tennessee" put the bug on "Georgia Tech" last Wednesday by a 6-0 score. As a result of the game being played in a snowstorm, there was much fumbling and bad execution of plays. The same was characteristic of Saturday's game, so it was impossible to determine exactly who's who and what's what on the football field at present. In Wednesday's encounter Stuart Chandler, frosh back, appeared to be the main cog in the "Tennessee" lineup, while Nichols and Sharkey also showed up nicely.

Smith and McDade, the pair of big frosh tackles, were the boys who were smearing the plays of the "Virginia" team Saturday afternoon. And June Underwood of "Virginia," was giving the "Georgia" ends quite a workout. It looks as if the fight for tackle berths on the fall team will be between these three mentioned boys, but it has been rumored that such men as Oliver, Roach, Sharkey and Collins will make the favorites put up a fight.

Today, although the grounds will be rather wet, it is believed that the games will be well worth braving the mud and rain. The lineups of the teams will be somewhat the same as last week with only a few changes.

Probable lineups are as follows:

"Virginia"		"Georgia Tech"
Nelson	L. E.	Nichols
Oliver	L. T.	Sharkey
Crew	L. G.	Blackwood
Greer	C.	Allen
Dunavant	R. G.	Fysal
Underwood	R. T.	Collins
Allen	R. E.	Parsley
Peacock	Q. B.	Wyrick
Magner	R. H.	Jackson
McNeil	L. H.	Houston
Slusser	F. B.	Suggs

"UNCLE" GEORGE McCAULEY DEAD

Janitor Of The Pharmacy Building Passes After Long Illness.

"Uncle" George McCauley, for nearly a score of years janitor of the pharmacy building, after a long illness died yesterday morning at his home on the outskirts of Chapel Hill. He was born November 4, 1858 in Orange county about three miles west of Chapel Hill. Brought up as a farm hand, he worked at this until he moved to town in 1892 where he tried various kinds of work. In 1912 he assumed his duties as janitor in the pharmacy building.

In this capacity he has "waited on" over 700 pharmacy students, most of them now practicing druggists. They remember him as a quiet, unassuming, obliging servant, present always when work was to be done but preferring at other times to efface himself.

"Uncle" George was very religious, not the shouting, fanatic kind but a faithful Baptist who endeavored to practice all the articles of his church's creed. Dr. W. B. MacNider says that he once heard him offer the most beautiful extemporaneous prayer he ever listened to: beautiful in its simple words, earnest tones and quiet hope.

He had a great leaning toward lodges, concerning which Dr. MacNider said that he must have belonged to at least eight, and he was a leader in the colored community in educational and religious matters.

In the February 1927 issue of the Carolina Journal of Pharmacy appeared a story by Professor J. G. Beard entitled "Uncle George." "A man so white all through that I always forget the thin covering of another color," thus Professor Beard speaks of his colored friend. "Interwoven through the fabric of his nature are honor, gentleness and faithfulness."

When the North Carolina pharmacy association met in Greensboro in 1927 one of the local druggists took Uncle George to the association. When the old man entered the assembly room all of his former "boys" crowded around to see and greet him. During the meeting the president called on "Uncle" George for a few words and he responded in a straightforward and touching way.

Every pharmacy student who has attended the University since 1910 knows and will always remember "Uncle" George with affection.

Over two years ago the aged colored man caught a severe cold which went into pneumonia and then into tuberculosis—and then the old fellows broom and pan saw the last of him. During his illness, friends of his made up a fund to carry him through.

The funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at the colored Baptist church in Chapel Hill. The burial will be at the Hickory Grove church, ten miles from town, of which "Uncle" George has been a lifetime member.

RECORD HOLDER WILL COMPETE IN NEW YORK

Bert Nelson, Butler athlete, broke the world's indoor record for the running high jump with a leap of 6 feet 6¾ inches Friday in a dual track meet between Notre Dame and Butler at South Bend, Ind.

Nelson's jump shattered the 6 feet 6½ inch mark made by Harold Osborne of Illinois A. C. in 1925. The Butler star made the jump attired only in his socks and trunks. He will be seen in action in the Millrose games.

"JAZZ HEAVEN" TO OPEN AT THE CAROLINA TODAY

With Sally O'Neil singing for the first time on the screen, and John Mack Brown playing the piano in the role of a young composer, "Jazz Heaven," bright, tuneful musical romance, opens today at the Carolina theatre.

The story deals with the efforts of Brown to whip his pet song into shape where it will interest publishers. Just when success seems farthest away, the girl in the next room, played by Sally O'Neil, comes to his rescue and since she is employed to plug songs in a music publishing house, the would-be songwriter is jubilant.

However, he finds the road to success isn't royal. Sally in her efforts to help, puts herself into situations the boy misunderstands and when it looks as if he would abandon the whole thing, a silver lining shows itself in the clouds and success, love and all that go with them begin taking the whip hand.

The supporting cast is notable, including Clyde Cook, Blanche Friderici, Joseph Cawthorn, Albert Conti, Henry Armetta, J. Barney Sherry, Harry McCoy and others. Melville Brown directed "Jazz Heaven" as his initial Radio Picture.

A Thumbnail Sketch Of Urban Tigner Holmes

one of, if not the youngest full-fledged professors in the country.

He has written several text books . . . articles galore and has in preparation several scholarly works. He can work his best if he is more or less driven to it . . . can't work at night . . . goes over his manuscripts many times before giving them up for publication.

Urban is a peculiar mixture of the reactionary and the progressive. He spanks his children . . . when he has the courage to do so . . . he believes that the relations in the home should be as they were in the gay nineties . . . claims he is an Anglo-Saxon before he's an American . . . he is very race conscious . . . and hates to see old customs, traditions, et cetera, uprooted . . . yet he drives a car . . . and drives it rapidly . . . he once went from New York to Chapel Hill in one day . . . he reads old, bawdy stories of the medieval period of French literature for recreation . . . he even takes a drink when offered one . . . in fact, he is said to be able to hold his liquor well . . . and smokes at times . . . and is very original in his researches and is quite energetic and lively in his work . . . he wants to see not only the romance language, but every department well organized and doing real, important work.

He plays checkers with his wife almost every night . . . Mrs. Holmes usually wins . . . they tried to take up chess but it proved too much for them.

He only learned to play the viola recently . . . and now he, and Professor Giduz are the only viola players in "these hyah pahts" . . . Holmes plays the viola for the Raleigh Civic Orchestra, the University Orchestra, and the Faculty Orchestra.

He has an excellent bass voice . . . that is, authorities have told him so and when he has the opportunity, as he did have in Chicago last spring, he trains it . . . this summer, when in Paris, he hopes to have some famous basso tutor him . . . he sings in the Episcopal church choir . . . wherever he has been, he has always sung in the church choir . . . at one time here he was Sunday School superintendent, vestryman, choir director and lay reader in the Episcopal church.

At the University of Missouri, he was official bell-ringer at an Anglican church.

His mother would not have his voice trained . . . she thought it too effeminate . . . but he did learn the piano at the age of eight.

He is a member of many organizations . . . most of them professional . . . but he has never been asked to join the Elks, Rotarians or the Kiwanis—although he did sing for them . . . or because.

He is interested in things of antiquity. He collects medieval French coins . . . and other rare things . . . indeed, to use his own phrase, he "has a passion for medieval antiquities."

Apple-pie is nauseating to him . . . as are not dairy products . . . he would rather eat them than anything else.

He doesn't regret that he was not in the navy . . . nor has he a tremendous urge to become a minister . . . his ambition is to be the working head of an energetic romance language department—in which he could make it a well-rounded department of a university . . . one of his creeds is "well-roundedness."

Dr. Holmes has often been accused of being quite conceited and overbearing . . . his claim has always been that those people who attacked him on those grounds were guilty of the very crime . . . he can't stand smug people . . . he believes that because of his many interests, of which he naturally speaks . . . and of his enthusiasm which he doesn't always restrain . . . he antagonizes those people who are so egotistical that they don't speak of themselves at all . . . but once a person knows him real well, they find out how truly modest he is.

He is a staunch Democrat . . . and thinks that people who have pictures on their walls about subjects that they don't know very well are rather dumb . . . all his wall adornments are pictures, etchings, paintings of the medieval period in France . . . he doesn't like poetry, but wishes he could . . . and natural beauty leaves him cold.

He likes Chapel Hill just fine . . . but thinks London the best city of them all . . . he doesn't go in much for social things . . . although he and his wife go about quite a lot . . . he feels shy in front of strangers.

Although he is known for the research he has done, he feels himself best suited as an organizer and as a teacher . . . he loves to clarify things and get things going . . . he reads stories about business in the Saturday Evening Post for relaxation and although he goes to the movies but twice a year, he likes to see a slapstick comedy or a good costume picture . . . like the "Taming of the Shrew."

He once found the carcass of a book-worm in an old French volume.

Although he is famed for his play-acting . . . he has played in five languages . . . he doesn't like to watch them particularly . . . he is very high-strung . . . he feels the emotions as expressed in books and plays too strongly . . . he despises modernism in painting, in books.

He has always been rank as a player in any sport . . . he once tried golfing and he was awful . . . now his sport is hunting . . . but he's not much better at this . . . he likes to watch games, however.

Music is a tremendous interest for him . . . if he had a year in which to do nothing, he would study music, voice and playing.

He has prophesied that regionalism in this country will develop until all the little Italies, the little Norways, etc., will form countries of their own . . . he is a strong opponent of internationalism.

He is interested in Louis the Seventh, or rather, his period. He calls himself a classicist . . . but a progressive one . . . one who doesn't want to break away from the old moorings but who is willing to move and keep on in the progressive spirit.

His favorite periodicals are Harpers and Time . . . he works on research every morning from 8:30 till 12:30 and in the afternoons he teaches. In the evenings he acts, sings or listens to some of his records. He reads the Chapel Hill Weekly, the Durham Morning Herald and not the Tar Heel . . . Aristophanes is still one of his favorite authors and he reads a good deal of ancient Greek.

FEBRUARY ISSUE LAW REVIEW HAS ARTICLE BY DEAN

"Some Phases of the Doctrine Of Exemplary Damages," Subject of McCormick's Article.

The leading article in the February issue of the North Carolina Law Review which appears this week is by Dean McCormick of the law school. It is entitled "Some Phases of the Doctrine of Exemplary Damages" and is to form the substance of a chapter in a book on damages which Dean McCormick is writing for publication by the West Publishing Company. It discusses the interesting matter of allowing exemplary damages or "smart money" in certain cases where compensation does not give redress for conduct which deserves punishment. Dean McCormick acknowledges the assistance of two students, John H. Anderson and H. B. Parker, in collecting authorities for the article.

The second article is by Professor Van Hecke and B. Thorn Lord, a third-year law student. It discusses the North Carolina doctrine as to parol trusts and is technical in its nature. Jefferson B. Fordham, who is now Sterling Fellow at the Yale law school, writes an article on "Some Legal Aspects of Employee Stock-Purchase Plans," and thus raises some vital questions concerning those plans which are now being tried out by many business concerns, large and small. Mr. Fordham graduated from the law school last year and is well known to the students and faculty of the University.

There are 13 student notes and comments, John H. Anderson and Harry Rockwell contributing two each. Probably the most important note is by Mr. Anderson on "Tax Advantages of Incorporating North Carolina Enterprises Outside the State." He shows by statistics just why it pays to incorporate a North Carolina business outside of North Carolina because of the heavier tax burden incurred by incorporating at home. Mr. Rockwell's two comments deal with legal problems in connection with checks and banking practices. In addition to these topics, the student material includes the subjects of Income Taxation, Constitutional Law, Employers' Liability, Insurance, Marriage and Divorce, Bank Deposits, Partition of Real Property and Quasi Contracts.

The most picturesque case is discussed by Thomas W. Sprinkle. It concerned the application of an accident insurance policy to the case of a man who died as a result of drinking wood alcohol which, unknown to

TWO DANCES SET FOR BYNUM GYM OVER WEEK-END

Law School To Give Annual Dance On Friday Night; Gholson To Lead.

GRAIL DANCE SATURDAY

(By Holmes Davis)

After a rather strenuous week of mid-terms for the general student body, and a short relapse of time after the semi-annual exams of the law school, the two sets will be allowed some amount of diversion this week-end in the form of dances. The law school celebrates Friday night and the Grail will have its second dance of the quarter Saturday night.

The winter quarter is generally rather devoid of dances but it is expected that quite a few girls from various parts of the state will be present on the Hill over the week-end to attend these functions. Both the Grail and the law school are planning unusually gala affairs as this will probably be the last big week-end before the mid-winter dances to be held the 21st and 22nd of this month.

The law school dance will be held in Bynum gymnasium. Music for the occasion will be furnished by Mendenhall's Tar Heels. The affair is to be formal, and no one will be admitted without a ticket. Each member of the law school will receive two tickets, including his own.

A. W. Gholson, Jr., will lead the dance with Miss Evelyn Stephenson of Abington, Va. He will be assisted by John Lewis with Miss Emily Dewey Mitchell of Chapel Hill; O. A. Warren with Miss Kathryn Barnette of Winston-Salem, and J. H. Chadbourne, whose partner has not been announced. Members of the faculty of the law school and their wives will act as chaperones,

One of the campus orchestras will play for the Grail dance, which will also be in Bynum gymnasium. The usual admission fee is to be charged. Regular German Club rules will be in effect at both affairs.

EXTENSION WORK IS OUTLINED BY R. M. GRUMMAN

Says Division Is Responsible For Bringing Educational Resources Of State To People.

AIDS HIGH SCHOOLS

"The University of North Carolina extension division is the administrative agency of your state institution for making the resources and educational leadership of the University available to the people of North Carolina." These are the words of Mr. Russell M. Grumman, head of the extension division, in the February issue of the Tar Heel Topics, in which he briefly outlines the extension services of the University. Mr. Grumman's message goes to "prospective students and their parents" who are the intended readers of Tar Heel Topics.

Described as an institution that serves the high school graduate before and after graduation, through the agency of a variety of school relations activities and bureaus, the extension division originated as a University bureau in 1912. Since its organization as a separate department in 1921, the enrollment of extra-mural students has grown to equal the number of students in residence at Chapel Hill.

In his article Mr. Grumman

Play-Likers To Appear Here In "Children Of The Moon"

Play To Be Given In Playmakers' Theatre Friday And Saturday Nights; Fourth Number On Playmakers' Season Program.

The Play-Likers of North Carolina College will appear here Friday and Saturday in Martin Flavin's modern tragedy "Children of the Moon." The production, which is the fourth number on the season program of the Carolina Playmakers, will be presented at the Playmakers Theatre. A matinee will be given at 2:30 Saturday.

"Children of the Moon" was presented by the Play-Likers at the Aycock auditorium, Greensboro, in November with considerable success. The play is considered probably the most difficult production yet given by the North Carolina College players. The stage and lighting effects added much to the realism of the play.

The play centers around the love affair of a normal young English woman who is engaged to an aviator, but whose marriage is discouraged in every possible way by her selfish mother. Finally, the mother tells her daughter that insanity is hereditary in the family. So great is the power of suggestion that the daughter, brooding on this, actually becomes moon-mad. The play emphasizes not the force of heredity, but rather the power of suggestion.

The Carolinian, reporting the presentation in Greensboro, said, "The play was one of idea and purpose, throughout which there prevailed an effect of weirdness which bordered on the supernatural and a feeling of human frailty and fatalism of life. The lighting and sound effects contributed in no small degree to the success of the play. The lights of sunset and darkness, the sounds of airplanes and fog horns and the beating of the waves on the rocks enhanced the realistic effect and gave tone to the whole setting."

The critic for the Greensboro Daily News said of the performance, "Labored preparation and appreciative interpretation were evident. The play itself

ROBERTSON AIDED BY DISCOVERY OF LOST ARCHIVES

Authenticity and Realism Given To Life of Miranda; Recovery of Old Documents.

UNIVERSITY PRESS BOOK

It is to the discovery of the lost archives of Francisco Mirana that much of the authenticity and vivid realism of The Life of Miranda by William Spence Robertson is due. The book, in two volumes, is the latest publication of the University Press, appearing the first of this month.

Recognized as a foremost authority on Latin-American history, Mr. Robertson has produced in this work an excellent account of the most spectacular career of the South American revolution period. As the first person to gain accession to the volumnous private records of Miranda, he has opened a vast store of hitherto unpublished details about the romantic adventures of the "knight-errant of Spanish American liberty."

Among the copies of The Hispanic American Historical Review, published by the Duke University Press, is found an article written by Mr. Robertson soon after he made the discovery of the lost archives in the library of Lord Bathurst in England. At that time, May 1927, the author stated that "their discovery will make imperative the rewriting of Miranda's life story." Therefore, the appearance of his book through the University Press has caused a revival of interest in Mr. Robertson's account of the research involved in unearthing Miranda's long-lost memorabilia.

When, in July 1812, General Miranda was forced to submit to Spanish Royalists in Venezuela, the tomes containing his manuscripts were carried secretly to the West Indies by the captain of a frigate upon which Miranda had intended to embark. There they were taken over by a British officer who dis-

LEAVES FOR DANVILLE

In Hurry to Make Train Connections; To Deliver Lectures In Many Mid-Western Cities.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, founder of the Zionists Organization of America and noted rabbi of the Free Synagogue of New York, delivered his second address in Chapel Hill yesterday morning in Gerrard hall to approximately 800 students and citizens. The subject of the lecture was "Jew and Christian: Agreements and Disagreements."

He began by stating that the old enmity between Christian and Jew expressed by the saying that "Orthodoxy is my doxy, heterdoxy is your doxy" should no longer prevail.

"Christianity and Judaism are closely related," Dr. Wise stated "because after all Jesus of Nazareth was the son of a Jewess mother and knew nothing of the apostolic creeds which were later to compose the New Testament.

"The whole ideal of collective worship," he said in enumerating some of the agreements of the two religions, "was borrowed from the Hebrew religion. Many of the hymns that are sung today came from the Hebrew Psalter, which was the soul of Judia, and the quest of holiness is the aim of both religions." In short, Dr. Wise considered the two religions but two branches of the same divine church.

"The point of departure between the two faiths," Dr. Wise said in discussing some of the disagreements, "is Jesus of Nazareth. Christianity accepts Jesus as 'uniquely divine,' and holds that the Messiah is yet to come, not in the form of a personality, but in the self-redemptive power of the human race, not through the death of one,

Former Student To Seek Governorship Of Western State

C. J. Hagan, former student at the University of North Carolina, has recently announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for governor of California.

In planning a state-wide campaign, Mr. Hagan will present as his platform the repeal of the Wright act and the modification of the Volstead act. "I don't drink," he said, "but I'll vote wet for the defense of personal liberty. And in the forthcoming primary and election, not only the man but the issue will decide the outcome of the campaign. I stand for the repeal of the Wright act and modification of the Volstead act, and am ready to meet any opponent on these questions."

Charles J. Hagan was born in Greenville, N. C., in 1879. He attended the state university for the year of 1896, being initiated into the Sigma Chi fraternity. Afterwards he was a student at Horner Military Institute and also at St. Mary's college in Belmont, N. C. Becoming a resident of Los Angeles in 1909 he became engaged in the real estate business. For the past two years he has been prominent in city and state politics.

If the London naval conference succeeds in abolishing battleships, who is going to pick up all the trans-atlantic fliers?

"Sweet Briar To Admit Students"—headline in the Washington and Lee Ring-Tum Phi. What a peculiar thing for a college to do!

In the annual President's report to the University board of trustees, it was revealed that there are 143 atheists on the campus. Probably the stock market crash is responsible.

The Chapel Hill board of aldermen are considering plans for supplying gas to local residences. How about running pipes to all the University classrooms and getting an abundant supply of free gas?

Yesterday's news from Chicago: five bombings, a murder attempt in the midst of a throng of shoppers, one man shot by police, a machine gun battle between rival gangsters, two holdups. Evidently the Windy City is taming down.

The Latest Offer To President Chase

For several weeks the University news bureau, The Tar Heel and without doubt some of the state papers have been aware that President Chase is among a list of educators under consideration as successor to Dr. David Kinley, president of the University of Illinois, who retires at the end of the present school year. In order to avoid a repetition of the weary round of publicity, of useless editorial speculations, which attended the University of Oregon's offer to Dr. Chase two years ago, and, more recently, Georgetown's attempts to secure Chuck Collins as head football coach, the news bureau and the Tar Heel have not reported the fact that the University president is considering the Illinois offer.

Newspaper stories and comments, which include all manner of surmises as to why President Chase will or will not accept the Illinois offer, are exceedingly embarassing to those concerned, quite naturally. Yesterday an Associated Press dispatch from Urbana mentioned Dr. Chase as one of the men under consideration for the Illinois presidency, and the state papers were forced to wire Chapel Hill for details. We consider it a distinct tribute to the sense of decency of the North Carolina newspaper editors and the news bureau officials that the matter has not been dragged into the light of doubtful publicity during the past several weeks.

Nothing can be accomplished by revealing the details of President Chase's negotiations with Illinois, except to painfully embarrass both parties and the University. It is the President's private affair; needless publicity concerning the offer will only set him up as a target for speculations arising from idle curiosity.

President Chase's record and his personal qualifications are such that he will continue to receive offers from other universities as long as he remains here. There is no reason in the world why he should be dragged into the spotlight of painful publicity whenever he receives one of these offers.

Raising The Standard Of Academic Work

Writing from the point of view of a student who has been many times disheartened and disgusted with the low level of work exhibited in the majority of undergraduate classes, we heartily approve the adoption by the faculty of the proposed ruling to require a student to maintain an average of C on half of his work in order to graduate. By the inauguration of the comprehensive examination this year the University went one step further toward a higher standard in scholarship. We welcome any innovation that will improve the quality of the undergraduate work and make the requirements in the academic field a little more stiff for the students. The slovenly way the work is done by the majority of students not only fails to challenge our abilities, but many times is a degrading influence.

Requirements for entrance at a state university cannot be raised greatly until the whole state school system is improved and the standards raised in the majority of the high schools. The state university by virtue of its support by the taxpayers must appeal to the average student and make its requirements to suit his needs. But once the student is admitted to the university, he should be made to meet higher and higher standards as he goes on with his undergraduate work. College work should require more of his time, his energy, and effort than high school work. There is a noticeable lack of effort on the part of a great many students of our acquaintance. Excellence is never achieved when there is no effort to attain it.

It is no secret that undergraduate work here is far easier than in the northern institutions of high standing. From our conversations with many students from the north we have found that the actual requirements to "get by" are far lower here than in the great universities and colleges of the north. We should like to see the standards of Carolina raised to meet those of the best institutions of collegiate rank. We should consider our standards high enough, not when they exceed the Southern standard, but only when they equal or exceed the national rating.

To require a student to maintain an average of C on his work in order to graduate will mean that each person will put forth a little more effort in all his work and that the general level of the work done will be raised in some degree. Anything that can be done to increase the amount of effort exerted by the students in their work will make class work more interesting, more stimulating, and more challenging.

Political Searchlight Again Centers Upon Prohibition

Although there is sharp disagreement as to whether the prohibition law has been a success thus far, there is no way to evade the fact that it has well nigh prohibited the discussion of any other measure in Washington since the holidays. Tariff, farm relief, railroad consolidation, prosperity, the radio scandal—all have been forced to yield the rostrum to the Noble Experiment. The Wickersham commission's suggestions for making enforcement more rigid contain little that is new, and the new ones are by no means sure of adoption.

The truth about the preliminary report is that the commission was stampeded into premature action by the criticism of the fanatical drys in congress. It is lamentable that the president, who had the intelligence to inaugurate the commission and to assign the task thereof, lacks the courage to stand between his commission and the host of those who seek to coin it into political profit by harassing it. There is scarcely anything that the commission could recommend concerning prohibition which would have much effect, because the lines on both sides of that question are too tightly drawn; yet it is highly conceivable that its studies and recommendations might have a tremendous effect upon our antiquated legal procedure and penal system.

'Tis indeed an ill wind that cannot fill a political sail. The question of prohibition produces more smoke screens than those utilized by rum runners. There is no risk in conjecturing that many a Republican congressman who was wondering a scant month ago how he would explain his tariff vote to the home folks this fall, breathes easier now in lieu of the prohibition tumult. Noting the extent to which this tumult has obscured other issues in the Capitol City, even the casual observer cannot help knowing that it was a godsend to such dry Republican senators as Goff of West Virginia, Allen of Kansas, and Deneen of Illinois, who were being stared in the face by the imminent and difficult problem of defending the indefensible votes which they had cast on numerous measures. On the other hand, several Democratic Drys were contemplating very seriously the difficulty of making their dry Protestant constituents forget the great fervor with which they campaigned for Al Smith, the Wet Boy. The loophole afforded by the renewal of the prohibition issue has been very timely in its arrival. Thus, it has been demonstrated once again that the curse of prohibition, from a political standpoint, is that it is always dragged across the records of public men on every other occasion. Herein lies the great weakness of the Noble Experiment.—J. C. W.

FOREST CONSERVATION

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Here and there, in books and periodicals, we constantly run across lengthy articles bearing decided emphasis on the present rapid use of timber and coal, two of our most important American natural resources. They lay before us, in a very pessimistic manner, the only too gloomy outlook of the future—the day when our lands will be deforested, our coal gone! But it seems to me that it would be more to the point to mention possibilities for conserving these materials—to show how we might economize, how we might prevent such an outlook—rather than give us the discouraging side of the problem.

This state has very little to do with coal, but everything is being done to preserve the forests. It is reported that about two-thirds of the area of North Carolina is covered with trees, and I am sure, if right methods of conservation are employed (fire prevention and proper cutting of timber), that we shall be in little danger of deforestation. Being near great markets and in excellent climate, this section should later be of considerable importance.

Europe, as we are all aware, is in the greatest need of immediate conservation. In Germany the plan "two trees planted for every one cut" still prevails, and though probably not always followed, is a very wise attempt to curb the steady decline of forests. The care which that country takes of her trees greatly impressed me. Everything possible is done to give the larger trees room, and to encourage the smaller ones. Scarcely once did I come across a bit of forest which had not been deprived of its undergrowth and dead branches.

But we are now seeing the importance of preventing our forests from being wasted and destroyed, and with the cooperation of the public and officials, the outcome is certain to be promising.

A new department in this issue is headed "Commonplace Book" and contains brief statements of interesting cases, which for one reason or another could not be dealt with more thoroughly. They are important and interesting enough to warrant some mention or else the facts are so unusual as to compel attention.

The "Open Court" column deals with the rule making power, which it is proposed to give to the courts. This is a matter of timely importance to the lawyers of the country. The book reviews in this number are by Miss Lucile Elliott, the law librarian, and by James H. Chadbourn, a second-year student.

Sartorial Sway

By Beau Gent

If you are one of those men who can vie with Carnera, the heavyweight contender's, size of foot—he wears a specially manufactured size 16—and have feet that are inclined to be narrow, you should not wear a shoe with a pointed tie. You should seek out those shoes that have a short vamp in order to set off, by optical illusion, the actual inches of the foot. You should not limit yourself to one type of shoe, but you will find that the brogued shoe or one that is well rounded, though not squared off in an ugly line, will be most effective. For the benefit of those who have an inherent craving for color, let me say that the bright yellow shoes—of which I have seen quite a number on the campus—are of Senegambian fashion. A gentleman doesn't wear such atrocities.

The wing tip is the mode for winter and spring. It is by far the most popular with the college man, and is usually of a dark brown or black, NOT yellow.

For those inveterate dandies who have, and are addicted to flashing a roll of bill, I recommend the new bill clip which has become so popular with the college man. It will save you the loss of your cherished shekels. You may buy it right here in town.

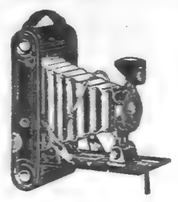
For those who are built in proportion to the Leviathan, I would advise suits and topcoats of either plain fabrics, depending upon the cut and color for smart effects, or patterns of herringbone and similar design. A faint contrasting stripe is permissable, but nothing so conspicuous as a white stripe of determined character on a dark background.

The little man, providing that he doesn't wear loud clothes, can not only get away with patterns that the larger must evade, but often finds them extremely advantageous in making of his inconspicuous figure, a smart impression.



Incidentally, it would be well to bear in mind when you are on your next shopping tour, that the powder blue of a few years ago has been revived. It is becoming the predominating color on the calendar of sartorial returns. The double breasted suit is gaining favor rapidly throughout the south and west and an unusual number of collegiate style leaders are booming it. The jacket should be of generous length, with three pairs of buttons, the upper pair slightly wider apart than the others, and should fit snugly.

Despite the fact that the powder blues and other lighter shades are being worn further south and in the southwest, one should avoid clothing of a light shade at this time of the year. While these summery clothes may be of sufficient thickness to keep one warm, a light grey or tan suit, is unseasonable at present. It is far preferable if one has such a suit, to bury it in mothballs and use it in the spring on those balmy days when the craving for something light and airy comes over one. A change at that time of the year is always desirable and if one has such a suit at hand, one is ahead of the shopping game when the vernal fever comes along.

Button down collars are on the increase and broadcloth has been supplanted as the favorite shirt material, by the oxford. White oxford gets the call, but for those who prefer them, there are various solid colors available.

Campus Snapshot

J. C. Williams

Memorial Hall, venerable ancestor of the campus meeting-places, has met her doom. Like a dear old lady, whose younger relatives have taught her to play cards and drink cocktails, she must give way to a modern structure. With the passing of Memorial Hall only Old West, Old East, and Gerrard will have escaped the modernizing influence of the present. When these three are placed under the ban of reconstruction, the tradition that lingered around the vine-covered halls of the university of our grandfathers will be destroyed.

More and bigger buildings, more departments, larger teaching facilities—these are the demands of the day. Carolina must not be left behind in the rush; out-of-date buildings must give place to new ones. Our alma mater must expand like the big colleges and universities out West. Tradition and pleasant old memories must not be allowed to stay the hand of progress. Onward, Carolina, onward!

Little is expected of the dreamer. Socialists dream of free lunch, but die without ever seeing their dreams fulfilled. Many people dream of a national campaign for the exposure of fraud, to be followed by an era of intellectual honesty. Some agency which will lay bare the social mind and reveal its secret thoughts is the dream of the campus, the state, and the nation. Something that can peer beneath the pomp and splendor of the mighty and discover the "beast" shrowded in regal trappings is being sought as diligently as the famed Fountain of Youth once was. The sneaking voice of flattery seems more welcome than the loud, clear tones of truth. Thus we are made.

At this season of the collegiate year fraudulent mouthing often makes an inroad on our beloved campus, wearing the veil of true piety. Fraudulent policies are executed beneath the protection of the shield of avowed sincerity and honesty. Though each college generation dreams of a different state of affairs, 'tis ever thus.

We are told that the modern girl seldom chases a man. It is also true that molasses seldom chases flies. Yet flies are stuck and ladies become engaged. Rumor has it that the first of these statements is true because men are too fast and that the latter owes its validity to the fact that flies get too high. But the other day someone dared to tell us that a combination of the two is too often the case. The modern girl, therefore, doesn't chase after men because they are too "fast" and too "high."

Really, we are a great advocate of the interests of the co-eds of the University. No other phase of life's work is complete without the "fair ones," and neither is the educational institution complete without them. We look forward to the day when there will be as many co-eds at Carolina as there are boys. There is no room for prejudice in a matter of this sort.

CHALLENGES ARE BEING ISSUED BY U. N. C. FENCERS

Steps Being Taken To Secure Recognition As A Varsity Sport.

TO HAVE TOURNAMENT

The University fencing team, claimants to the southern title last year, are planning an ambitious schedule for the winter and early spring.

Tentative matches have been scheduled already with Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama, who also claimed the conference title last year, and the Tar Heels, led by Captain Hinkey Hendlin, national junior champion, are lustily challenging every team in sight.

Steps are being taken meanwhile to get fencing recognized as an intercollegiate sport at the University.

The principal question in the past has always been whether campus interest in fencing was sufficient to justify an intercollegiate team.

A January novice tournament, won by W. G. Lowry, drew a participation of 50 men, and did much to dispel that doubt. The sport has definitely been placed on the calendar for intramural competition, and it is hoped that the athletic council will soon pass favorably on the proposition to make it a varsity sport.

Another tournament is to be held soon, and those in charge are expecting a participation of at least 100. A woman's fencing team for University co-eds, which would be the first in the south, is also planned.

Material is plentiful. The Tar Heels won all meets last year and have the same men back this season. In addition to Captain Hendlin, who also coaches the team, Fred and Digby Wardlaw, two other star performers, ineligible last year because all were freshmen, are eligible.

The more promising of the other candidates include Herbert Estop; Al Nazareno, a colorful Filipino; Manager Harry Galland; and W. G. Lowry and Paul Rhodes, winner and runner-up in the novice tourney.

Out of Meet

Captain Dave Nims, veteran track and cross-country man, may be knocked out of the Millrose meet on account of illness.

BERLINGER HERE IN THE SPRING

Noted Track Star on Penn State Team, Which Is To Meet Tar Heels.

When the Tar Heel track team engages Penn State in a dual meet here this spring local fans will see in action Barney Berlinger, winner of the decathlon in the Penn Relays last year and probably the greatest athlete ever to be turned out at Penn. Berlinger has cleared 13 feet 5 3-4 inches in the pole vault, heaved the 16-pound shot 49 feet, 3 inches, broad jumped 22 feet, 11 inches, and high jumped over 6 feet 1 inch, and he has an equally impressive mark in the javelin throw. His first indoor start of the season will be the Millrose games Saturday. Coach Robertson, who formerly attended William Penn Charter School, and Mercersburg Academy, intends to build his track team around the big athlete.

The Red and Blue boasts several crack quarter milers in Captain William G. Castler of Lakewood, Horace Steel of Philadelphia, Francis McLaughlin of Brooklyn, Johnny Kerr of New Jersey, and Earl Cassel of Norristown. Bill Buch of Bayside, L. I., who formerly ran the quarter mile, has been switched to the hurdles.

Penn's middle distance and distance runners are better than ever this year and include William McKniff of Pennsylvania, Jesse Montgomery, Carl Coan and Daniel Dean, all of Pennsylvania. McKniff was a star miler at West Philadelphia Catholic high before coming to Penn and Roland Ritchie of New York is another good distance runner on the squad. Much is expected of Lamoine Boyle, star broad jumper and 220 yard man.

William Newkirk, Penn's leading high jumper, is capable of doing over six feet. The leading hurdler on the squad is Richard Gentle of Brookline, Mass., captain-elect and halfback on the varsity football team. He showed up impressively as a freshman, but a knee injury held him back as a varsity performer last season.

Intramural Schedule

4:00 p. m.—(1) Phi Alpha vs. Phi Gamma Delta; (2) Theta Chi vs. Phi Delta Theta; (3) Tau Epsilon Phi vs. Chi Phi.

5:00 p. m.—(1) Pi Kappa Alpha vs. Sigma Alpha Epsilon; (2) Kappa Alpha vs. Phi Kappa Sigma; (3) Steele vs. Aycock (F)

"TECH" DEFEATS "VIRGINIA" 18 - 0

Fysal And Blackwood Star In Winter Football Game.

(Marion Alexander)

The mythical "Georgia Tech" eleven defeated the equally mythical "Virginia" gridders, 18-0, in the third round-robin game of the Tar Heels' winter grid season yesterday.

"Georgia Tech's" strong line, headed by two fighting guards in Ellis Fysal and Bob Blackwood, held the Virginians—Magner, Slusser and all—to two lonely first downs.

"Tech" amassed 9 first downs and scored in the first, third and fourth quarters. The first was on a 38-yard pass and run, Jackson to Houston. The second was on a 55-yard sprint through tackle by Chuck Erickson, who came in as a sub. The final was on a 25-yard "sleeper" pass, Wyrick to Suggs, who distinguished himself likewise for his line driving.

The victory gave "Georgia Tech" an even break for two games played, and sent "Virginia," with perhaps the best pair of halfbacks of the four winter teams, into the lowly cellar post.

"Virginia" started the game with a rush. Quarterback Wyrick let Slusser's long punt go by him. A loss at the line and an offside penalty and halfback Jackson was punting from the 3-yard stripe.

The punt was poor, and with "Virginia" holding the ball 25 yards out, a score looked certain. A fumble, inevitable result of a muddy field, followed. Shields Tabb, Tech end, rushed in, scooped it up, and from there on "Tech" had things all its way.

"Virginia" threatened but once, and that at the last of the first half. Magner uncorked a passing attack to Peacock and McNeill that netted 40 yards in two plays and put "Virginia" within 25 yards of a score. The first half ended just there.

Magner and Slusser both worked during the first half, but not together. They came in at the same time during the last half, but failed to live up to expectations. Slusser intercepted a pass by Erickson on one occasion and turned in a neat 35-yard broken field sprint, but the old halfback pair never seemed to get going together.

The "Georgia Tech" line of Tabb and Parsley, ends; Sharkey and Collins, tackles; Blackwood and Fysal, guards; and Allen, center, did great work.

On offense, the shining lights were the passing of Jackson, freshman prospect, and Wyrick; the broken-field running of Erickson; and the line driving of Suggs, freshman fullback of two seasons ago.

Lineup:

"Virginia"		"Georgia Tech"
Cole	L. E.	Tabb
Oliver	L. T.	Sharkey
McIver	L. G.	Blackwood
Greer	C.	Allen
Crew	R. G.	Fysal
Underwood	R. T.	Collins
Allen	R. E.	Parsley
Peacock	Q. B.	Wyrick
Lassiter	L. H.	Jackson
Slusser	R. H.	Houston
McNeill	F. B.	Suggs

Since 1924 61 LL. B. degrees have been conferred on students of the University.

Sprint Star

Charlie Farmer, who established himself last year as one of the greatest freshman sprinters in the south, is slated to enter the Millrose meet at Madison Square Garden Saturday.

Kappa Sig Gets Victory

With White leading the attack with 9 points, the strong Kappa Sigma team succeeded in downing the Beta Theta Pi team 21-15 yesterday afternoon.

Lineup:

K. Sig. (21)		B. Th. Pi (15)
Eagles (6)	R. F.	Moody (4)
Satterfield (5)	L. F.	Dresslar (1)
Bagby	C.	Waddell (4)
Davis	R. G.	Waugh (6)
White (9)	L. G.	Glenn

Substitutions: Betas—Wardlaw, McGauley.

WRESTLERS WILL MEET PRINCETON TIGERS SATURDAY

Third Test Of The Season Scheduled To Be In New Jersey City.

Victorious last week-end in their first southern conference test, the Tar Heel wrestlers will step out of the conference Saturday to take on the Princeton Tigers.

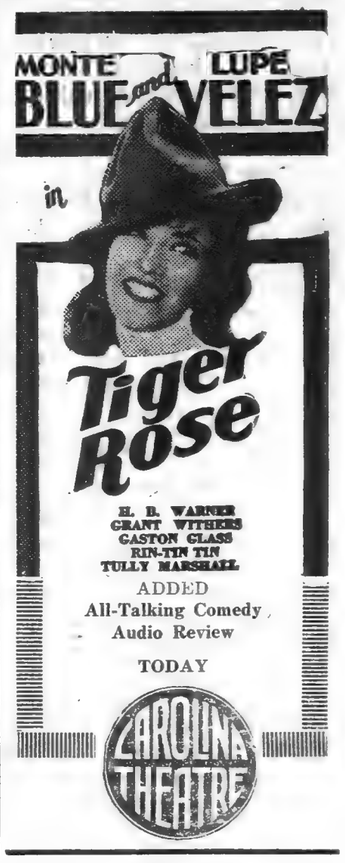
The meet is to be held at Princeton and will constitute one of the hardest tests on the Tar Heel card.

The Tar Heels dropped a hard-fought opening meet to Navy, but accounted for themselves creditably in last week's 17-11 win from V. P. I.

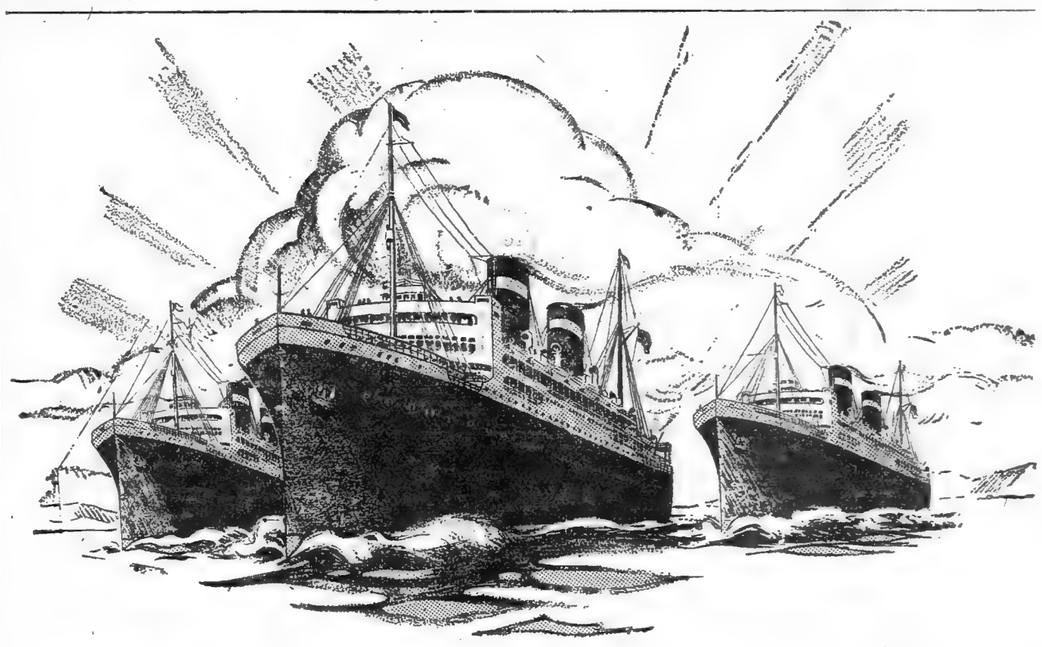
Time decisions in the 125, 155, 165 and 175-pound classes, and a fall in the 135-pound class accounted for the Tar Heel win from V. P. I. Stallings, Moore, Cowper, Ferguson, and Albright, who accounted for the wins, look like good bets against Princeton. Captain Wayne Woodard, who regularly wrestles the post Albright had at V. P. I., is also expected to have recuperated from the cold that kept him out of the Gobbler clash.

Changes may be seen in the other weights. Tsumas lost the 145-pound clash at V. P. I., and a new face might be seen here. Sanders is an outstanding contestant. Bell and Usher have divided time in the 115-pound class, but neither has lived up to early season expectations.

The Tar Heels forfeited the heavy match to V. P. I. Thompson, regular heavy, is away on co-op engineering work. Ferguson, 175-pounder, will probably shift up to heavy for Princeton, with Houghton taking his berth.



Old East Defeats "I"



The strong Old East basketball team yesterday crushed "I" team to the tune of 42-8. Myers was the shining light for the winners, having a total of 16 points to his credit at the close of the game.

Lineup:

Old East (42)		"I" (8)
Hendlin (14)	R. F.	Tuerchelli
Lowery (2)	L. F.	Wolf (2)
Stafford (4)	C.	Leubourta (2)
Daniels (2)	R. G.	Bloom (2)
Myers (16)	L. G.	Levitt (2)

Substitutions: Old East—Armstrong (2), Sutton (2), McCombs.

Over the Horizon

HERE they come—the nucleus of an all-electric merchant marine. Yesterday, they were a dream. To-day, they are well over the horizon, linking the ports of the east and west coasts with fortnightly service. The goal of the Panama Pacific Line is to build three more turbine-electric ships, thus enabling weekly New York-Frisco sailings.

Even now, the three liners, California, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, constitute the largest fleet of turbine-electric commercial ships in the world.

Besides propelling these ships, electricity hoists freight, raises anchors, mans pumps, turns rudders, drives winches, and warps the vessels into their berths. It lights lamps, spins fans, operates elevators, cools and cooks food. Its magic touch is apparent on every deck.

All electric equipment, above and below deck, is a product of General Electric.

The planning, production, and distribution of such equipment has been largely the responsibility of college-trained men who are working with General Electric and who have aided in bringing these ships over the horizon.

Robertson Aided By Discovery Of Archives

patched them to the office of the third Lord Bathurst, then secretary of war and colonies, and were deposited among the state papers. It was by the permission of the present Lord Bathurst that Mr. Robertson was able to inspect the 63 folio volumes that make up the collection, which were until their recent sale to the Venezuelan government virtually lost in the library of the Bathurst family at Cirencester in Gloucestershire.

A lengthy description of the record is offered in the Review, from which the following are excerpts: "This collection is composed of 63 folio volumes that span the years from 1764 to 1810. Their contents are extremely varied, for in his legajos Miranda filed prescriptions, menus, broadsides, pamphlets, and squibs. . . . Interlaced among letters, memoranda, and dairies can be found invitations to dances, dinners and clubs, clippings from journals in France, England and the United States, a visiting card of George Washington. . . .

"Miranda's memorabilia contain a multitude of papers that should be useful to students of both European and American history. . . . These manuscripts possess much more than a series of unedited personal records. Miranda not only kept significant memoranda concerning his own activities, but also fugitive memoirs of his contemporaries.

"Scarcely less significant to historical students is the fact that . . . Miranda left in his Archives a veritable legion of personal memoranda in their original form. . . . In particular he preserved many informing documents regarding his long sustained efforts to free the Indies from Spanish domination.

"To students of American history the most interesting part of Miranda's diary is that which describes his tour of the United States just after the close of the Revolutionary War. With a keen zest he met teachers, farmers, lawyers, statesmen and generals . . . and conversed with such Revolutionary heroes as Samuel Adams, Alexander Hamilton and George Washington.

"Other parts of this romantic diary describes Miranda's remarkable tour of Europe from Vienna to the Crimea, and from Athens to Lapland. . . . Among the most fascinating pages of his biography are those which depict his relations with the enigmitical autocrat Catherine the Great who became his patron."

Perhaps not realizing that he was to be the artist himself, Mr. Robertson said of these archives, "Scattered through this material the biographer of the future should find pigments that will enable him to paint Miranda's moral portrait." The Life of Miranda does just that with a vividness unsurpassed, an extraordinary attention to detail, and adherance to fact.

may call out the question: How much motivation does a playwright need sanely to send his young characters, though lunamad, on a fatal trip to the moon, even to make the point that a mother should be careful of the power of suggestion or to make a figure which might force a similar result? But what ever the answer, the Play-Likers did more than a reasonable share of construction and acting."

Holders of season tickets to the Playmakers' programs are requested to exchange them for reserved seats at the Students' Supply Store.

Christianity, Judaism Related, Says Wise

but through the life of all.

"You," continued the speaker, "are the cause of the Jews not recognizing Christianity. You were the only source by which Christianity could be spread to the Jews, but you willed that it not be spread in that direction." He said further that the name Jesus had never passed the lips of his great-grand-father.

As a solution to the difficulty resulting from the disagreements between the Jew and Christian, Dr. Wise stated that the two religions should not be at each other's throat but should "learn the art of living together, remembering always that the agreements are major and the disagreements are minor, for there is an underlying unity between the two religions."

Rabbi Wise was forced to hurry away immediately after his address without meeting many of the people that had desired to see him. He was obliged to catch the north-bound train at Danville in order to fulfill an engagement in Culver, Ind. From there he will speak in numerous cities in the mid-West, and finally at the University of Illinois. From there he returns to his home in New York. Dr. Wise expressed his grief in not being able to see all his friends and those who wished to talk with him personally.

Through the courtesy of Jack Lippman and his car, Dr. Wise was able to catch his train in due time. Mr. Comer, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. under whose auspices Dr. Wise had been brought here, accompanied the party to Danville.

lists and describes the activities and institutions of the division which are of particular interest to secondary schools, since the paper is addressed to them. First of all he discusses correspondence instruction which is intended for students who for some external reason are not able to pursue the regular course of study at the University. A year and a half of college credit is offered through this medium.

Of the travel-study tours conducted each summer by the extension division it is stated that "these tours are open to students who are qualified to pursue the courses for college credit. During the summer of 1930 a French tour and a transcontinental motor tour to California will be made. Courses in geology, botany, general science, physical geography, economics, and sociology will be offered on the latter tour.

The library service of the division offers a source of material for outside students who do not have sufficient library facilities to assist them in preparation of debates, orations, essays, and special assignments. Furthermore, The University News Letter is distributed free by the division to all persons who request it.

One of the most popular activities of the division is the annual triangular debating contest among the members of the High School Debating Union. The query which is to be discussed this year is: "Resolved, That North Carolina should adopt the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the classification of property for taxation." April 4 is the date for the triangular contests this year, with the final contest being held here on April 17 and 18.

The debate contest is to be the concluding feature of High School Week, an event which also brings hundreds of secondary school students from over the entire state to participate in the annual interscholastic track and tennis meets. On this occasion trophies are awarded to the winners in the various high school competitions, including the academic contests in Latin, French, Spanish, mathematics, journalism, and typewriting. An announcement of the rules and time of these contests was recently made through the Extension News.

"In cooperation with the State Parent-Teacher Association, a poster contest is conducted annually to encourage students interested in art. The school winning the annual newspaper contest receives for the year the Thomas Hume Cup."

About high school athletics Mr. Grumman says: "All accredited public high schools of the state are invited to become members of the High School Athletic Association and to take part in the annual program of this association. Trophy cups are awarded by the Association to the high schools which win state titles in the various contests."

At the present time the Athletic Association is sponsoring basketball competition among the class A high schools of the east and west. It is later intended that an elimination series be organized for the smaller institutions. In the Topics, mention is also made of the summer training school for coaches, jointly conducted by the division and the University Athletic Association, and the physical ability tests sent out by the division.

A play book loan service, supervisory direction, and general and technical information on the drama are offered by the bureau of community drama to schools interested in dramatic art. The bureau also conducts the annual dramatic festival and state tournament, which will be held this year on April 10, 11, and 12. An announcement of entrants and the rules governing the tournament is forthcoming at an early date, according to Miss Nettina Strobach of the bureau.

In the field of music, the extension division offers its services in teaching public school music, with the cooperation of the University music department. Also, "the University glee club, band, and orchestra may be secured for a limited number of concerts during the academic year."

And in conclusion Mr. Grumman writes of radio and lecture service; "Through the courtesy of the Durham Life Insurance Company, the University of North Carolina hour is broadcast weekly from radio station WPTF." Educational musical programs and talks are arranged. "Members of the faculty may be secured for lectures on a wide range of subjects. A number of commencement addresses are delivered each year."

According to various members of the extension division a number of complete announcements about the activities of the department, including the real estate institute and poster contest, are to be made public shortly.

N. C. C. W. Play-Likers To Appear In Production Here

"Childern Of The Moon" To Be Presented In The Playmakers Theatre Tonight And Tomorrow.

The Play-Likers of North Carolina College for Women will present Martin Flavin's tragedy "Children of the Moon" at the Playmaker theatre tonight at 8:30. There will be a matinee tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 and a performance tomorrow night, instead of the customary three-day run of productions presented here on the Playmakers' program.

The cast for the play is the same as that appearing in the production given in Greensboro last fall. The parts are handled by actors and actresses who have had previous experience. Vera Buckingham, who plays the role of Laura Atherton, the selfish mother, has appeared in "Chanticleer," "The Cradle Song," "Polly With a Past" and "Dear Brutus."

Eloise Banning, playing the role of Jane Atherton, the daughter whose engagement to a young aviator forms the basis of the plot, has previously had part in "The Whole Town's Talking," and in "The Cradle Song."

James Hodge, who has the role of Major John Bannister, the aviator, has appeared many times in the Play-Likers' productions. He has played the part of philanderer, hero, journalist, English colonel, pugilist, romantic Spanish youth, and millionaire. He has had prominent parts in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," "Enemy," "Dear Brutus," "The Cradle Song," "The Whole Town's Talking," "Polly With a Past" and "White Collars."

Ruth Abbott, playing the part of Madame Atherton, Jane's grandmother, has taken part in several former productions. The old woman in "Will O' the Wisp" is her most outstanding work.

A. S. Gifford, taking the role of Thomas, played in "Smiling Through," and "Polly With a Past." H. G. Mitchell, playing the part of Walter Higgs, has appeared in "Smiling Through," "The Patsy," "Daisy Mayme," and "The First Year."

The role of Judge Atherton is played by W. R. Taylor, who, as director of the Play-Likers, has won recognition not only for the productions of that group, but likewise for the roles he has played in their various performances.

A. T. West, who plays the part of Dr. Wetherell, is assistant director of the Play-Likers, and is directing "Children of the Moon."

This is the fourth number on the regular season program of the Carolina Playmakers. Persons holding season tickets are asked to secure reserved seats at the Student Supply Store.

LAW STUDENTS TO TRY FOR PLACES ON 'LAW REVIEW'

Twelve first year law students have been selected by the faculty to compete for places upon the Law Review staff. These men were selected because of their scholarship as determined by the grades they made at the end of the first semester. Their ability to write was also considered.

The plan for a first year competition was tried out for the first time last spring and was so successful that it will be a regular method of choosing editors of the Law Review. The men selected for the competition will take part in the writing of recent case comments under the same conditions as the regular members of the staff. The list of names follows:

J. G. Adams, Jr., R. M. Alexander, M. S. Benton, T. T. Brown, H. B. Campbell, W. T. Covington, T. J. Gold, R. M. Gray, A. W. Langston, H. L. Lobdell, G. A. Long, and W. L. Marshall, Jr.

Mrs. Lawton Tells Of State's Beauty Along the Roadsides

Mrs. W. L. Lawton, who is making a survey of North Carolina roads in connection with her work as president of the National Council for Protection of Roadside Beauty, lectured here last night at the Carolina Inn on the progress that is being made toward roadside beautification in this state.

"Roadside beautification does not necessarily mean formal tree planting of highways from end to end, since they are not intended as horticultural exhibits, but windows of the state, through which the travelers may enjoy the fields, crops, woods and hills," Mrs. Lawton said.

"The North Carolina roadsides are naturally lovely and interesting if they are left as nature made them," she said, pointing out that raw shoulders and cuts are scars and that the billboard blight has broken out as a rash along the highways.

Showing some of the things that roadside beautification might hope to accomplish, Mrs. Lawton said that it would consist largely in covering up the scare, replacing the sacrificed trees, clearing away billboards, and a little judicious planting of city approaches which would make the highways of the state "as famous for their beauty as they now are for their roadbeds."

Mrs. Lawton came here under the joint auspices of the Jefferson Davis Highway committee of the North Carolina U. D. C., and the Chapel Hill Community Club. She was introduced by Col. J. H. Pratt of Chapel Hill, president of the State Forestry Association.

Rockwell's Name Omitted

By mistake the name of Harry Rockwell was omitted from the list of those passing the recent bar examination.

Pop Bottle Shotgun And Knife Causes Eight And Four Month Sentences For Two Defendants

(By John Patric)

"Mistah Wilson's sahvice station, 'bout three mile out, ah reckons, jedge," was the scene of a conflict Saturday evening, wherein the heavy artillery was a shotgun.

Participants, witnesses, and buckshot-peppered bystanders appeared Wednesday evening in the Chapel Hill recorder's court, crowded to full capacity.

John Luther Edwards, 19 and colored, addressed the court: "Ah was goin' along dat road, sah, an' dese boys, Jesse Durham and Erick Jones, was a-runnin'. Jesse acks me kin he git de loan of a li'l money. Ah says no, ah didn' have none. Den Jesse hits me ovah de haid wif a bottle, a right heavy bottle, an' Erick gits his knife an' say he cut hell outa me, an' ah reckon ah did grab Missah Wilson's gun. But ah didn' mean shootin' dat gun, sah. A jes' feel de trigger kinda like, and de shot went off. Ah was jus' meanin' to scare 'em, so dey wouldn' cut me none."

Jesse Durham, 21, colored. "Yessah, ah reckon ah had dat bottle. Hit wuz a orange crush bottle plumb full ah gits fo' mah li'l baby. Yessah, we gits arguin' lak people do sometime ah reckon. Yessah, ah reckon we cussed right smaht—ah cussed some mahself. Den I hits John on de haid, jus' once, sah, an' den he gits dat gun an' shoots it off."

Erick Jones, 24, colored: "Ah didn' see nothin' and ah nevah gits mah knife. Yessah, ah did shows mah knife to Jesse when we wuz walkin' along de road. But ah didn' heah no argumen'—ah was walkin' ahaid. No sah, ah didn' see Jesse hit John wif dad bottle. Ah didn' see no bottle. Ah didn' say ah cuts nobody. Yessah, ah seen John pick up dat gun but ah didn' think they'd be no shootin'. Yessah, a piece of de glass windah hit me on de haid an' den ah stahted walkin' fas up de road an' John an' Jesse dey walked fas', too, Ah ain' guilty, no, - sah!"

Judge C P. Hinshaw: "The court believes you're guilty, but they've failed to prove it. We'll have to let you go.

"John on the other hand, you admit you shot that gun, and one shot hit Wilson's boy Dewey, an innocent party. Luckily it didn't hurt him. You might have wounded several people. They might have died. You've been in trouble before. You ought to go on the road for a year, — no, you're young yet. Eight months.

"Jesse, the only person you might have injured was John. But you might have killed him. Your wife's father lives near you, doesn't he? She and the baby can stay with him for four months while you're on the road. What's that, chief,—Wilson's plate glass window? Eight dollars for a new one? Well, we'll take a month off from each sentence if these boys pay for that."

Road sentences begin Saturday.

Seniors Elect Class Day Officers And Superlatives; Farris Makes Talk.

GREEN TO LEAD DANCE

J. C. B. Ehringhaus of Elizabeth City, delivered the main address of the evening at the Senior Smoker last night in Swain hall. J. Maryon Saunders introduced the speaker.

Mr. Ehringhaus said that there was more to campus life than mere books, and that there were four things that one learned on the University campus that would be of more value in the world than all the knowledge from books.

"Whether you come to the University for the purpose of serious study, or whether you come for pleasure, the impress of the University will in some way be made upon you. There are certain attitudes, certain traditions, certain rules of conduct, whether you realize it or not, which make for the most valuable recollections of your University days."

Mr. Ehringhaus stated that four things that were the most valuable to be obtained from life on the Carolina campus were: the friendships that one made while in college that would go through life, the habit of thought, the knowledge of honorable conduct of the little things in life, and the appreciation of the fundamental desires of life in all its aspects of the rule that all men are created free and equal.

"When you graduate," Mr. Ehringhaus said, "do not forget these things and carry them with you always. Aim high, shoot straight, and build up a reserve of moral, physical and mental strength. And remember that on this campus you learned to know men and learned to know them as men."

Ray Farris, president of the student body, made the closing address. He said that on the recent trip to Palo Alto, Cal., to the national meeting of student governments, he learned that the University's government ranked among the best.

The following class officers were elected: Bob Graham, lawyer; Bill Bobbitt, statistician; Cy Edson, prophet; John Mebane, poet; Marion Alexander, historian; Red Greene, dance leader; Bob Merritt, first assistant; Julian Fenner, second assistant.

The co-ed superlatives elected last night were: most dramatic, Phoebe Harden; most beautiful, Maurine Foister; and most popular, Helen McCoy.

For the senior boys' superlatives: best athlete, Ray Farris; best all-round, Charlie Waddell; most popular, Pot Adkins; best speaker, G. P. Carr; best looking, Bill Koenig; most original, Harry Galland; most influential, Fleming Wily; most dramatic, Pete Henderson; biggest nut, Johnny Lang; best writer, J. C. Williams; most brilliant, Gordon Gray; best executive, Ray Farris; best business man, Marion Alexander; biggest ladies' man, Linwood Harrell; biggest villain, Red Waddell; chief politician, Red Greene; best natured, Dave Nims; most social Archie Allen; most retiring, Tom Hunter; biggest bull shooter, Beatty Rector; sweetest, Pot Adkins; and ugliest, Glenn Holder.

Glee Club Appears At Gastonia High

Gastonia, February 6 — The University of North Carolina glee club appeared here tonight before a large audience at the Gastonia high school auditorium in a concert sponsored by the school music association of the town.

Tonight in Greenville the club will compete with some of the leading southern glee clubs in the annual intercollegiate contest. Although Professor H. S. Dyer, director of the glee club, stated some time ago that he considered as a handicap the fact that this University had not entered its club in some time, he was well pleased with the manner in which the group gave the contest numbers in chapel performances at the University last week.

Henderson To Speak To Graduate Club

At the meeting of the graduate school tonight, Dr. Archibald Henderson will speak on the subject, "The Role of Science in Contemporary Life."

The meeting will be held in the lounge of the graduate club at 7:30 p. m. and the usual informal social period will follow the talk.

A THOUGHT A DAY

An imperfect soul, seeing what is good and great and true, but very often failing in the attempt to attain it, is apt to be very harsh in its judgment on the shortcomings of others. But a devine and soverign soul—a soul that has more nearly attained to the measure of the perfect man—takes a calmer and gentler, because a larger hearted, view of those little weaknesses and indirectnesses which it cannot but daily see.

Tar Heel Topics

Tip to Prof Koch, Hubert Heffner and Elmer Hall: How about the famous Mr. Boss for the title role in the new Playmaker production "The Man in the Bowler Hat"?

Charles Hagan, former University of North Carolina student, is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of California. Yep, a North Carolina Democrat must go West to amount to anything these days.

Pascual Ortiz Rubio, new president of Mexico, was shot in the jaw just two hours after he delivered his inaugural speech Wednesday. Evidently the assailant was taking no chances upon having to listen to another speech by Senor Rubio.

Judging from the amount of expert mud-slinging indulged in here during the past few days, Bailey and Simmons would do well to send their campaign managers to Chapel Hill and let them take a few courses under the tutelage of the campus politicians.

Mud-Plastered Politicians

With elections two months off, the campus is in the throes of the most bitter orgy of political mud-slinging in years. Within the past few days there has been an outbreak of muck-raking and invective-hurling such as the present undergraduate generation has never seen before.

Campus politics have already reached a temperature dangerously near the boiling point. An explosion is imminent unless certain hot-headed politicians cool off considerably. Verbal controversies have almost devolved into fisticuffs on several occasions, according to reliable reports. Perhaps the best thing for all concerned would result if all the mud-slinging politicians were herded into the Tin Can, provided with weapons, and permitted to exterminate themselves. But the type of person who deals in slander and malicious personalities does not take kindly to anything which would endanger his own physical well-being; he manages to keep well in the background and studiously avoids actual encounters with the objects of his slanders.

Two strong political parties have already developed, which is fortunate. During the past two years the elections have been dominated by one huge organization, with bosses who have doled out the offices to various fraternities. This year the non-frat men will have much better representation on the tickets of the two parties, as the division in the fraternities has greatly enhanced the importance of the non-fraternity vote. Since the elimination of fraternity-controlled politics is impossible, inasmuch as the chapters are usually solid political units and the "barbs," or non-frat men, cannot be closely organized, the development of at least two parties is highly desirable. Competition for offices is keen here this year, which indicates a healthy interest in worthwhile extra-curricular activities.

In all probability the two parties have been equally responsible for the muck-raking which has developed to an unprecedented extent within the past few days. Neither party will gain anything by these tactics; if they are continued, the remainder of the campus will lose all respect for the leaders of the two factions.

Sane and level-headed men connected with each party would do well to calm down their scatter-brained and scandal-mongering political brethren. Muckerism benefits nobody, and it degrades those who partipate in it.

The Black Art Of Sarcasm

Professors and teachers have many ways of making themselves unpopular with their students, but the most effective of these is the use of sarcasm. A class will patronizingly laugh along with a professor who insists on weak or stale humor; most classes will study without grumbling under a man who assigns an inordinate amount of work, but who knows what he is about; students will go through a withering course under a dry professor and still like him if he is otherwise likeable; they will even stand for an occasional bawling out; but personal sarcasm directed at individual members of the class is a thing that jeopardizes any professor's popularity among his students.

Who does not remember some grammar school teacher who made the days of our youth miserable with classroom sarcasm? How she delighted in showing up to the class our mistakes and weaknesses, and how we quailed with hurt pride under the laughter of our schoolmates! College students are not in the habit of quailing with hurt pride, but they know it is an extremely unpleasant thing to be made a fool of in public, and that is exactly what classroom sarcasm attempts to accomplish.

Perhaps some hold it to be an instrument of discipline, but it is certainly a poor one, and serves chiefly to create a dislike and enmity between student and instructor. It also hampers freedom of expression in the classroom, for any student hesitates to discuss a question he is absolutely sure of when the discussion is presided over by a man who is free with irony and invective. Before personal sarcasm from the professor a law-abiding student is defenseless, so it is at best a cowardly weapon.

We realize that college classes often harbour some aggravating individuals, that the lot of a professor is a hectic one, and that he must sometimes be tempted to use personal violence, to say nothing of mere cutting remarks. But we know that it is possible to teach efficiently and have order in the classroom without resorting to such measures, for all about us are men who do so. Glance down the list of professors who are called good teachers, and who are best-liked among the student body, and you find the names of men who disdain to use jibes and ill-natured irony in dealing with their pupils.—J. J.

AN ALUMNUS COMMENTS

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I will appreciate your courtesy in allowing me to make comment in your excellent sheet on the action of the band in leaving the Tin Can last Saturday evening just before the end of the Carolina-Duke basketball game. That was a most unfortunate occurrence and the result of thoughtlessness on the part of someone. It should not happen again if Carolina teams are to have the support to which they are entitled.

A few aimless matriculates—I will not call them students—bored by the sight of strenuous exercise which is not contemplated in their idea of things collegiate, may withdraw unnoticed from the scene but the band, an organized body looked upon as a definite part of the student body's support of the team, cannot do so without creating a decidedly bad impression upon everybody present—players, students, visitors. In the face of evident defeat all hands should stand by until the last sound of the whistle.

This comment is made with wholehearted regard for that fine esprit de corps commonly known as Carolina spirit. I hope it will be so accepted by those whose support is so vital to the success of Carolina teams.

AN ALUMNUS.

Since 1924 there has been only one A.B.-LL.B. degree conferred on a University of North Carolina student; this degree was given in 1924.

In the past five years at the University 660 degrees have been bestowed in the A.B. school, 239 in the education school, 246 in the B.S. technical school, and 313 in the B.S. in commerce school.

At present there are 211 University seniors in the college of liberal arts, 80 in the school of education, 134 in the school of applied science, 107 in the school of engineering and 178 in the school of commerce.

The Campus

By Joe Jones

Rudolph, the snappy young alligator who made the front page of the state dailies last week, is still getting along nicely down in Graham dormitory. His owner, the Snake Doctor, moved him down into the basement when the janitor firmly refused to stay in the room with him long enough to sweep the floor and make the bed.

The basement of the dormitory has a dirt floor, and only the janitor has the key to it, so Rudolph lives there in comparative peace and quiet, as any alligator is wont to live. Over in one corner is a good sized pool under a leaky pipe, and in this the reptile spends his spare time, which consists of twenty-four hours per day. Here he floats with only his eyes and nostrils above the surface. The water is warm, and he, a born loafer, is quite content.

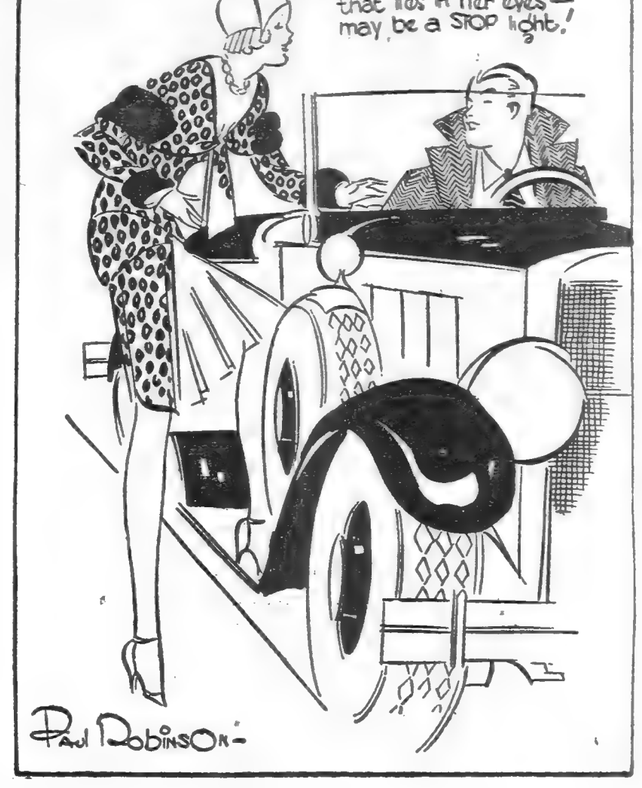
If visitors come in to see him he sinks slowly to the bottom of the puddle, and his master has to call him up from the muddy depths. In doing this the Snake Doctor makes a peculiar grunting sound, which he learned from Alligator Joe, the famed alligator farmer of Florida. It is the call of the old alligator to its young, and Rudolph never fails to respond to it.

He is still as vicious as ever, and surprisingly strong for his scant forty-four inches. The Snake Doctor handles him by grasping him firmly just back of the head with one hand and by the tail with the other. Even then Rudolph sometimes succeeds in breaking one of the grips and has to be dropped. His teeth are keen, his jaws are strong, and he is quick to strike.

It was not without reason that Lonnie the janitor fled loudly and precipitantly from the room when he first caught sight of the creature staring at him from beneath a chair. It was the first time Lonnie had ever seen an alligator, and so swiftly did he leap through the door that, unable to stop or make the turn, he crashed into the wall across the corridor, much to the amazement of the several boys who happened to be in sight.

For some time Rudolph was fed by having a piece of raw beef forced down his throat at the end of a split stick, but after a while he manifested his outraged dignity by closing his gullet and refusing to swallow. Now the steak is left on the bank of the pool, and in the dark hours he crawls out for midnight lunch.

PAPERS PRESENTED BY HENDERSON AND WINSOR AT WEEKLY MATH SEMINAR



At the meeting of the mathematics seminar Wednesday afternoon Dr. Arthur Winsor completed a paper begun at the previous meeting and Dr. Archibald Henderson presented two new methods of solving the bi-quadratic equation.

Dr. Henderson presented in all three methods for solving this equation, one of them, a graphical solution, being that devised by Graustein of Harvard.

Dr. Henderson's methods were graphical and algebraic. The new graphic solution presented by him is much simpler than that of Graustein.

The paper completed by Dr. Winsor was "A Discussion of the Changes in Shape and Position of a Triangle Whose Vertices Move in Given Directions with the Same Velocities."

Life Of State Is Stimulated By University Research Work

(By R. W. Madry)

A summary of the research projects under way at the University, which has just been announced in a 115-page booklet issued by the University Press, shows that many of the faculty members and graduate students are engaged in digging up and ferreting out facts of value to the state and nation.

A number of these projects have been made possible through substantial grants from educational foundations.

The projects listed in this 115-page booklet, which is entitled "Research in Progress," shows that there is well nigh every sort of research in progress at the University. The projects are listed by departments.

The booklet answers a familiar query: What do University professors do besides teach? The answer is: they continue to study and learn—a process that goes under the name of research when it is carried on by trained and skilled workers.

Apparently there is no end to the variety of topics on which the research workers are busy collecting facts. The subjects range all the way from such high sounding topics as "The Thermophosphorescent - Radiations of Hiddenite and Kunzite" and "The Somatic Chronosomes of the Opussum" to such simple titles as "County Government and County Affairs in North Carolina" and "Public Poor Relief in North Carolina."

Last year, for example, one professor in the Chemistry Department studied a new program for the mercerization of cotton with sulfuric acid. Another, in the school of Commerce, made an economic analysis of the cotton textile industry and a study of the taxation of banks. In the School of Public Welfare, there were, among others, studies of welfare work in the North Carolina mill villages, of the North Carolina chain gangs, of North Carolina county government, and of labor unions in the South. Members of the faculty of the School of Education made inquiries into into a number of North Carolina counties. A member of the history faculty produced a new history of the state in two volumes. The flora of North Carolina was studied and investigated by a number of the botany staff. A member of the Law school faculty reported on recent developments in newspaper libel. A professor in the School of Engineering worked out a new process in dam construction, while another of his colleagues in the Geology department made a study of North Carolina foraminifera. The Department of Rural Social Economics made a number of studies in such topics as taxes, education, and county government. The list might go on and on. were there space, with examples drawn from the fields of such subjects as languages and literatures, mathematics, zoology, physics, geology, chemistry, psychology, sociology, pharmacy, history, medicine, and law, and so on.

Five Track Stars Chosen For Millrose Competition

Farmer, Gay, Barkley, Garrett, And Weil To Compose Relay Team.

GAY AND FARMER IN DASH

Annual Games To Be Held Tomorrow Night In Madison Square Garden In New York.

Final selection of the mile relay team to represent the University in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden Saturday night has been made and the team accompanied by Coach Fetzer will leave this afternoon at 4:00 o'clock for New York. Those making the trip are Charlie Farmer, Ken Gay, Minor Barkley, Dick Garrett, and Lionel Weil.

The relay team will be composed of Farmer, Barkley, Gay, and either Garrett or Weil, depending upon the condition of the two just before the meet. A fifth man is necessary because the nature of the event carries an obligation to compete, and the incapacity of one of a four man team would mar the event for the other relay teams.

It is probable that the order in which the men will run will be Gay first, Garrett or Weil second, Barkley third, and Farmer anchor. The team will have as opposition Rutgers, Lafayette, and the College of the City of New York. Charlie Farmer and Ken Gay are entered in the 50 yard handicap race, and will be opposed by some of the best sprinters in the country.

Captain Dave Nims will be unable to make the trip because of a cold from which he has not sufficiently recovered. His loss will be keenly felt as he usually runs the quarter around 52, and was showing up well before he contracted a cold. Other members of the team are in unusually good condition, considering the fact that the inclement weather for the past several days has interfered with the training program.

Country Club To Have Golf Match On Next Saturday

The golf committee of the Chapel Hill Country Golf Club will start a golf tournament, if the weather continues good and the course will permit, for the benefit of non-members of the town and the students. Any one may enter the tournament and contest for the prizes. If the weather permits the players will begin to tee off Saturday morning at 9 o'clock from tee No. 1 situated near the club house and play twelve holes or twice around the six-hole course. It is planned to start the players in foursomes, three non-members and one member of the club.

The requirements are that the play will be conducted according to the rules of the club with one exception, that the winter rule to improve the lie of the ball will be allowed, otherwise the rules on the score card will govern the play; each player must present a green's ticket to start, which can be bought at the Book Exchange, Students' Supply Store or at the club house. The varsity golf players will each be booked with a handicap, it will be based upon their average score by their coach and the tournament committee will, when the scores are turned in, add the handicap to their net score and the total will constitute the score. Otherwise it will be a non-handicap event.

The prizes to be offered are: 1st, Spaulding sweater (upon the condition that the winner uses a spaulding ball); 2nd, choice of a driver or Brassie; 3rd, one iron club; 4th, one dozen golf balls; 5th, golf stockings.

Leave your name at the Book Exchange if it is your intention to enter the tournament.

NO BATH WITHOUT BATH SALTS FOR ALICE WHITE

About the most embarrassing position imaginable for a bashful young girl would be to take a bath with a lot of men around.

Alice White lays no claim to being a blushing type. She did object strenuously, however, when she had to take a shower and bath for scenes in "Playing Around," her latest First National and Vitaphone picture, which opens today at the Carolina theatre. But it wasn't because men were watching!

Alice wouldn't crawl into the tub, even for a movie, without having bath salts in the water. So when the assistant director informed her the company was ready for the scene, she made him run out to the nearest drug store and buy her favorite brand of bath salts.

A film star's life is so much in the bright light of publicity that she doesn't mind taking a little shower in front of men on the set, according to Miss White.

However, Mervyn Leroy, the director, arranged the set so that only the "mike" could peek while some of Alice was hidden from the gaze of the camera by the shower bath curtain.

"Playing Around" is one of the blonde-haired, brown-eyed star's most sensational dramas. Miss White is seen as a "Sheba" type of girl who believes in having a good time with men until she finds the man she can love. Chester Morris and William Bakewell are the boy friends who have a prominent part in her life. The cast includes Richard Carlyle, Marion Byron, Maurice Black, Lionel Belmore, Shep Camp and others.

The story is an adaptation of Vina Delmar's "Sheba."

SIDELIGHTS

(Sports Editor)

WINTER FOOTBALL is now well under way with three games scratched from the winter's schedule. "Tennessee" and "Georgia" are at present leading the winter league with one win and one loss. Their defeat by "Tennessee" in the league's curtain raiser was a complete upset of the dope, but "Tech" recovered to defeat the "Virginia" eleven 18 to 0 in their next game. In the second game of the league Georgia downed Virginia 6 to 0 for their only win. The standings in the league follow:

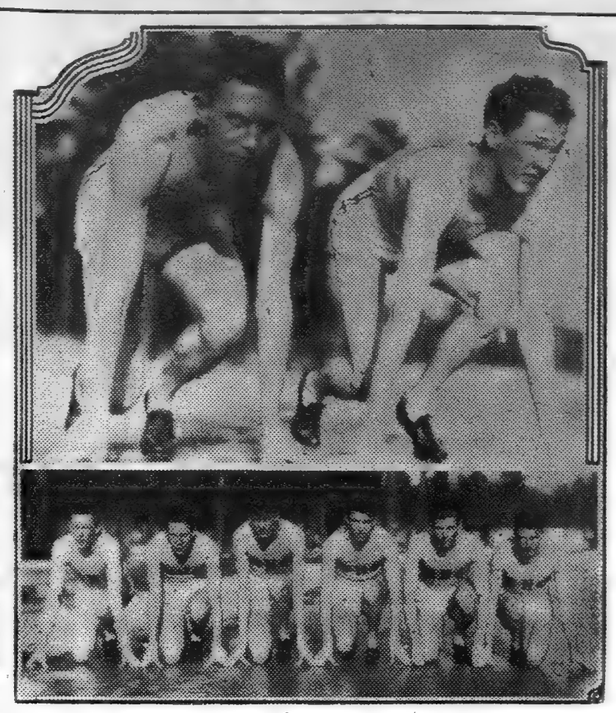
Tennessee	1	0	1.000
Georgia	1	0	1.000
Georgia Tech	1	1	.500
Virginia	0	2	.000

MANY OF THE SPORTS writers of the state have already begun sizing up the strength of the 1930 Tar Heels on the gridiron. Because of the conditions under which the first games were played, it is hard to choose correctly any stars. The first game was played in the snow, the second in snow-slush, and the last in snow-soup.

MANY LAST SEASON subs have been showing up well in the games played. Bob Blackwood, Ellis Fysal and Ellis Crew are the most outstanding guards that have seen action, while Parsley, Tabb and Nelson have been showing up well on the ends. June Underwood and Bill McDade have been the mainstays of their respective teams in tackle positions.

BOB BLACKWOOD, although ineligible last season, will probably be one of the strongest contenders for the guard position he held in 1928. He was one of the stalwarts of the Carolina forward wall of that year and much is expected of him in the 1930 season. Ellis Fysal, who played at guard opposite Captain Farris, has been one of the most outstanding linemen so far during the winter practice. Fysal was chosen by many for a position on the all-state eleven last season and missed by only a narrow margin receiving the student selection for that honor. Ellis Crew was Captain Farris' main substitute last year and his showing so far in winter practice makes him a strong bet for Captain Farris' old position. Parsley and Tabb have been the main reason for the small gains that have been made by that route in recent games, and Nelson has been showing his usual good form in that position. June Underwood was unable to play last season, but has been showing up well in the winter practice. He will probably be a strong contender for a tackle berth next season, along with Big Bill McDade, prominent freshman tackle.



THE TAR HEEL backfield has so many men that the 1930 edition of the Tar Heels will have little worry in that department. Captain-elect Nash, Magner, Slusser, Branch, Wyrick, Jackson, Houston, McAllister and House are a few of the backfield men left from former years, while McNeill, Chandler, Peacock and Lassiter are prominent freshmen.

Co-Eds To Play

The co-ed basketball team will travel to Fayetteville tonight to engage the Fayetteville high school girls on their own court.

There are more Methodists among the University students than any other denominationalists, totaling 684 in number.

To Enter Millrose Meet

Pictured above are speed demons of the University of North Carolina track squad who are to carry the Tar Heel colors in the famous Millrose A. C. Games at Madison Square Garden in New York Saturday, February 8.

Lower photo shows a sextet of the Tar Heel speedsters, four of whom will be selected to carry the Carolina colors in the select mile-relay of the Millrose Games. The relay team will race in competition with Lafayette, Rutgers, and New York City College teams.

BOXERS TO MEET VIRGINIA MITMEN TOMORROW NIGHT

Coach Rowe Takes Team To Charlottesville With Clean Slate For The Season.

The University boxers, victors by 5-2 over Duke on Tuesday night, are arduously training for another strenuous meet with Virginia at Charlottesville on Saturday night.

The Southern Conference championship Tar Heels have mowed down four opponents by scores of 5-2, 5-2, 4-3 and 5-2. In the third meet, with V. M. I., six substitutes were used.

Virginia, long the Tar Heels' toughest opponent for Southern honors, has another strong team this year. Carolina must pass this hurdle for another title.

The team showed great form in its unexpected 5-2 margin of victory over Duke. Minor colds were harassing several of the men, especially Evan Vaughan, bantamweight who sustained a knockout, but every man came through in fine style.

Noah Goodridge, Captain Archie Allen, Obie Davis and John Warren, Carolina's four regulars who fight the 135, 145, 160 and light heavy in order, continued their straight line of victories for the season.

Once more, Coach Crayton Rowe is hoping to put Carolina's best in the ring in the Virginia meet.

Sheffield, 125-pounder, Goodridge, Allen, Davis and Warren are practically certain of their posts. Vaughan, bantam, who was a great little fighter last year, has failed to live up to expectations this season, and a substitute may be seen at his post. Bill Koenig, heavyweight, who was slightly outpointed by a lighter, faster Duke man in the last meet, will probably get the call again.

In the school-year of 1878-1879 the percentage of North Carolina students at the University was 97.5 per cent. For the year 1928-1929 the percentage was 82.2 per cent.

There are more sons of farmers in attendance at the University than of followers of any other trade or profession.

NOTRE DAME TO RECEIVE ERSKINE GRIDIRON TROPHY AT CAGE GAME SATURDAY

South Bend, Ind., Feb. 6.—The Albert Russell Erskine Trophy, emblematic of the national football championship as determined by 250 sports writers, will be presented to Notre Dame, 1929 winner, at the Pittsburgh-Notre Dame basketball game in this city on Saturday night.

Avery Brundage, of Chicago, president of the Amateur Athletic Union and a member of the Erskine Award Committee, will make the presentation. Tom Lieb, assistant football coach at Notre Dame, will accept the trophy for the team due to the absence of Coach Rockne who is recuperating in Florida.

The Erskine Trophy, a silver cup beautifully engraved and standing approximately two feet in height, will remain in the possession of Notre Dame until early in 1931 when it will pass to the team selected as 1930 champion. In the event one school wins the title three consecutive years, the cup will become its permanent property.

In addition to the trophy, a Studebaker President Eight is awarded the coach of the team. Presentation of the car for 1929 championship honors was made to Rockne in Miami on January 18th.

tended the University of Georgia, and also Dartmouth. In 1922 he was appointed a Major in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Besides being prominent in the newspaper and magazine world, Mr. Cobb has won distinction for himself as an author of books. In 1922 he won the first prize for the O. Henry award for the best short story published in that year. As an author he has written many books. Some of his best are: "Some United States," "Ladies and Gentlemen," "Goin' on Fourteen," "Roughing It de Luxe," "Irvin Cobb at His Best," "Chivalry Peak," "All Aboard," "Speaking of Operations," "Cobb's Anatomy," and "Red Liquor." Besides all these he has written many magazine serial stories.

At present Mr. Cobb, probably the most distinguished short story writer in America, is a contributor to magazines and to the larger newspaper syndicates. He also holds the honorary degree of LL.D. It is hoped that a large number of students as well as townspeople and faculty members will seize the opportunity of hearing him tonight.

RESEARCH WORK IS DISCUSSED AT SIGMA XI MEETING

Members of Faculty and Visitors Present Outlines Of Studies Before Fraternity.

At the meeting of Sigma Xi, national research fraternity, held last Tuesday evening, brief outlines of research work were presented by two doctors from outside the University and by four members of the faculty of the school of medicine.

Dr. Davison of the school of medicine of Duke University, Dr. Carrington of Rainey hospital, Burlington, and Doctors MacNider, George, McPherson and Brooks of the University faculty told of their recent work.

Dr. Davison told of his work to determine whether Northerners are more susceptible to yellow fever than are Southerners. His conclusions were that Northerners are less susceptible to the disease, but that cases in North Carolina are less virulent than those further north.

Dr. Carrington described his recent research work in obstetrics and told of a case of bringing about the cure of a patient suffering from a ruptured diaphram.

Dr. MacNider explained his later research work on Bright's disease and chronic nephritis, in which he used dogs as experimental animals. He also told of studies made of pregnancy taxemias.

Dr. McPherson told of studies in pus-forming bacteria, the organisms of secondary infection.

Dr. George reported on research conducted with Mr. Brown and others conducted with Mr. Rose.

Dr. Brooks described studies made on the structure of cholesterol and argesterol and the relation of these to vitamin B. In addition to this he told of a recently published study of the protein consumption of medical students. This study was made simultaneously at Northwestern University, Tulane and the University of North Carolina, in an effort to determine whether temperature had any bearing on protein consumption. The results of this study showed that protein consumption was apparently not affected by temperature.

Fraternity Property Not in Tax Sale List

The town of Chapel Hill, according to John Foushee, city manager, will soon begin the sale of property upon which tax liens were levied in September, 1928.

The property involved in these liens for assessments and taxes amounted to $31,000 at the time of the lien. Much of this has been redeemed, however, by owners who have paid the penalty of 1 per cent per month provided by law for the first year, and 2-3 per cent for the next half year, after which time sale of the property must be completed, according to a new state statute.

There is no fraternity property involved in this amount, which indicates a good financial condition of local fraternities generally during this period. Ordinarily there are several pieces of real estate owned by fraternities upon which taxes are not paid on time.

DR. KNIGHT TO SPEAK TO SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

Professor Edgar W. Knight of the school of education left yesterday afternoon for Clarksburg, W. Va., where he will deliver two addresses before the West Virginia State Teachers' Association. Dr. Knight will return to Chapel Hill tomorrow.

Rabbi Wise Says Chapel Hill Bulwark Southern Liberalism

"We of the North think of Chapel Hill as one of the few bulwarks of southern liberalism—a reasoned liberalism, not a wild radicalism. I regret that so many of the faculty members were not present to face me," said Rabbi Wise, eminent publicist, lecturer, and founder of the Zionist Organization of America in an interview yesterday.

"We Northerners," he declared, "consider Chapel Hill the seat of one of the most significant universities in the nation and I am delighted to have been able to pay you a visit at last. I hope I shall again have an opportunity to visit Chapel Hill and the sunny south, which today is not so sunny."

Rabbi Wise's lecture at the Methodist church Tuesday night was on the subject of "My Vision of America." "My vision of America," he said, "is the vision of a foreign born American. Foreign, my friends, but not alien. You do not know how hurtful is the use of the word "alien." It is an indication of the dubiety, hostility and indifference with which the foreigner is treated. Foreigners are not 'things.' They are not cases to be solicitous over. You can't help a man by treating him as a problem.

"A man is not an American because he has touched the soil of America—nor because he was born there—but because the soul of America has touched him.

"My vision of America is the vision of a land wherein there shall be a reasoned conception of Truth."

Dr. Wise then related the incident of his conversation with a Boston blue-blood. "The man told me, with humble pride in his voice, that his great-grandfather had been a signer of the Declaration of Independence. So I answered that my great, great, great, great, great, great grandfather had written the Decalogue.

"The Bible, both the old and new testaments, except for one or two epistles, was written by a Jew. The Asiatic world lives on the fruits of the life work of my people. One of the greatest treasures of the spiritual world, the Shepherd's Psalm, was written by a Jew. One of my fathers found that written in his soul. Yet some people tell me that because I am a Jew I cannot become completely, wholly an American.

"Remember, my friends, that it is not safe to ask a man to change his faith. A Jew anchored in his faith is a potential asset to the republic, but a Jew who forsakes his spiritual and racial anchorage bodes no good to our spiritual life. Don't try to wean him and win him from his ancient moorings. If you would help the foreigner, Slav, Chezk, Teuton, Jew, Celt and all the rest, instead of trying to make him ashamed of being a foreigner, evoke from his spirit a noble and enriching loyalty.

"My vision of America is the vision of a land in which there shall be brotherly love toward one another."

The lecture was well attended by townspeople and students—a fitting tribute to his fame and an indication of the respect the world accords him.

Hillsboro Student Winner in Contest

Samuel Lockhart, representing the Hillsboro high school, was elected Wednesday afternoon to represent Orange county in the American Legion oratorical contest on the subject, "Our Flag." Raymond Andrews of Carrboro won second place.

The county elimination contest was given as a part of a public patriotic program at the Hillsboro school on Wednesday. Paul Robertson, commander of the local post, Owen Robertson of Hillsboro, and E. R. Rankin of the University extension division and county chairman of the contest, made up the board of judges.

To the winner a prize of $10 was given by the Chapel Hill post, and to runner-up an award of $5. In addition, Lockhart, by virtue of his victory, will be eligible for the district elimination contest to be held in Reidsville on February 14, for a prize of $25, a gift of Julian Price of Greensboro. The winner in the district competition will speak in the state finals. To the successful speaker in this contest a gold medal and a prize of $50 will be awarded.

Presbyterians To Organize Vestry

Life Of The State Is Stimulated By Research Work of The University

versity which have done most to establish a record that carries with it this national distinction is the Institute for Research in Social Science. Beginning in 1924 with a grant of $97,500 from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial to cover a period of three years, the Institute was successful enough to merit at the end of that period a second grant of $240,000 to be used over a period of five years. According to the terms of these grants, the Institute of more than a score of members is engaged in a specific program of regional social research, study, and interpretation. It now has on the press or ready for publication 22 volumes. Family problems, negro culture and development, North Carolina's railroad development, North Carolina social history, North Carolina's methods of handling criminals, county and municipal government, the changing attitude of the South toward women, Welfare Work in North Carolina mill villages, human factors in cotton culture, and labor unions in the South, are some of the studies on which its members are now engaged.

In the short space of eight years the University of North Carolina Press has attained a national reputation. This year's book-list for example carries such titles as "The Virginia Plutarch," "The Tree Named John," "The American Scholar," "Human Factors in Cotton Culture," "American and French Culture" and "Lectures on Egyptian Art." Naturally the stimulus of a press eager for manuscripts prepared for a discriminating group of readers is another powerful incentive to research.

Research Through Publications

Co-ordinate with the work of the press in giving to the outside world the results of the study and the laboratory workers are the official publications sponsored by special groups: "The Journal of the Elisha Mitchell Society," the publications of the North Carolina Historical Society, "The North Carolina Law Review," and "Studies in Philogy" all foster and spread information of interest to special readers.

Recently paid the high complement of being called "the leader in the new research movement in the South," the University has presented in this booklet what would seem to be conclusive evidence that the tribute was not unmerited.

If volume of research means anything, it would seem that Dr. F. A. Ogg, professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin—for it was he who paid the University the compliment, in a survey of American research he did for the American Council of Learned Societies—was well justified in his appraisal.

Or if quality of research be considered, a glance at the sort of projects being done would seem to be equally impressive.

Incidentally, the University is the only institution in the country that summarizes the results of its research through publication in this form. The material for the booklet is assembled by the Graduate school, of which Dr. James F. Royster is dean.

"By common agreement," Dr. Ogg said in his survey, which was published in a book entitled "Research Into the Humanities and Social Science," "the leadership in the new research movement in the South is traceable to one institution, and to certain men and women in it, namely the University of North Carolina."

"The explanation of this leadership," he goes on to say, "seems to lie in an unusually keen appreciation of the possibilities of service to the people of the state, in the presence of the faculty of many vigorous, ambitious, and productive scholars, and in the liberal support of research interests by administrative authorities, facilitated, no doubt, by the notable economic and industrial development which the state has of late experienced."

Further statistical evidence back of the high rating given the University by the American Council of Learned Societies may be drawn from the report of Dean Royster of the Graduate school. This report shows that the 224 graduate students enrolled last year came from 20 different states (9 of them above the Mason-Dixon line) and from 80 different colleges and universities. In 1919 there were only 40 graduate students enrolled in the University.

Grail To Present Candy To First Five Couples Dancing

Is Effort to Get Dances Started Earlier; Couples Must Arrive Before 9:30.

LAWYERS STAGE DANCE

Annual Affair Held in Bynum Gym Last Night; Many Girls On Hill for Week-end Social Events.

The Law school enjoyed one of the best dances of the season last night in the gym according to those attending that affair. Alex Mendenhall and his Tar Heel Boys provided excellent music.

Another dance will take place in the gymnasium tonight when the Grail starts at nine o'clock. This is the second dance given by the Grail this quarter and promises to be an enjoyable occasion.

In an effort to get the dance started earlier than are the average dances, the dance committee of the Order of the Grail has announced that the first five girls to arrive will each be given an attractive box of candy. However, this offer will not be in effect unless the first five girls arrive before nine-thirty o'clock. This is rather a unique offer and it is expected that the dance will begin on time.

Tickets will be placed on sale to those attending stag at eight-thirty. The price was recently raised to one dollar instead of the former price of seventy-five cents. Boys bringing a girl can secure their tickets at the door. Only a limited number of stags are admitted due to the limited floor space in the gym.

Due to the dance held last night and the dance fixed for tonight, quite a few girls are spending the week-end on the Hill. All of these are expected to be present at the dance tonight, and with the average supply of co-eds there should be a girl for everybody.

The dance will be under the supervision of the German Club executive committee, and those ladies invited to chaperone. Boys and girls are reminded of one of the rules which prevents any girl from coming back to the dance who leaves the gym while the dance is in progress.

Wardlaw to Broadcast

Jack Wardlaw's orchestra and the Carolina Banjo Boys will broadcast from WPTF in Raleight every Monday evening from 7:15 to 8 o'clock, featuring the Mebane Royal "King of Sleep" hour. The orchestra is known as the "Best for Rest Kingsdown Orchestra," and will present a different program each week. The banjo trio is composed of Jack Wardlaw, Carl Whitaker and Frank Zappa.

Wardlaw's orchestra was reorganized this quarter with the the following personnel: Brandol James, piano; W. A. Biggs, drums; George Lawson, bass; Jack Wardlaw, banjo; Frank Householder, first trumpet; Bill Jarman, second trumpet; Bill Stringfellow, saxophone; Bill Allsbrook, saxophone; Jesse Johnson, saxophone. The radio programs are under the supervision of Bill Abernathy.

Fraternity Notice

All pictures for the fraternity and dance sections of the Yackety Yack must be taken by February 15. Mr. Moulton will make no more individual pictures after that date.

Glee Club Wins

News was received last night just as the Tar Heel was going to press that the Carolina Glee Club won first place in the contest at Greenville, S. C. This will mean that the club will make the trip to New York for the National contest. Furman won second; Wofford third.

HIGHWAY BEAUTY SUBJECT OF MRS. LAWTON'S SPEECH

Chairman National Council of Roadside Protection Talks to Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs.

Mrs. W. L. Lawton, chairman of the national council for protection of roadside beauty, is visiting Chapel Hill on a survey for the National Nature Association. Mrs. Lawton is touring two southern states, North Carolina and Florida. Her stay here is being sponsored by the Chapel Hill Community Club and the Jefferson Davis Highway Committee of the U. D. C.

Mrs. Lawton gave an illustrated lecture Wednesday before the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs and members of the American Legion Post and the U. D. C. She outlined four points with which to achieve her aim of highway beauty. First she urged that the scars along the roadways be covered up by planting exposed shoulders and banks in grass and, second, that trees be replaced and planted. Thirdly, she suggested that one per cent of the state highway funds, to be matched by a federal fund, be used for roadside beauty. Fourth, she called on civic bodies to get together to beautify the approaches to cities and towns in the state.

Mrs. Lawton said that filling stations, hot dog stands and other unsightly structures should be pushed back from the roadside. Billboard advertising came in for condemnation, the speaker urging the restriction of billboards to commercial areas. She said that in traveling from Raleigh to Durham there was an advertising sign every seven and a half seconds. The speaker pleaded for roadside beauty for North Carolina largely as a drawing card for tourists, declaring that the tourist travel item ranked fourth in the state's industries, bringing in more money than the furniture and some other leading industries.

H. O. Hill Talks To Cain Society

"Flood Control of the Mississippi" was the subject of illustrated lecture delivered before the William Cain student branch of the A. S. C. E. Thursday evening by H. O. Hill, a senior in the school of engineering.

Mr. Hill first explained the immense size of the undertaking and then showed what efforts the Mississippi River Commission is making to prevent the recurrence of disastrous floods such as occurred in 1927.

The slides shown by Mr. Hill illustrated many phases of the work of the commission and showed the methods used in constructing the many miles of levees along the lower part of the Mississippi.

IRVIN S. COBB PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE HERE

Famous Humorist Praises North Carolina in Appearance Here Last Night.

SPEAKS IN GERRARD HALL

Before a large and apreciative audience which crowded Gerrard hall last night, Irvin S. Cobb, the inimitable wit and raconteur of the world and of Paducah, Kentucky, spoke and joked in the true Cobbian manner.

Dr. Collier Cobb, who was introduced by Ashby Penn, a student at the University and through whose kind offices this talk was arranged, presented the famous journalist and writer. In his short introduction, the head of the geology department referred to the creator of "Judge Priest" as "North Carolina's press agent." The opening remarks of Irvin S. Cobb's talk justified this appellation.

He characterized the Tar Heel country as the "moust outstanding state in the entire American commonwealth." With a certainty based upon his travels in this state more than twenty-five years ago, the internationally known war correspondent declared that "no state has made such rapid strides in progress during the last twenty years as has North Carolina."

Regaling the listeners with an excellent anecdote which served as a basis of comparison, he stated that any man who has not visited nor seen the Old North State can not claim to having seen America.

The two Cobbs who were upon the platform are distantly related. And the bigger one claimed a direct kinship with North Caroiina. He explained in detail how his great grandfathed departed these fair lands for more northern climes . . . . and how his ancestor was not forgotten. Indeed, as Irvin S. Cobb added, the sheriff of the county went after his paternal forbear in order to induce him to return to the land of his family.

Shortly after the beginning of the tale, the man after whom a great hotel in Paducah has been named, apologized for not having any set speech or lecture prepared. He said that it had been suggested to him that he narrate one of his most memorable experiences that occurred to him while acting as a war correspondent in the Great War. The story that he chose to tell was one that happened in the earliest days of the conflict; one in which he was a central figure but by no means "hero." Cold print can not reproduce the drama as effectively as it was told. The gestures, the facial expressions, the rise and fall of the voice, the aping of the accents of the German commandants and the many minute, but important characteristics that have made Irvin S. Cobb one of the most sought after speakers in the country would rob the story of its humor and pathos if they were not a part of the telling.

Before closing the short speech, Mr. Cobb gave a bit of advice to potential journalists and short story writers. He urged them to abide faithfully by all the academic laws and regulations for writing that are promulgated by teachers and

Knight Defends Extension Services In Current Issue Of Adult Education Journal

Under the title of "The Return of Hippodamus," Professor Edgar W. Knight of the School of Education, writes in the current issue of the Journal of Adult Education a defense of university extension activities. He traces the history of educational extension and points out the work of many conspicious figures in the movement from the days of Hippodamus to the present extension service of Columbia University and the University of North Carolina.

Universities now accept the principle that they owe very definite duties to the people of the state as well as the students in residence and put their resouces in as wide professional and public service as possible, the article states. But ever since the University of Chicago and the University of Wisconsin found that they could and should minister to more people than those who actually entered the campus, protests have been made against the university going afield. Some people look upon extension "not as a son of honor but as the issue of the university's misplaced confidence in a philandering state. They insist that extension is unauthorized and should be treated as alma mater's illegitimate offspring. Both in its origin and in its record for usefulness the idea of expert service to the state by university teachers and organized educational agencies has respectability not merely to mention but to brag about," the article says.

It tells of the work of Alcuin, "probably the most important educational expert in western Europe during the first half of the middle ages," who came over from York and took charge of Charlemagne's extension service. He awakened a desire for study, established and developed schools, gave attention to the copying and preservation of manuscripts, and to the enlargement and use of libraries. "Some of the monks were even enlivened a bit and lent a hand to advance the cause. Charlemagne himself improved his handwriting and learning enough about the moon to calculate Easter, and those who formerly had prayed badly because of incorrect books were now enabled to pray more properly. And any extension service that makes for livelier monks, better handwriting, and better prayers is not to be treated lightly."

The article points to the work of Abelard, premier dialectician, free-thinking author of a famous textbook, and skilful classroom teacher, and asks "But who can

President Ray Farris Asks Better Conduct On Exams

Says One Phase of Honor System Not Functioning As It Should.

GREEN NAMES COMMITTEE

Galland, Zealy, Graham and Wiley To Select Memorial for Graduating Class.

Due to the fact that the senior smoker held Thursday night continued to such a late hour, the Tar Heel found it impossible to devote more than a column to the affair. Several important matters discussed at the meeting had to be left out.

Red Greene appointed a committee of Harry Galland, chairman, Bob Zealy, Bob Graham and Fleming Wily to select a memorial to the University from the class of 1930.

Red Greene also announced that every class office and senior superlative have a snapshot made immediately for the Yackety Yack, and that the dance leaders have their pictures made in tuxedos for the same purpose.

Ray Farris, president of the student body, in his talk said that there was one phase of the honor system on the campus that was not functioning as it should. That phase he said is conduct on examinations.

"There is one objective to work for," said Farris, "and that is individual responsibility of every man to see that this part of the honor system is adhered to. I don't mean to say that you must turn up a man for cheating every time, but at least call him aside, tell him he has been seen cheating, and make him destroy his examination paper."

Farris further said that if the individual take the responsibility of the honor system, the Carolina code of honor would then be developed to the highest form possible.

POTTER TO READ O'CASEY'S PLAY

"Juno and Paycock" Will Be Given Sunday Evening at Playmaker Theatre by English Professor.

Russell Potter, of the English department, will give a reading of the Irish comedy, "Juno and the Paycock," by Sean O'Casey, at 8:30 Sunday evening at the Playmakers Theatre.

Sean O'Casey, author of this play, had no formal education, but secured what little he had on the streets of Dublin. Since his parents were nothing more than poor Dutch tenants as some of the characters in his play, he was forced to serve as a general day laborer for the greater part of his life. In 1913 O'Casey took part in the great labor strike in Ireland, and then three years later he was a soldier in the Citizens' army.

At the time that this play, "Juno and the Paycock," was first presented in 1924, he was a janitor in a working men's club. In this same year he received the Hawthornden Prize for the best work of imaginative literature.

The play itself gives a very vivid picture of the Irish Revolution movement, and keenly depicts Irish character. It was very unpopular with the Irish Republicans, because they thought that it rejected the Irish cause. Then, too, many of the ardent British sympathizers did not like it because they thought it pictured the Irish Revolution in too glorious colors.

Besides this play O'Casey has written, "Two Plays," "The Shadow of a Gunman," and "The Plough and the Stars."

PLAY-LIKERS TO PRESENT SECOND SHOWING TODAY

First Presentation Given Last Night At Playmakers Theatre Before Large Audience.

MATINEE AND NIGHT SHOW

The Play-likers, who presented their first showing of Martin Flavin's tragedy "Children of the Moon" before a large audience last night at the Playmakers Theatre, will give a matinee and evening showing again today. The matinee will be at 2:30 and the performance tonight at 8:30.

The cast for the play is the same as that appearing in the production given in Greensboro last fall. The parts are handled by actors and actresses who have had previous experience. Vera Buckingham, who plays the role of Laura Atherton, the selfish mother, has appeared in "Chanticleer," "The Cradle Song," "Polly With a Past" and "Dear Brutus."

Eloise Banning plays the role of Jane Atherton, the daughter whose engagement to a young aviator forms the basis of the plot.

James Hodge, who has the role of Major John Bannister, the aviator, has appeared many times in the Play-likers' productions.

Ruth Abbott, playing the part of Madame Atherton, Jane's grandmother, has taken part in several former productions. The old woman in "Will O' the Wisp" is her most outstanding work.

The role of Judge Atherton is played by W. R. Taylor, who, as director of the Play-likers, has won recognition not only for the productions of that group, but likewise for the roles he has played in their various performances.

A. T. West, who plays the part of Dr. Wetherell, is assistant director of the Play-likers, and is directing "Children of the Moon."

Others appearing in the production have played in other shows of the Play-likers.

This is the fourth number on the regular season program of the Carolina Playmakers.

DEBATERS PICKED FOR COMING MEETS

The regular weekly meeting of the varsity debate squad Thursday night took the form of a tryout on "Resolved, that modern science tends to destroy theistic faith." J. C. Williams, W. W. Speight, J. A. Wilkinson and M. B. Fleming-Jones were chosen to compose the two teams which will meet Emory and Georgia Tech at Atlanta late in the present month. Williams and Wilkinson will debate against Georgia Tech. Speight and Fleming-Jones will tackle Emory. The debates will be held on successive days—very probably February 26 and 27.

In both engagements the Carolina representatives will uphold the affirmative side of the question.

A THOUGHT A DAY

Personal experience is the basis of all real literature. — George Henry Lewes.

A New Approach To The Honor System Problem

The honor system has been discussed by college newspaper editors, student officers and faculty members until the subject has become trite. Most undergraduates settle back in their chairs with an air of hopeless resignation when speakers begin to talk about the honor system, and they pass over without even a cursory glance editorials and articles concerning it.

Reasons for the lack of student interest in discussions of the honor system are not difficult to ascertain. The frequency of these discussions is one contributing factor, but not the most important. In a very large majority of cases the theoretical virtues of the system are extolled, while the practical deficiencies in its operation are ignored. Even though an honor system may be entirely inoperative at an institution, the chances are that the student body president and the administrative officials will bestow fatuous praise upon it.

At the senior class smoker Thursday night President Ray Farris did something without precedent here—pointed out the ways in which the honor system is not functioning properly at the University and suggested methods for overcoming these deficiencies. Farris' brief talk will do more to improve the workings of the honor system here than all the high-sounding verbal bouquets which his predecessors in office have bestowed upon the honor system. As Farris pointed out, there is not much fault to be found with the theory of the University student government, but in operation it is woefully deficient in several respects. President Farris' frank admittance of existing conditions and his efforts to improve them will be of more real value than the insincere and hypocritical mouthings of countless generations of student body presidents.

A Problem For The Inter-Fraternity Council

Through the various college papers that come to the Daily Tar Heel office each day we have followed with keen interest the controversy over the question of fraternity initiations. In a great number of university papers we have found vigorous opposition to "hell-week," the period when the fraternities initiate their freshmen. At Penn State and Michigan State the Inter-fraternity council has taken steps to modify the old custom; the period of hazing has been shortened and all fraternity initiations have been placed under the control of the inter-fraternity council. While a move has been made in the right direction, the college papers insist that not enough has been done.

As our initiation period is not far off, we submit that it is high time the inter-fraternity council at Carolina did something toward the control of initiations and the abolition of this form of hazing. Under our state laws hazing is not permitted in the fall quarter in the dormitories, but no one seems to care anything about the hazing that goes on in the fraternity houses during the winter quarter and the initiation period of the spring quarter. Our initiation period usually lasts for two weeks or more. During this time the campus is annoyed night after night with the silly and prep schoolish stunts that all the fraternities impose upon their freshmen. The great majority of fraternity initiations end up with a trip into the country about eight or ten miles at midnight; the freshmen are left alone and forced to walk back.

The utter absurdity of fraternity initiations as now carried on is obvious to any one with ordinary intelligence. They are founded upon the theory that the freshman needs "taking down" and must be shown his rightful position before being admitted to the ranks of the "brothers." We do not believe that the fraternity initiation tends to increase a man's love for his fraternity, nor does it raise his esteem for his upperclass brothers. In many cases it has decreased the respect of the freshman for his fraternity.

Aside from any scruples one may have against initiations in general, there is no denying that present initiations are nothing but hazing and come under the laws of the state. Just why the law is not enforced during the spring quarter as well as the fall has not yet been explained.

We hope that the inter-fraternity council wil see fit to conduct an investigation into the initiation question and adopts a set of strict rules. It is a problem that needs supervision and modification. —J. D. McN.

Sock 'Em In The Face, Not In The Back

(H. J. G.)

Sportsmanship is a word much bandied about these days. It is commonly considered to refer to sports only, and in that connection these columns have been graced many times with editorials loudly demanding fair play for our athletic rivals when they appear in contests here.

But sportsmanship can and should go further. In particular it can and should apply to campus politics. At this stage of the political game, a good many weeks from the actual election, the fight has reached an almost unbelievable stage of heat. And the end is not yet in sight.

It is easy to brand a political opponent with epithets calculated to make his ancestors writhe in their graves, to set forth extravagant claims and promises, and to set out little dark hints so that they may grow and flourish in the doubtful sunlight of political gossip. All these things are possible, but they are not sportsmanlike.

Former President of the Student Body Hudgins last year made clear the fact that the Honor System as practised here on the campus of the University is designed, not merely to insure honesty during examinations, but the proper kind of gentlemanly conduct in all situations. Political campaigns come under this head. It is a matter of honor, both personal and party, and must be so recognized by the politicians.

Readers' Opinions

MR. McCORKLE OBJECTS

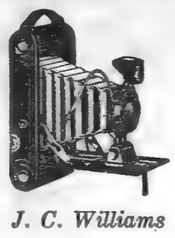
Editor Daily Tar Heel:

The University Band is the object of criticism by "An Alumnus" in today's paper, for an incident that occurred at the Duke basketball game last Saturday night.

For the past five years, the band has devoted seventy-five per cent of its time to cooperating with the Athletic Association in promotion of the athletic program, and it has frequently reaped criticism for its efforts. The organization does not rate itself among those which have attained perfection, and it needs and welcomes contsructive criticism. But we wonder sometimes if the critics are thoroughly conversant with all the circumstances.

On last Saturday night several members of the organization, including the Director, attended this game at a considerable neglect of business and social obligations. We notified the authorities that the band would be present, but when we arrived forty-five minutes before the varsity game, there was not a seat available for our use. The band members realized that the crowd was an unusual one, and when I offered an apology to them for the inconvenience to which they were subjected, they expressed a spirit that to me indicated their fine cooperation and sportsmanship.

Through the courtesy of some of the students who crowded themselves, about half of the band found seats. The other half sat on their cases or stood, and we played before the game and at the half.



The particular criticism is directed at our leaving five minutes before the game was over. The men seated in such a cramped position were further burdened with unwieldy instruments. Obviously it would have been impossible for them to remain unseated until the crowd was out, and equally obvious is the fact that in such a crowd the instruments might easily have been damaged. We have suffered considerable damage at some of the athletic events. And so the band left as a matter of protection, and I believe the implication of lack of proper spirit is a very unfair one.

With the same idea of fairness and cooperation with which "An Alumnus" attests his criticism, the band offers this explanation.

Campus Snapshot

Words of praise, though usually temporarily welcome, are not always lastingly so. But when a successful son of the University returns to the campus thirty years after the close of his student days and, speaking from the wealth of his experience, says that honesty and sincerity are the chief virtues of our alma mater, that the University of North Carolina is known in the field of higher learning as an institution whose student body emphasizes honesty even in the "little, trivial things"—then we can be justly proud of Old Carolina. Such was the opinion which J. C. B. Ehringhaus voiced at the senior smoker Thursday night as he complimented the school of our choice time and again.

The right honorable Di Senate has again jumped into the limelight of North Carolina politics. Meeting in solemn session a few nights ago, the local senators went on record as favoring almost unanimously the re-election of Senator Simmons to the United States Senate, in opposition to Josiah W. Bailey. 'Tis rumored that the local senate has appointed a committee to journey up to Washington and congratulate the present senior senator upon the very obvious certainty of his being restored to office upon the expiration of his present term (the campus senators said he'd be re-elected, didn't they?). As a side issue, we suggest that the committee might do well to garner a few points on parliamentary procedure while sojourning in the Capitol City.

They're still pulling that old one in the Phi Assembly:

Speaker: "I have a man in mind—"

Funnyman: "Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege. The gentleman is occupying rather cramped quarters. Your attention is called to this grievance."

We hated to call attention to this, but as a newspaper man it is our business to record the facts just as they occur.

We note with rolled-up sleeves the temporary advent of warm weather and with high glee the temporary (we hope, permanent) abandonment of galoshes!

We take occasion to congatulate a current newspaper (nameless here for sane reasons) which advertises thus: "A newspaper for people who think," and then really lives up to its slogan by printing such stuff that the gentle reader needs must think hard and fervently to separate the meat from the rubbish in its columns.

The mild recreation of swimming received a gentle jolt the other day from one of our neighbor parsons, much to our own personal mortification and displeasure. It seems that several of his lady parishioners wished to take diving lessons in a local swimming pool. The sky pilot however, deemed the occasion ill-chosen, as several husky men were engaging in the time-honored art of acquatic motivation at the time.

None the less, the mer-ladies entered the pool innocently and without apparent trepidation. Nothing happened until the following Sunday—at which time they were promptly and without ceremony ousted from the House of God.

My word! Can we not find innocent comradeship in man-woman associations, whether the location be a church pew or something else? Of course, there's a good point in the parson's argument. We cite here as a moral to be gleaned from this narration: men and women should not be allowed to sit in the same church pews any more than gentlemen and lady fishes should be allowed to swim in the same pool. It is very dangerous, they tell us!

Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their campus. POLITICS! POLITICS! POLITICS!

Sartorial Sway

By
Beau Gent

It is debatable whether or not the tuxedo will pass on to the limbo of forgotten fashions, for the simple reason that the incoming tail coat is too severe for the less formal dinners or occasions. But it would be well to notice the flood of tail coats all over the country before you decide that you are going to buy a new tuxedo. The point in question deserves some elucidation.

Some time ago the exclusive circles of London society decided that something should be done in regard to the encroachment upon their cherished heritages of dress, by the hoi polloi. They concluded that the plebians could not well afford to spend money on tail coats and discard their tuxedos. Therefore, they heralded the entrance of the tail coat in place of the ordinary dinner jacket, to demonstrate their superiority and individuality. They were dumbfounded by the subsequent popularity of their vaunted mark of distinction.

The tail coat became "the thing" and came to stay. The Beau Brummels of America have rushed into the already swollen ranks of the tail coaters and it predominates at every campus affair but the ones on our campus—or so it seems. At most of the college dances and at all of the fashionable affairs the wearer of the dinner jacket has become a very, very "rara avis."

The tail coat should be made with square shoulders, should fit snugly at the waist, and should cut in at, and then flow gracefully below the waist line. The lapels should not be particularly shiny.

The backless waistcoat was introduced to mitigate the stiffness of the formal evening turnout with its wing collar and starched-front shirt. The notion has proved so rational that this sort of waistcoat is now assumed with both formal and semi-formal day wear.

It is of linen or drill, cut double-breasted with three buttons and broad, curved, peaked lapels. The waistcoat fastens with strap and buckle at the rear and may be loosened as one's midriff or one's exigencies may dictate. Since the watch chain is passe, there is nothing to mar the white expanse of shirt-front and waistcoat.

Breast pocket handkerchief should be on white silk or linen with a narrow black border. Designs on handkrechiefs and evening scarves have passed out of the picture. The plain white reefer scarf models are receiving the call this season.

* * *

The top hat has also been accepted by those "in the know" and more and more of them are being worn throughout the south and east. The college men have gone after it in a big way; only the very sedate man wears a derby in the evening.

* * *

Socks for evening wear should be of black silk, preferably unadorned, but a faint, narrow clock, or open work, is permissable.

Evening topcoats have remained the same except for the recent inception of the Iverness cape, which will be reviewed later on. The camel's hair model in black or navy blue is seen more often, but the general trend is toward the more severe Chesterfield with plain or velvet collar.

Since it is agreed that the dinner jacket will never entirely disappear, the smart men are wearing a white waistcoat instead of the black. The correct white waistcoat is single breasted, with three butons, a peaked lapel, and a V-front opening. It is a backless English model in honeycomb pique usually.

* * *

The usual accessories will the formal outfit are grey mocha gloves, plain white jacquard muffler with wide satin striped border, and a very "Man about Townish" ebony stick with ivory or gold top.

* * *

For the south, there is the new double breasted dinner jacket, which comes full, with sort of flat tucks at the waist of the trousers. This jacket dispenses with the need for a waistcoat and, since it is therefore so much cooler, should be a favorite with southern college men.

Some of the better shops in Durham are displaying a new line of tab shirts that will interest those of you who have experienced their comfort and noticed their swank. If you contemplate re-stocking with shirts, I advise that you investigate this new line of goods. It would be well to bear in mind that finer stripes in shirts is the prevailing mode.

* * *

We find that Carolina retains its prized individuality in that it remains in favor of belts while the rest of the country sways suspender-ward. Suspenders give an easy, flowing grace to the fall of pensile trousers: greater comfort; and eliminate the bumps and bulges that are formed by the use of belts. Ask the man who uses them.

* * *

The latest in formal wear is the backless waistcoat of linen or drill, cut double-breasted with three buttons and broad, curved, peaked lapels. This waistcoat, of course, fastens with straps and buckles by which is may be loosened as one's midriff or one's exigencies may dictate.

Tar Heels Will Send Four Undefeated Pugs Against Virginia Boxers Tonight

Allen, Goodridge, Davis and Warren Have Scored Victories In All Meets This Season.

BOX IN CHARLOTTESVILLE

The Carolina-Virginia boxing meet in Charlottesville tonight, which will have an important bearing on Southern Conference titular chances, recalls an interesting tale of the warmest boxing rivalry in the south.

The Cavalier boxing team had ruled the south for four years when the first Tar Heel boxing team appeared on the southern horizon in the winter of 1925. Crayton Rowe was coach, then and now. "K. O." Warren and "Ox" Shuford, later to be in the limelight conspicuously, were the big Tar Heel siege guns. The team could schedule but two matches, and the first resulted in a 5-2 loss to Virginia.

Came another season, and, with a flock of veterans back, the Tar Heel worm turned and Virginia was repulsed by 5-2, the same margin as the year before, but turned around this time.

Only twice in six years of boxing had the Cavaliers lost a meet, and this was the first time they had ever dropped one in the south. Colgate and Penn State, national champions of 1924 and 1926, were the only teams that could boast Virginia's scalp.

The Tar Heels were naturally proud. A great season followed in which the Carolinians won every meet. But Virginia turned the tables, and, juggling its lineup and taking off weight to push several men down a class apiece, won the first conference tournament by a narrow margin from the Tar Heels.

The Tar Heels, in turn, nosed Virginia out for a victory in the second tournament in 1928, White, Brown and Shuford emerging as southern champions in their weights. The Virginians were principal mourners, because they were runners-up, and because the Tar Heels, with one exception, met and defeated men who had previously beated them in dual meets.

The Tar Heels kept this newly-won supremacy in the third tournament in 1929, in which Florida was second, so the conference title has never passed from one of the two teams.

Noah Goodridge and Captain Archie Allen, flashy 135 and 145-pounders, and Obie Davis and John Warren, clever, hard-hitting 160 and 175 pounders, make up the quartet of undefeated Tar Heel boxers.

Allen has fought in all four of the Tar Heels' meets this season. The other boys have battled three matches apiece. All are undefeated and strong contenders for individual southern conference titles in the annual tournament.

Goodridge, Allen, Davis and Warren are practically certain of their posts. So also Harry Sheffield, clever, hard-hitting 125-pounder, who has won every match but a close decision to Washington and Lee's featherweight in the opening meet.

A substitute may appear in Evan Vaughan's bantam post. Vaughan was, last season, one of the hardest-hitting bantams ever seen here. This year he has never seemed to hit his stride, and has been knockd out twice. Koenig, football star, will probably appear in the heavyweight role again. Koenig is showing much promise although outpointed in a close match to Duke.

TRACK STARS TO COMPETE IN BIG COMPANY TONIGHT

Relay Quartet Arrive in New York This Morning for Annual Millrose Games.

CAPTAIN NIMS IS ABSENT

A team of five Tar Heel speedsters, headed by Director of Athletics R. A. Fetzer, but minus the services of Captain Dave Nims left yesterday at noon for the classic Millrose Games in New York City.

Minor Barkley, Dick Garrett and Ken Gay, lettermen, and Charlie Farmer and Lionel Weil, sophomore sprint stars, made up the quintet.

From this number will be picked the four who will carry Tar Heel colors in the select mile-relay of the Millrose Games on Saturday. Lafayette, Rutgers and New York City College will furnish the opposition.

Track Captain Dave Nims was the missing man. Nims is out due to sinus and did not make the trip. The blow was a hard one to Tar Heel hopes, for Nims is the Tar Heels' fastest quarter-miler.

The team arrives in New York this morning, in time for a light workout, before the big race.

Besides participating in the mile-relay. Farmer is slated to take part in the sprint events.

The Millrose meet is one of the outstanding indoor events on the nation's track program, and is drawing a galaxy of stars of national and international fame.

Newcomers at Millrose will include Bob King, Olympic high jump champ; Cy Leland, Texas Christian University, sprinter and halfback, who holds the national junior 100-yard title; Leigh Miller, Canada's "nine-three" sprinter; Bert Nelson, Butler, national junior half-mile champ; and Orval Martin, Purdue, Western Conference mile and a half champion.

Among the old favorites who will compete again will be Ray Conger, Bernie McCafferty, Phil Edwards, Fred Sturby, Chet Bowman, Harold Cutbill, and others. Jack Elder, Notre Dame's sprinting halfback, will invade the Garden for the sprints, and Dr. Paul Martin, 12 years middle distance king of Switzerland. Ray Barbuti, Olympic 400 meter champion, will be another luminary.

Tar Heels Bidding For Boxing Title

Recent dispatches by the Associated Press stated that boxing in the southern conference bidding for a major position this year. It stated further:

"More than half of the twenty-three schools of the conference are waging active pre-tournament campaigns this winter, in comparison with the half dozen or so of previous years.

"With so many strong squads in the field, it appears that the North Carolina leather-pushers, conference champions for the past two years will find much stouter competition in their quest of a third successive title this year.

"Boxing gained its first foothold in the Dixie circuit four years ago when the conference moguls sanctioned the establishment of an annual tournament at the University of Virginia.

"Each year's meet since that time has found a larger number

Athletic contests taking place today and tonight have an important bearing on the sports situation in North Carolina. The outcome of the State-Duke game in Raleigh tonight will be a deciding factor in the Big Five basketball race. Although the Red Terrors have already bowed to both Carolina and Duke, they still loom as a formidable obstacle to the march of the Blue Devils toward the state title. Victories over Maryland, whom Duke was barely able to best with a one-point advantage, Virginia, and the hitherto unconquered Georgia Bull Dogs last week brings State out as a prominent contender for conference honors as well as state prestige. A repetition of last year's tournament performance would not be entirely out of the range of possibility.

Carolina plays a three-fold part in the sports activities of the day. With the possibility of a forfeiture of Evan Vaughan's bout, the boxing meet at Charlottesville assumes the nature of a decided menace to the title aspirations of the Tar Heels. The Cavaliers are tough antagonists in the ring at any time, and if Vaughan is unable to participate tonight and a more capable substitute than has as yet been found is not put in, the remainder of the mit squad will have to stretch itself to win.

The second part played by the Tar Heels tonight will be the wrestling tilt with the Princeton Tigers at Princeton. The matmen have split even in their two meets this season. After dropping the first to Navy, the Tar Heels turned in a 17 to 11 win over the V. P. I. Gobblers last week.

Perhaps the Tar Heel participation in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden is of the most signfiicance to followers of sports in this state. Regardless of the outcome of the events taking place there, the opportunity of competing with such internationally known athletes as Bob King, Leigh Miller, Ray Conger, Chet Bowman, Jack Elder and others carries a certain measure of distinction, and the fact that Carolina was invited to compete in these contests shows that the track accomplishments of the Tar Heels have gained some recognition outside this state.

The Clemson Tigers have run up against a tough streak of luck in the form of a meningitis epidemic. After a death from that disease this week the South Carolina health officer put the college under quarantine and the colllege authorities were forced to cancel all athletic engagements for the immediate future. The Tigers have played more basketball games this season than any other conference team and a few days of rest will probably be well received by them.

Davidson has been stepping out on the court lately. Some of the latest victims of the Wildcats have been V. M. I., whom the Cats licked 35 to 27 Wednesday night, and Roanoke, who fell before them Thursday 49 to 16. The Cats are slated to tie up with the Blue Devils at Charlotte Monday, and our prediction is that the Devils will be lucky if they come out of the scrap without a few claw marks. Pritchett, Johnson, Rusk and others have been tossing them in all around their opponents, the Tar Heels not excepted.

Two Undefeated Teams Clash In Kenan Stadium

"Georgia" and "Tennessee" Meet At 3 O'clock This Afternoon In Fourth Game of Winter Schedule.

STAR BACKS TO PERFORM

Nash, Branch and House Will Play for Georgia Eleven; Quartet of Reserves To Work For Volunteers.

The stage is set for a grid-iron battle of varsity proportions when the "Georgia" and "Tennessee" teams clash in Kenan Stadium today at 3 o'clock in the fourth game of the Tar Heels' winter practice schedule.

Both teams are undefeated, and today's game will show which is to ascend to leadership of the four-team league. University athletic authorities are expecting a large crowd.

Strud Nash, Tar Heel captain-elect for 1930, will head a stellar backfield contingent for "Georgia" that includes two other varsity stars of last year —Quarterback Johnny Branch and Fullback Henry House.

"Tennessee" will pin its faith for ball-carrying on Moore, reserve quarterback, and McAlister, reserve fullback; and Chandler and Daniels, two of the best freshman backs last season.

This quartet employed an aerial attack, Chandler to Moore, that turned back the "Georgia Tech" squad 6-0 in the opening game of the winter schedule.

Fullback House drove the ball over "Virginia's" line for a 6-0 victory in "Georgia's" only preceding battle. Nash, Branch and House all distinguished themselves in that game.

Line strength appears to be evenly divided between the two teams, and prospects are for another well-played game, such as the first three games have been.

Grapplers Will Meet Princeton Wrestlers This Afternoon At 3

Led by Captain Wayne Woodard, the Tar Heel varsity grapplers left Chapel Hill yesterday afternoon to take a trip to Princeton, N. J., to take on the strong Princeton aggregation this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Tryouts were held Thursday to help Coach Chuck Quinlan pick the men to wrestle. In the 115-pound division, Bell won over Usher by a fall in 7 minutes, 6 seconds. Captain Woodard won over Albright with a time advantage of 9:46 in the 135-pound division while Tsumas won a time advantage over Riddick in 8:26 in the 145-pound class. In the 155-pound division, Moore won a time advantage over Parks in 8:20, and later defeated Taylor in the same way in 8:15.

The complete lineup will show Bell, 115 pounds; Stallings, 125 pounds; Captain Woodard, 135 pounds; Tsumas, 145 pounds; Moore, 155 pounds; Cowper, 165 pounds; Ferguson, 175 pounds; Houghton, unlimited.

TEAM WINS AND LOSES ON TRIP

Defeats V. P. I. 30-21 But Drops Close One to Generals 39-24.

With two of four conference games scheduled with Virginia schools already played, the Tar Heels Friday had a .500 average, the result of the Virginia game last night not being reported when the Tar Heel went to press. In their first encounter Wednesday the Tar Heels defeated the V. P. I. quint 30-21, but lost their second game to the Washington and Lee Generals Thursday night, 39-24.

In the V. P. I. game Wednesday night, the Tar Heels showed a complete reversal of form, playing a snappy floor game and shooting with unerring accuracy. Especially was their play good in the first half when they rolled up 26 points, while the excellent defensive work of Marpet and Alexander kept the Gobbler scoring to only 6 points.

In the second half the Tech quint came back with strong determination to win the game, and not until Coach Ashmore yanked a few of his subs in favor of veterans was the attack stilled.

Dameron and Green led the Tar Heel attack, the former scoring 8 points and the latter 6. Harper played a good game at center but was removed late in the game.

of teams entered and this year's tournament to be held in the Virginia punch-bowl at Charlottesville, on March 7 and 8 promises to list a dozen or more entries.

"The Virginia and North Carolina schools set the growing pace for the other league members and have had teams for several years. Florida entered the tournament three years ago and other colleges have followed during the past two seasons.

"Tulane and Florida loom this year as Carolina's most dangerous rivals. The New Orleans mittmen have three matches holding decisions over Louisiana State, Clemson and Georgia.

"The Gainesville Alligators, runners-up last season, opened their 1930 campaign this week with victories over Virginia and Washington and Lee on successive nights.

"The champion Tar Heels pounded out their fourth loop triumph recently against Duke, winning 5 to 2. Previously the Carolina boys had whipped Virginia Polytechnic Institute 5-2; Washington and Lee 5-2, and Virginia Military Institute 4-3.

"Coach Crayton Rowe has six veterans back from last year's titular squad and several newcomers who have shown up so well that they have been given first string berths ahead of the older team members.

"Captain Archie Allen, welterweight champion; Noah Goodridge, lightweight and John Warren, light heavyweight, are the big shots of the squad.

"The Tar Heels fought their way to the title last year without a heavyweight, but this season Coach Rowe has a fine prospect in Bill Koenig, football tackle, who has gone well in his early bouts.

"Other teams campaigning in fistic circles and expected to enter the tourney include Virginia Military Institute, Duke, South Carolina, Washington and Lee, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Georgia, Virginia, Clemson, Louisiana State and Mississippi A. and M."

Substitutions for Carolina: Green (6), Alexander (3), and Brown (2).

The Washington and Lee Generals scored a second defeat over the Tar Heels this year in the game Thursday night when the Southern Conference leaders administered a 39-24 defeat to the Carolina quint.

The first half of this game was rather slow, midpoint finding the score 16 to 11 in the Generals' favor. In the second half, however, Cox, star W. and L. forward, hit his stride and at the end of the half had rung up 11 of the 23 points scored by his team in this period. While the Generals were on this rampage the Tar Heels could garner only 13 points.

Johnny Green, diminutive Carolina forward, was high scorer for the evening, chalking up 14 points. His play during the second half was equalled only by Cox's exhibition. Williams, lanky Washington and Lee center, kept Harper well covered, while scoring three goals and four charity shots himself.

Tonight the Tar Heels take on the strong University of Maryland team at Baltimore. Both Duke and N. C. State have defeated the Old Liners this season but by only the scantiest of margins.

The team will entrain from Baltimore early Sunday arriving here sometime Sunday afternoon.

Writer - Combine Is New Moviedom Team

Hollywood has had its comedy teams, its actor-director teams, its sweetheart teams. But now it has an entirely new kind of team—the writer team, more particularly the William Slavens McNutt-Grover Jones team. This pair have recently completed work on three of Paramount's outstanding hits of the season, George Bancroft's "The Mighty"; Nancy Carroll's "Dangerous Paradise," and Richard Arlen's "Burning Up."

McNutt and Jones occupy an office at Paramount's Hollywood studios. It has been converted into a miniature newspaper city room with McNutt as the star reporter and Jones as the driving city editor. They "cuss and discuss" their stories for days before they begin to put them on paper. When they are thoroughly saturated with the plot and have every situation worked out, they enter their office and lock the door.

Their latest joint work, Richard Arlen's starring picture, "Burning Up," will show at the Carolina theatre today. Mary Brian has the leading feminine role, and four popular character men are in the cast.

text-books. But, he added, the man who will never learn to write according to rule and regulation is just as foolish as the individual who will never break the laws when circumstances demand such action.

After this hint, two questions were asked by members of the audience. One questioner wanted to know what future there was in the "writing trade." Mr. Cobb replied that there is always a future for those who are exceptional and that the newspapers of today afforded young men and women more opportunities than ever before. The second and last questioner sought an answer to "how does one learn to write?" The simple reply was "write." Mr. Cobb, at an earlier time had declared that it was his observation that writers were made, not born.

Thanking his audience for their presence, "North America's greatest humorist" concluded his address amidst great applause.

Knight Defends Service By Extension Work In Journal Of Education

deny that the fame with which his name has come down the centuries rests chiefly upon the fact that Abelard found time for extra-campus activities?"

The reader is given a glimpse of the work of Philipp Melanchthon, professor of Greek in the University of Wittenberg, one of the most eminent and popular university teachers in his country and generation. "But he was not content to spend all of his time chasing a digamma to its lair or exposing the infamies of gerundives, as important as such activities were. Melanchthon extended. He took the bushel off his candle. He found time also to prepare numerous useful textbooks and "school plans for at least five German cities and for three German States—a record in university extension nearly four hundred years ago which is not often exceeded even in recent times and under the most mountainous waves of enthusiasm for service to the state."

The article points out how Benjamin Franklin proposed for the College of Philadelphia and Thomas Jefferson for the University of Virginia educational programs "which did not exclude those who daily wrestled with realities. It is no reproach to Franklin and Jefferson if their educational views and plans were obscured and forced for the time into the background by traditions, bigotry, and denominationalism. But if these two democratic humanists could have had their educational way unimpeded, what Hippodamuses they would have collected at Philadelphia and Charlottesville!"

The article describes the extra-campus activities of professors at Columbia University and the University of North Carolina last year. These activities of university professors "represent one of the most important movements if not indeed the most important single movement in American education at this time," Knight says. "University extension has achieved, is now achieving, and fresh vitalities will continue to issue from it. Unworthy is the criticism that it is promoted primarily as a means of protective popularity for the institution or that it is a disdainful distribution of bits of learning to the yokels who live beyond the campus. No longer is there defense for the college professor who enjoys supinely the benefactions of philanthropy or of public taxation. He cannot fully absolve his conscience by that which he does only in the lecture room, however, brilliant his teaching may be. He and his educational institution are obligated to furnish professional and public service wherever it is needed.

"For these reasons university extension service deserves a better place in its own right than that which it now holds on sufferance or by courtesy. That part of it which is commonly known as adult education is widely liberating influence. Some of it is doubtless ineffective, but in much of it there are realities that are not now found and perhaps can never be present in a great deal of the instruction that is given on the campus of any institution which admits every youth who desires to enter. The great Gamaliels of the past instructed adults. The disciples of Socrates were for the most part grown-ups, as were those who sat at the feet of the great Stoic philosophers and of Abelard; and Jesus was never superintendent of the cradleroll department in any village of Galilee.

"Now that Thorndike and other scientists find that adults can go on learning if the opportunity is afforded them, the need for Hippodamus is greater than ever before in the past. It begins to look as if he has returned to stay. Of course Aristotle will continue to hang around also and to thumb his nose and poke fun at the expert's garments. That bright boy of The Academy would, while Hippodamus goes up and down the state beautifying towns, building roads, analyzing drinking water, eradicating mosquitoes and malaria, improving sewer systems, encouraging the establishment of libraries, equalizing tax burdens, improving county government, advising in the interest of better schools, improved workmen's compensation and child labor legislation, and better election laws."

DR. MURCHISON TO ADDRESS THE TAYLOR SOCIETY

"Management Problems Of The Textile Industry" Will Be Subject Of Talk.

Doctor C. T. Murchison, professor of economics and an authority on the subject of the present situation in the textile industry, will speak on the subject "Management Problems of the Textile Industry" before the University branch of the Taylor Society at its regular weekly meeting Tuesday evening.

Doctor Murchison is to be the third of a series of faculty speakers who are delivering addresses on subjects related to business management before the University branch of the Taylor Society.

Doctor Murchison is a recognized authortiy on the subject of the present depression in the condition of textiles, and last week Bernard Cone, head of the Cone Textile Mills in Greensboro, referred to an article by Doctor Murchison as a true account of present conditions.

The January issue of The Virginia Quarterly has an article in it written by Dr. Murchison in which he shows that snarls in the organization of the textile industry are behind the cotton mill strikes and that an integration of the industry is necessary before either mill owners or workers can profit. This article was chosen by a council of librarians as one of the ten best articles appearing in periodicals during January.

Extension Division Conducting Graduate Course In Dentistry

The 1930 post-graduate course in dentistry, under the auspices of the University extension division in cooperation with the North Carolina Dental Society, was organized last week with an enrollment approaching 125. Six cities have been selected as class centers for the course: Greenville, Raleigh, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Asheville.

During the course a series of six subjects will be taken up, to be taught by several dental specialists. Classes will be held once each month. Conducted on his tour by Mr. Grumman, head of the extension division, Dr. R. S. Simpson of Richmond visited each of the towns recently, lecturing on the subject, "Practical Dentistry." In spite of the inclement weather, Mr. Grumman stated that the classes were very well attended.

The instructor for the next series of classes will be Dr. Charles W. Freeman of the Northwestern University school of dentistry. He will speak on "A New Anaesthetic," through the week of February 17. Topics for the ensuing months have been selected: "Psychology," "Radiography," "Dental Economics," and "Gold Inlay Technique." As yet no announcement has been made concerning the men who will teach these subjects.

Arrangements for the course were made under the direction of an extension course committee of the dental society, composed of Drs. J. M. Johnson, E. B. Howle, Dennis Keel, Arthur Fleming and L. M. Edwards. Mr. Grumman is the University's representative in the work.

Play-Likers Production Pleases Large Audience

"Children Of The Moon" Presented By N. C. C. W. At Playmakers Theatre.

GIVE 3 PERFORMANCES

After Slow Start In First Act Presentation Of Martin Flavin's Tragedy Goes Over Big With Audience.

(By Robert Hodges)

The third and final performance of Martin Flavin's tragedy "Children of the Moon" as presented by the Play-Likers of the North Carolina College for Women was given at 8:30 last night in the Playmaker theatre.

The cast appearing is the same that was in the production when given last fall in Greensboro. All of the parts were filled by members of the organization who have received experience in previous productions.

Miss Vera Buckingham as the high handed mother was the best performer among the three women in the cast. Her role was played with the sincerity of polished experience; there was no awkwardness. Her voice did not betray her age as it did in the case of Miss Ruth Abbott's portrayal of Madam Atherton, the kindly grandmother whose actions were futile against the impending tragedy. Miss Abbott's work improved in the second and third acts; possibly the change of apparel at the last created a more distinct impression of her grandmotherliness. Miss Eloise Banning gave a favorable characterization of the unfortunate heroine, Jane Atherton, but her portrayal was not as sincere as Miss Buckingham's picture of the mother.

The male members of the cast all performed excellently. Their work was smooth, and they played their parts with a sincerity that was obvious. Mr. James Hoge carried the role of the hero, Major John Bannister, very well on his competent shoulders, as did also A. T. West as Dr. Wetherell, the kindly and understanding family physician. W. R. Taylor succeeded in creating the illusion of madness in that crack brained old caricature of a once brilliant man, Judge Atherton. The work of H. G. Mitchell in the minor role of Walter Higgs, the Major's mechanic, deserves praise, and A. Stacey Gifford as the servant, Thomas, should be accorded special recognition. He fell into the role of the old, rheumatic ex-sailor perfectly, and his acting deserves credit.

Mention should also be made of the sound effects produced behind stage. They were all realistic: the surf washing and beating against the shore, the sound of the airplane and automobile motors, the explosion occurring at the end.

On the whole the presentation of the drama received favorable comment, and its production reflected credit on the N. C. C. W. dramatic organization.

No Chapel Monday

Dean Bradshaw announces that there will be no chapel on Monday, contrary to the statement made in Friday's Tar Heel. Chapel will be held on Tuesday.

A Case Of Mumps

Miss Celeste Egerton is now in the infirmary with a case of mumps. The ordinary symptons of this desease are swellings of the glands about the neck. If anyone has such swellings, he or she is advised to immediately report to the infirmary.

HAROLD MEYER TO ADDRESS Y GROUP

H. D. Meyer, of the Sociology department, will speak tomorrow night to the Freshmen cabinet at the Y at 7:15. The subject of his address will probably be something pertaining to "Success." At the last meeting Parson Moss spoke to the cabinet on the value of Truth, giving many examples in which truth could be used to bring about the best results.

The Junior-Senior cabinet will conduct a discussion led by Mr. Comer on "The Bearing of the Modern Psychology on the Question of Moral Obligations and Moral Freedom." The first 15 minutes of the time will be taken up with business and the last 30 will be given over to the discussion. This discussion will continue for the next three meetings.

The sophomore cabinet will probably be addressed by Dean Bell on "The Religion of a Scientist." President J. Elwin Dungan urges, however, that all members be present. The meetings for the past month of this cabinet have consisted of talks by different men on the subject of the "Negro Question."

Geology Professors Hear Buie Lecture

Collier Cobb, W. F. Prouty, T. F. Hickerson, G. R. McCarthy, and F. H. Edminister attended a meeting of the scientific society of Duke University to hear a lecture by Mr. Bowie, chief engineer of the U. S. of the Coast Geodetic Survey Thursday evening.

Mr. Bowie spoke on the work of the Coast Geodedic Survey and told of the accuracy with which one can locate points on the earth by reference to latitude and longitude. He also predicted that at some time in the future it would become the usual thing to locate ordinary surveys by reference to this system of dividing the earth's surface.

Members of the faculty plan to get Mr. Bowie to speak in Chapel Hill at some time in the future.

After the regular meeting of the society the University professors attended a smoker given by the organization in honor of Mr. Bowie.

Mosher Will Address Young People's Forum

Dr. E. R. Mosher of the education department will speak tonight at 7 o'clock to the Young People's Forum of the United Church. This will be the sixth of a series of lectures on sex hygiene being conducted by the group and is expected to be both interesting and instructive. Students and town folks interested in sex hygiene education are urged to attend these meetings.

Noted Astronomer To Give Sigma Xi Lecture

Doctor Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard College Observatory, will deliver the annual Sigma Xi lectures Thursday and Friday evenings on the general subject "Flights from Chaos."

Doctor Shapley is one of the Youngest of America's famous astronomers. He was awarded the Draper medal of the National Academy of Science in 1926, and has done much research work in studying the size, shape and relative positions of many of the galaxies.

The fields in which Doctor Shapley has done much work include those of photometry, spectroscopy, and cosmogony.

The lectures this year are to be given in Gerrard hall, and will begin promptly at 8:30. The public is extended a cordial invitation to attend these lectures.

Staff Meeting

There will be the regular meeting of the Tar Heel staff of reporters tonight at 7 o'clock in the office, basement of Alumni building. As several changes are to be made in beats and important announcements made in connection with the awarding of charms and credits for the year all reporters are expected to be present. Any new men who wish to try out for the staff are asked to report at this meeting.

Grail Gives Second Of Winter Quarter

The Grail dance of last night ended the social activities of the week-end for the followers of Terpsichore. The usual number of boys dragged, hopped and danced away the short hours, which seemed even shorter due to the nearness of the Sabbath.

Only four out of a possible five girls took advantage of the offer made by the Grail to give the first five girls entering the dance hall before 9:30 o'clock a box of candy. However, the dance was begun quite a little bit before the usual dance on the Hill begins.

A rather attractive scheme of decorating the ballroom was used. These decorations were the same as used by the law school dance Friday night. They consisted of red, blue and yellow streamers hanging over the floor and several lanterns placed artistically over the middle of the floor.

Alex Mendenhall and his Tar Heel Boys showed unusual pep and rhythm under the direction of their new leader, Billy Arthur of Charlotte. This diminutive musician could be seen quite often on top of the piano and other places seldom occupied by leaders of even the most modern of jazz-bands.

Y Deputations Will Visit Four Cities

There are at present only four cities on the list of those places to be visited by the Y deputation teams for this quarter and part of next. These four are Fayetteville, Greensboro, Rocky Mount, and Wilmington.

The trip to Southern Pines last Sunday was the first that has been made by the teams this year. There were, however, only three men sent to Southern Pines, but the teams that will go to the other places will consist of a quartet and from two to four speakers.

The teams are composed of students selected from the Y cabinets; they go to different places in the state and give talks in the schools, sing in the churches, and present regular programs.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY TO MEET TUESDAY EVENING

The 318th meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society will be held Tuesday evening in room 206 Phillips hall at 7:30.

The program to be presented consists of an illustrated talk by Dr. F. P. Brooks on "The Vitamin D Content of Shrimp Oil," and a talk by Dr. W. C. George on "The Unit of Life."

Russian Symphonic Choir Sings Here Monday Night

Basile Kibalchich, Director, has Wide Experience In Choir Conducting.

SINGS IN SWAIN HALL

Group Is Appearing Here Under Auspices Of Student Entertainment Committee; Sixth Annual Tour.

Under the auspices of the student entertainment committee the Russian Symphonic Choir will appear here in Swain hall tomorrow night at 8:30. Those not holding entertainment coupon books may purchase tickets at one dollar each.

The present tour of the choir is the sixth in this country. Basile Kibalchich, director and conductor of the choir, is a native of southern Russia. He studied music at an early age, selecting the violincello as his instrument. His studies in music and composition were at Petrograd Conservatory and under Rimsky-Korsakoff. In 1906 he was head of the famous Archangelsky Choir of Petrograd. Since that time the director has toured Europe as a choral director and has led the choirs of large cathedrals in Europe.

The program to be sung by the choir is in three parts.

The first of these will be made up of Russian sacred music. No country today is as rich in this type of music as Russia, due to the fact that the Russian Catholic church has one of the oldest heritages of any of the churches now active.

The celebration of feast days and other occasions on the church calendar have been so frequent that the volume of musical literature which has been created is much greater than that of other churches. The calendar calls for some 250 liturgical occasions annually in addition to the 52 Sundays. Hence, the Russian composers have created an abundance of religious pieces, many of which will be represented on the first part of the program.

The second division is that of classical music, opening with Rachmaninoff's famous "Prelude in C Sharp Minor," arranged for the choir by Mr. Kabalchich, the director. No number will display the marvelous bass quality of the Russian voice as much as this one. In this group there will also be two numbers from the popular Russian operas, Eugene Onegan and Prince Igor.

The final group will be one of Russian folk music. The folk song comes absolutely naturally to the Russian, and in most cases no new arrangements are needed, the songs being sung exactly as in the native surroundings.

The entire program as sung by the choir will be in the Russian tongue, but the printed programs will carry the English translations, so that the audience will understand the character and mood of each number.

The director is responsible for the selection of the program, as well as for the arrangement of many of the selections. He regards his group as a symphony orchestra. It has been correctly named a "symphonic choir.

The performance will be given without the aid of an instrument, and one of the most mysterious features of the eve-

A THOUGHT A DAY

Dressmaking is the only career that seems to me possible for modern women.—Suzanne Lenglen.

More Representation For Campus Leaders

It is very evident from the tense political situation that interest in campus honors and the number of candidates who present themselves far exceed the positions to be disposed of on the political mart some two months hence.

Since 1918-19 when the student body numbered but some one thousand until the peak was reached two years ago when it reached twenty-six hundred there have been but some three or four additions to the offices open to ambitious and extra-curricularly minded students. It is a false logic that argues that since the student body now has one-hundred and sixty percent more students than in 1919 that there should be forty-nine more offices than there are at present. However, the University has grown from a college to a genuine university since 1875, and still through the force of tradition rewards its members with but thirty-one honors, in other words one person in eighty-eight can possibly step into the chosen circle.

Much is made of the fact that this year, for once in several years, the non-fraternity men will be given more offices. This much ignored and ill-treated portion of the student body representing two-thirds of the student population, however, will not and can not get much additional representation; there are no additional offices to contest for.

Student government here is a flexible thing. The student body can have practically what it wants, not being bound by any constitution. It therefore rests with this student body as individuals whether they are to have additional offices, there being little question of the need for them.

In the past few years, it has been frequently demonstrated that all too often the work of the student body presidency has been too much of a tax upon the time and health of the man at the head of the campus. A vice-president selected to shoulder some of the details of campus affairs would not detract from the honor of the presidency but would admit another into campus management and save the chief-executive a strain which it is not necessary for him to bear.

There was a time when the University was less a university than it is now, and when the division of the campus into classes by years was altogether natural, but with the growth of the University into a genuine university with large, separate colleges the division is purely artificial. There are twelve such offices. There are nine colleges in the University, eight of which are large enough to choose officers. This would create twenty additional honors which would not be empty ones. College dances and enterprises should be given at which members of each class should be given opportunity to meet and know men from all the classes, rather than from their own classes. Each college would naturally be held together by common interest.

The practice of electing a cheer leader separately from the general elections detracts from an office which rightfully should be one of four major campus honors.

The selection of three election commissioners, whose duty it should be to conduct all elections in strict accordance with the honor system, is a suggestion that is worthy of consideration.

The only manner in which the non-fraternity group or the fraternity men can get more representation is by the addition of more offices. These are some that could well be added. There is no doubt in our mind that it would take some "tall" campaigning to add one single office to the list on account of the weight of tradition and precedent, but we offer this thought —The campus is crying for more representation; and there are too many men of quality and ambition who are ignored.

The Academic Mind And The Practical Man

Every known civilization has developed its own peculiar ideals, customs, and protective legends. Each generation has taken some flattering unction to its soul lest it should reveal too frankly to itself defects which shame the mind and disconcert the spirit. Having failed to develop its natural resources, China seeks to explain its devotion to reflective wisdom, when there is really no explanation to offer. England, still semi-feudal, lays great emphasis upon the zealousness of its aristocracy. Our own America that does not know where it is going proclaims the splendor of speed for its own sake, bowing down in awe thereto. In short, we wear our failures and display our shortcomings as a favor, the beauty of which can never be too prominently praised.

The academic mind is prone to seek escape from a world of routine into the Utopia of contrast. Its permeating tales of enchantment grasp us, and we insist that our beliefs are not fairy tales. In Western Civilization the chiefest of these is the legend of useless knowledge. The American people have endowed it upon a scale of unequaled magnificence. To this institution of useless knowledge belong, books by the square mile, buildings reaching almost to numerical infinity, and professors by the thousand. These we may call the temples of the academic mind, the habitations of men who are consecrated to the work of ferreting out the truth. We, ourselves, are the creatures of habit and routine. Were there no hindrance, we fain would escape into the field of the academic mind.

But what opinion does the practical, average man have of the academic mind? Which are the characteristics which impress him most? He tells himself that the academic mind is occupied with great masses of useless learning and speculation upon time and circumstance. He looks upon a university degree mainly as a passport to desirable social connections. The academic mind, he says, could never run a flourishing business. This requires men who know the world as it is, and not the dream world of the theorist. The average man looks upon the academic mind as being too remote from reality when the need for decisive action arises regarding practical matters. This, the writer feels, is the conception which present-day colleges and universities must strive to eradicate.

The world is run by practical men. To them is accorded the power and the glory of the world's accomplishments. What they do is valuable news. They even fashion the ambitions of their subordinates. These are not the deeds of the academic mind as the masses thing of it. True it is that the civilization of a given period is begotten by its own peculiar system of production, but what part of the success of American industries is attributed to the work of the so-called academic mind? Very little, indeed.

The philosophy, the religion, and the ideals of a man are shaped by his method of making a living. A century ago the practical man not only built universities, but he controlled their every movement. He expected the professors whom he hired to teach practical knowledge; in fact, he demanded that they do so. But now the situation is a different one. The control of our colleges and universities has been gradually wrested from the common, average man. Resultant of this is the fact that the great masses of the American people look upon a college degree as a passport to desirable social connections, rather than as a boost to success in the world of practical affairs. The eradication of this conception is the problem to which we call attention in this editorial.

To give the average, common man complete control over our institutions of higher learning seems unwise. The wisdom of giving him any more control than he already has is quite dubious. The solution to the problem undoubtedly lies in changing the practical man's conception of a university education by giving him one.

Co-eds Entertain Play-Likers At Tea

The co-eds entertained at tea at Spencer hall yesterday afternoon in honor of the Play-Likers from North Carolina College who were here giving "Children of the Moon."

Louise Thacker, who took an active part in dramatics at Greensboro, was hostess. Virginia Douglas, who is also from Greensboro, assisted her in serving. A number of students, were also present. The members of the Play-Likers who were present were: Misses Vera Buckingham, Ruth Abbott, Eloise Banning, Margaret McConnell, Charlotte Van Noppen, Lillian Killingsworth, and W. R. Taylor, A. T. West and James Hoge.

Readers' Opinions

"EMBERS OF THE GLEAM" STRIKES FIRE

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

In the recent issue of the Carolina Magazine there appeared a tale entitled "Embers of the Gleam," a second in what I suppose will be a series of tales concerning the "pleasurable excitement of the heart, etc." In reading this (in a way) delightful piece of work I was struck by the absolute and almost etherial beauty of the style. In this state I read on, supremely delighted, for a short while, until I reached a certain portion of the tale. May I state that I was utterly unprepared for what followed. The sequence of the tale had been lost to me almost by the really exquisite beauty of the wording. And, may I say again, I was utterly unprepared for what followed.

Now the main effort of the author seems to have been an attempt to surround the tale with "whispering pines," "lilting tunes," "cool shades of rhododendrons," "fields of red clover," etc.—all of which are quite pretty. His main object, then, must be to impress the reader with a sense of beauty.

Now we approach the point. It is impossible, I contend, to associate beauty in its most elevated form, as there attempted, with that phase of the "pleasurable excitement of the heart," without filling the reader with a certain sense of distaste. One is supremely amused and disgusted for some reason or other at the very attempt.

If I may quote from a certain famous critic — "and passion (demands) a peculiar homeliness (the truly passionate will comprehend me) which is absolutely antagonistic to this beauty which, I maintain, is the excitement of pleasurable elevation of the soul."

The author of this curious composition speaks often of such things as "happiness," "moments of heaven," "cooing turtledoves," etc.—but with these phrases he is merely, as it were, attempting to cover with a sugar coating, that pill which he intends the reader (poor fellow) to swallow. Now if we were to strip from the tale this exquisite wording, we would have left—what? Simply the fact that a boy and girl, in a country town, spent the night together. Thus we have left a certain thing which is quite distasteful.

Now, this "certain thing" is of course the innate characteristic of the tale. Keeping in mind that the main object is Beauty let us consider this—Which is more beautiful, the innate characteristic or the superficial framework of cooing phrases? Should not the innate forever be the more beautiful? There is no balance here; all the beauty lies in the superficial.

We approach the point. The innate is always genuine, the superficial forever affected. Hence, since beauty is the main object and since all of the beauty seems concentrated about the superficial, we may designate affectation as the main characteristic of the tale. And the whole world knows the utter worthlessness of affectation.

The author may advance, as an excuse, the fact that he is young and that the mentality of youth runs forever in this direction. That is plausible, but poor in that he should act the part of the man he cannot, as yet be.

I admit that this young man writes well, but it is my advice that he select better—er, shall we say—plots? It would undoubtedly be an object of grief to quite a number of people for the almighty Literary Supplement to the Daily Tar Heel to take on the general aspect of the Buccaneer.

L. GLOBULE RICHARDSON.

TO THROW STONES—OR?

Editor of The Daily Tar Heel:

Your dramatic critic has, of course, a right to his opinions and to express them. The rest of us have similar rights. Many of us who read Mr. Mebane's review of The Playmakers' recent production of "The Show Off" disagree with his criticisms. I, for one, wish to register protest and to express a differing opinion,—an opinion which may have no greater, or less, value than that of your reviewer, but which is equally honest, and which is shared by others here.

Having spent fifteen years working in the New York theatre in various ways myself, during which time I saw almost every thing produced there by both American and foreign managements, and during the last seven years of which I attended the theatre on an average of six times a week,—often ten or more times,—my work being that of dramatic reivewer for a number of different magazines and papers, perhaps my own standards of comparison may be said to have sufficient theatrical background to make possible at least a fair perspective. And as I saw and reviewed the brilliant New York production of "The Show Off," perhaps it is possible for me to offer a critical comparison of that production with last week's interpretation of the play by The Carolina Playmakers.

In my opinion, The Playmaker production did not suffer by comparison. Considering the inexperience and material handicaps of most amateur groups, it is never quite fair to judge their productions by professional standards. The recent Playmaker offering was not perfect. Financial limitations had been a handicap as always. But these had been amazingly surmounted. There were one or two weak spots in the cast. But I disagree with Mr. Mebane as to where and what they were. What faults were noticable were not glaring. The players, because of college duties, could not devote their entire time to rehearsals as do professionals, but were able to give a performance of such sustained integrity and distinction was a remarkable feat. Every member of the cast deserves praise for sincere and hard work.

In the difficult role of Clara, George Wilcox's pleasing youthful qualities were unfortunately miscast. She herself was charming. But the role called for a subtlety of reserved strength and restraint possible only to a matured experience. The real power of that role was not "put across." For a youthful actress it was the most difficult role in the play, for there was no "make up" to aid in suggesting how her hidden tragedy had at once aged and strengthened her. In the spirit, Clara, though still a young woman, was the oldest character in the play—and the strongest. Miss Wilcox gave a pleasing performance, but it was not quite fair to burden her youth with this role. It was not possible for an immature girl to realize this mature tragedy of disillusionment and heart hunger steeling itself against itself and finding strength in the strength necessity demanded it give to others. In the New York production, Clara was the strong

By H. J. Galland

After dinner and just before he delivered his talk in Gerrard Hall, Irvin S. Cobb was challenged by a University professor who, by reason of his rotundity, somewhat resembles the famous humorist. The professor wanted Mr. Cobb to deliver his lecture against the background of a blackboard, and with a piece of chalk in his hand. If the crowd laughed at Mr. Cobb's jokes with this professorial equipment and atmosphere of a classroom, the challenger declared he would be satisfied Mr. Cobb was a real humorist.

The visitor accepted, but when it came to the actual talk, he failed to carry out the provisions of the agreement, thus proving that even a professional humorman will shy from identification with the well-known type of professor who drags out bewhiskered and hoary jokes from their last resting places for the doubtful edification of his classes. It isn't the chalk or the blackboard which throttles laughs—it's the jokes.

In Tarboro, George Jenkins had a spat with Olivia Morgan. He beat her, knocked her down, and tried to extract from her mouth some gold fillings he had paid for. All of which points two morals—it's the voice with the smile that counts, not the teeth—and look out for the Georges in this world, for they seem to be tough babies.

With mid-terms gone, and perhaps passed, the campus is loosening up a bit. Card games are, as usual, particularly popular, and we have even heard of a case where the participants in a round so far forgot themselves as to lose their shirts and etceteras. Tut, tut—if this keeps up there won't be any work for the genial Dean and his Laundry henchmen.

A touching part of the senior smoker was the provision of ice cream bricks as part of the refreshments, each cunningly embellished with a beautiful red heart, apparently for the fast-approaching St. Valentine's Day. We wonder if the idea was for political opponents to eat their hearts out—or a demonstration of brotherly love.

One of the fastest jobs the campus has seen in recent years is the demolition of Memorial Hall. Although work was started only a few days ago, the bare outlines of the building are now exposed to the public gaze. It almost seems as if the old lady is being forced to show her petticoats, and there is something a little indecent about it all. Whereas the tearing down of old Memorial is the fastest job we have seen hereabouts, the completion of Graham is by all odds the slowest. There must be a moral somewhere in this.

Two dances in one week-end may sometimes cause anguish somewhere along the line. They may even have caused this piece of anguish:

WATCHES OF THE NIGHT

I should worry what you think.
Though I totter on the brink,
Though my chance with you I lose
I can always turn to booze—
And I'll do it if you date,
And persist in coming late.

Branch Stars As "Georgia" Defeats "Tennessee" 19-13

Game Between Winners Of First Contest Proves Exciting Affair.

"CRACKERS" LEAD LEAGUE

Winter Football Under Direction Of Coach Collins Draws Large Crowds; Team Headed By Nash, House And Branch Proves Stronger.

(By Browning Roach)

Opening a smashing attack in the first half, the "Georgia" eleven ran through "Tennessee" to the tune of 19 to 13 in Kenan stadium yesterday. The honors for the first half went to "Georgia," While the "Tennessee" outfit waited till the third quarter to let loose its fireworks in the shape of the Chandler-Moore pass combination.

"Georgia" broke the ice in the initial period when McDade blocked Chandler's punt and stepped across the line. Branch's try for extra point fell short and the score stood 6-0 with "Georgia" holding the edge.

A pass, Branch to Croom, for 14 yards put the ball in scoring position for "Georgia" in the second quarter and Henry House dived through the line for the touchdown. The line buck for extra point failed. Branch again tried the short kick play on the kickoff, but "Tennessee" was on the ball and downed it in midfield. Chandler attempted a pass to Moore but Nash intercepted on his own 40 yard line. Branch carried the ball five yards from punt formation and then went off tackle to make it first down. A pass, Branch to Croom, netted 10 yards and "Shorty" took the ball off tackle for 20 more. Nash gained six yards through center and Croom made it a first down. Another short spurt through the line by Croom and Nash and the ball rested four yards from the goal. Croom's first line buck for the touchdown was successful and a pass, Branch to House, added the extra point.

"Tennessee" received the kickoff on its own 32-yard line. Two successive passes, Chandler to Moore, accounted for 35 yards. Chandler tried another pass which Smith intercepted and the half was over.

"Tennessee" kicked off, Croom stepped over center for four yards and Branch punted out of danger. Then the "Vols" opened up. Moore received a ten-yard pass from Chandler over center and dashed 40 yards before he was downed on the 12-yard line. McAllister went off tackle for the touchdown and Moore drop-kicked for extra point.

"Georgia" received the kickoff and Branch went 6 yards through center and then punted to "Tennessee's" 37-yard line. Chandler passed twice to Moore and made it a first down. Chandler made 23 yards on a fake punt formation and then added two first downs in three successive runs to place the ball on the 7-yard line. The chance for a score was missed when Daniels fumbled and Brown recovered for "Georgia."

Branch went off tackle for five yards and passed to Croom for 20 more. House gained six and Branch 10 yards off tackle to place the ball on the 45-yard line. A pass from Croom meant for Branch fell into the arms of Ferebee and the fast back clipped off 45 yards for a touchdown in the longest run of the day. Moore's kick for extra point went wild and the scoring was over for the day.

"Georgia" threatened to score again in the last quarter after House had raced 40 yards with a pass from Branch to be downed on the 10-yard line. Croom and Branch added six yards and then the chance at touchdown popped up when Branch's pass on the fourth down was knocked down.

"Georgia" regained possession of the ball again when Croom intercepted Chandler's pass on his own 33-yard line. Branch ducked and dodged 16 yards on a fake punt formation and intercepted passes on both sides caused the ball to change hands twice in succession. Both teams threw in their reserves and the battle was on even terms the rest of the game.

FROSH LOSE TO STRONG WOODBERRY FIVE 16-14

Fighting furiously the entire route, the Carolina Tar Babies dropped a hard-fought game to the strong Woodberry Forest quintet 16-14 in a game played on the Woodberry floor Thursday night. The game was one of the closest and hardest fought contests played on the visitors' floor this year. Little scoring was done by either, the defensive work being such that the majority of the points were made by long range heaves. Hines and Beale were the high scorers for Carolina with 6 markers each, while John Weaver was the outstanding player for the prep school lads, and was also high scorer for the evening with 9 points.

TRAVELING SECRETARY OF DELTA SIGMA PHI HERE

Hugh D. McMillan, Traveling Secretary of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity, is spending a few days in Chapel Hill as guest of the local chapter. He is on an inspection tour throughout the South.

From a personal standpoint Mr. McMillan is interested in the study of campus activities of the colleges where Delta Sigma Phi chapters are located. While here he intends to make a careful survey of the University.

Mr. McMillan is a native of Canada. He is a graduate of McGill University at Montreal. In pursuit of his duties, he visits many colleges in the United States and Canada. This is his first visit to Chapel Hill.

TAR HEELS MEET DUKE, STATE AND LOYOLA IN WEEK

Three Hard Games For Carolina Courtmen During Coming Week; Two Have Bearing On State Title.

TWO GAMES IN TIN CAN

Basketball contests with Loyola's Ramblers, who recently ran up a string of 34 straight wins, and with N. C. State and Duke, outstanding Big Five contenders, headline a hard card of ten events scheduled for the athletic teams during the coming week.

Two of the feature games are to be played on the home court. N. C. State comes to Chapel Hill Tuesday night with an eye to avenge a previous drubbing by a 2-point margin. Loyola of Chicago will bring one of the greatest teams in the country to the Tin Can Wednesday night.

The third engagement for the Tar Heel quint will be on Saturday night, when the Tar Heels will be visitors of Duke's Blue Devils. Duke beat the Tar Heels, 35-14, in a previous engagement. The Devils had been able to beat State by but four points. The Tar Heels beat them by two. Fans think the Tar Heels learned a great lesson in that first Duke game, and believe this second meeting may be a different affair.

The varsity wrestlers will taste of competition twice, both times with Big Five teams. They journey down to Davidson Wednesday night, and meet N. C. State here Saturday night.

The Southern Conference championship boxers will attempt to continue their string of victories against Florida in Gainesville Saturday night.

The freshman basketball team will meet both N. C. State and Duke frosh in preliminaries to Carolina-State and Carolina-Duke varsity games on Tuesday and Saturday nights. The freshman boxing and wrestling teams will each see action once, both meeting Oak Ridge there on Saturday night.

Co-ed Five Loses To Fayetteville 28 - 21

Handicapped by the absence of Thacker and Way, the Co-eds fell before the attack of the Fayetteville high school sextet at Fayetteville Friday night 28 to 21. Two co-ed guards also had to substitute for a pair of forwards who were late in arriving on the scene and the Fayetteville girls ran up a lead of 12 to 2 in the opening minutes of play. The co-eds got into action in the last half and were fast overtaking the lead of their opponents when the play ended.

The line-up:

Fayetteville (28)		Co-eds (21)
Bowles (4)	Forward	Way (4)
Fear (16)	Forward	I. Currie (0)
Woodhouse (8)	Forward	Bruton (0)
Andrews (0)	Guard	S. Currie (0)
Tillinghast (0)	Guard	McAllister (0)
Buchingham (0)	Guard	Douglas (0)

Substitutions: (Fayetteville) Riddle, Boone; (Co-eds) Currie, Johnson (5), Lee (12).

SIDELIGHTS

(Sports Editor)

THE TENTATIVE TENNIS schedule for 1930 carries a list of 12 matches with some of the outstanding tennis teams in the country. Tulane, Alabama and other strong Southern Conference teams are expected to be among the list when it is completed. There will be meets with all of the Big Five teams in the state and probably many others. The Southern Conference tennis tournament will be held on May 7, 8 and 9, probably in Atlanta.

THIS YEAR'S varsity tennis team will not be as strong as in recent years, according to reports. Only two men of last year's varsity will be back, and Captain Bill Merritt will probably have to captain a team composed mainly of last year's freshman stars. Graham, Hendlin and Liskin are the most outstanding men from last year's frosh squad and will probably win out over some of the veterans.

GEARGIA'S DEFEAT OF Tennessee places it at the head of the winter football league. The mythical Georgia eleven has won both of its games and yesterday afternoon forced the other league leader, Tennessee, to divide second honors with Georgia Tech. Tennessee and Georgia Tech have both played two games and won one, giving them a mutual average of .500. Virginia is still bringing up the rear by virtue of its two defeats.

SOCCER'S POPULARITY seems to be on the rise again as fair weather permits the use of the high school field for games. "Fraternity Court" and their neighbors seem to house the most enthusiastic supporters, and the number turning out for the games seems to be increasing. "Beeky" Huger and June Adams are endeavoring to arouse the interest of the student body in this ancient and honorable game of associated football, and in view of the short time since its introduction seem to have made a good start. Nothing definite has been settled about the soccer games with Blue Ridge and Winston-Salem high, but it is expected that games will be arranged in the near future.

FENCING is taking on the proportions of a major-minor sport at Carolina with the claim that is now being made for the Southern Conference title. Several other universities or colleges are making the same claim, but Carolina has challenged them for a meet. Interest in fencing is rapidly rising and many of the students are ordering foils and masks to have for their personal use.

CO-ED BASKETBALL seems to be another one of the new Carolina sports. Only in recent years have the co-eds begun to take interest in their physical development, but at last we find them exercising instead of dieting. The co-ed basketball teams that have been representing Carolina in the past two or three years do not seem to be representative of the feminine population of the University. Only a small number of candidate for the team have appeared and many of the girls who played in high school or prep school have not displayed enough interest to come out for the team. With a population of about 300 co-eds it seems an unusual thing that Carolina cannot produce a girls' team that can win. The team that we now have has been getting the wrong side of the breaks recently and have won only a comparatively few games, but they deserve more credit than is being given them. If the co-eds are willing to have a team represent them, it seems only right that more should be expected to support them either by attending practices or attending games.

Mitmen Defeat Virginia; Quint And Wrestlers Lose

Week-end Engagements Find Tar Heels On Short End Of Scores; Boxers Score 4-3 Win Over Virginia.

RELAY TEAM WINS SECOND

Varsity Five Drops Contest To Maryland 34-26; Matmen Lose 15-13 To Princeton Tigers.

The University's invasion of Virginia and the East proved disastrous as Tar Heel teams turned in only one varsity victory in four starts. Carolina's boxers defeated Virginia 4-3 to keep Coach Rowe's protege's slate clean for the season. The basketball, wrestling and relay teams lost.

With Sheffield, Goodridge, and Captain Allen turning in victories against the Cavalier boxers and Koenig winning by a default the boxers nosed out Virginia 4-3. Warren and Smathers lost. A forfeit in the bantam weight gave Virginia its other score. Goodridge and Captain Allen maintained clean slates for the season by winning their fights last night.

The basketeers lost to Maryland 34-26 at College Park.

Dropping a 15-13 match to Princeton in wrestling was not unexpected as the Tigers have one of the strongest teams in the East this year. Ferguson and Stallings won by falls from their opponents while Tsumas gained a decision.

In the relay racing the Tar Heel team placed second in the Millrose games. Charles Farmer, racing against some of the country's fastest board sprinters placed second in the 50-yard dash.

In the freshman boxing bouts the Tar Babies defeated Virginia 4-3.

Other scores gave Duke a 33-26 victory over State College. This win practically gives the Blue Devils the state title.

Fencing Council To Meet Today

H. H. Hendlin, fencing director, requests that all members of the fencing council meet with him in his room, 313 Old East, Monday evening at 9 oclock. Among the members of the council are the following: Robert Linker, H. G. Galland, Herbert Estep, Digby and Fred Wardlaw. This is said to be an important meeting and all members are urged to be present.

TAR HEELS ADD ANOTHER VICTORY

Carolina Quintet Victorious On March Through Virginia; Marpet And Neiman Star In Cavalier Game.

Fighting every minute with only a point separating them for more than three quarters of the contest, the Flying Phantoms of the University of North Carolina and the Cavaliers of the University of Virginia struggled into an extra period before the Tar Heels captured the fray 40-37 Friday night at Charlottesville, Va. It was the eighth consecutive season that Old Dominion representatives fell before the Carolina onslaught.

Fatigued with two games played Wednesday and Thursday night against V. P. I. and the strong Washington and Lee Generals, Coach Ashmore's charges entered the game as underdogs. The strenuousness of the previous games told on the Tar Heels and the Cavaliers took an early lead. Before the end of the first half, the North Staters secured a two-point lead.

Ability to turn fouls into points was responsible for the victory for the Carolina team.

Motion Pictures Of State To Be Shown

In the near future, W. M. Laughorn, well known author and publicity manager, will visit Chapel Hill to show motion pictures of the state to the student body. These pictures—at present unfinished—which will depict the industrial, commercial and social aspects of the state, are being made to aid Mr. Laughorn in the compilation of material for his latest book.

Mr. Laughorn is working on a volume to be known as North Carolina, The Old North State, which will be released some time in September. According to the author, who, although not a native, is greatly interested in North Carolina, this is to be a masterpiece of publicity for the state. He believes firmly in Irvin S. Cobb's statement that "all North Carolina needs is a publicity agent" and is attempting to become just that.

The volume will contain approximately 800 pages devoted to the industrial, commercial, geographical, educational and agricultural opportunities that the state offers to the world. There will be some 2000 individual photographs of points of interest and industry within the state and will also contain biographies of those men and women who are outstanding in North Carolina today.

It is the purpose of the author to give to the world North Carolina as it is today, not as it was years ago.

Ten thousand copies will be given away to those who apply, as there is no charge. The revenus for publication will be obtained through the cooperation of the business and professional men throughout the state. Any reader of the Tar Heel who is interested in this book should apply to the author for a copy.

Mr. Laughorn announced that his office in the Hotel Malbourne, Durham, is open to all visitors come acquainted, with a view to becoming a stepson of North Carolina, his latchkey is on the outside.

Labor Expert Will Speak In Goldsboro

Mrs. Dexter Otey of Lynchburg, Va., one of the chief authorities in the south on labor conditions, will be one of the principal speakers at the School of Citizens which is to be held in Goldsboro February 11 and 12 in conjunction with the North Carolina League of Women Voters, it was announced yesterday by the University extension division, which is cooperating in making arrangements.

Mrs. Otey was graduated from Bryn Mawr College, and then took her doctor's degree from the University of Berlin. She was special agent of the United States Bureau of Labor in the investigation into the conditions of women and children in industry in 1907-1910 and wrote the sixth volume of the report, "Beginnings of Child Labor Legislation in Certain States."

She is chairman of the Southern Summer School for Women Workers in Industry, which is held in North Carolina. She is director of Bryn Mawr College, is active in the American Association of University Women, in the Virginia League of Women Voters, and the Community Chest.

Valentine Engaged In Experiment On The Growth of Fish

Dr. J. M. Valentine, of the department of zoology, is engaged at present in an original experiment to determine the effect of a current of water on the development and growth of fish. For subjects of the experiment Dr. Valentine has chosen the species of tropical viviparous fish known as Guppyi These fish are found principally in the waters of South America, necessitating the keeping of the water in the aquarium at a constant, relatively high, temperature. This temperature —21 to 22 degrees C.—is regulated and maintained by means of a thermostat connected to an electric heating current. The thermostat is located in the center of the aquarium and is in connection with a thermometer for observation. On the floor of the aquarium is gravel, upon which are placed several glass tubes closed at one end for the fish to rest in if they become exhausted by the current. The majority of the time they are forced to buck against the current, however. Fresh water and the current are supplied by an inlet at one side of the enclosure from which the water is forced at a controlled rate of speed, and to which it returns to be drawn off. As the fish become increasingly strong and able to cope with the swift current, it is progressively increased.

The present experiment is the second of its nature to be attempted by Dr. Valentine, the fish of the first having died prior to the conclusion of the test. The Guppyi are small and rather delicate to handle successfully.

The specific object of the experiment is to discover the effect of a strong current on (1) the tail fins, (2) musculature, and (3) the body contours of one generation of the fish. Much time and care must be exercised in the experiment.

Creek and Conway.

There are only two senior colleges entered in the tournament, so there will be no necessity of an elimination contest for this group. These schools are Lenoir Rhyne College in Hickory and Queens College in Charlotte.

The junior colleges are represented by Louisburg College, Rutherford College at Rutherfordton and the College of the City of Asheville. Little theatre groups from Smithfield, Greensboro, Reidsville and Goldsboro will also participate in a contest of their own.

All of the above mentioned players will present stock plays. However, there is a contest open for original productions alone. According to the rules of the contest, manuscripts of these plays have already been presented to a board of judges selected by the Dramatic Association. The following organizations have entered this field: The Mountain Mimes of Swannanoa; Blue Ridge School; Lenoir Rhyne College, the high schools of Sanford, New Bern, Conway, Winston-Salem, Wilson, Charlotte, Franklinton and Asheville; and the community players at Greenville, Goldsboro and Seaboard.

The two best plays from the original group will be presented at the tournament, if the winning groups so decide, to determine the state championship in this class.

It is expected that an announcement of the elimination schedule will come from Miss Strobach's office, the bureau of community drama, at an early date, as will the complete plans for the tournament.

Readers' Opinions

silent character on whom the others unconsciously leaned; consistently restrained throughout; never self-pitying; and revealing her own tragedy only in one or two moments of wistful tenderness that were doubly poignant in their very freedom from all bitterness. But for the miscasting in this one role—a role that called for an almost impossible combination (in an amateur group) of maturity with youthful looks, The Playmaker performance was not in the main excelled by that of New York.

Mr. Mebane's criticism of Penelope Alexander's performance of Mrs. Fisher seem to me unwarranted. In the first place, "Mrs. Fisher" was not "the aged mother," but a mother of only fifty, just slightly past her prime. Many modern women of fifty can still pass for mortal "Kizzy," in "Job's Kinfolks,"—no basis for comparison. Mrs. Bailey's "Kizzy" is indisputably one of the most perfect characterizations I have ever seen. But Miss Alexander's performance as Mrs. Fisher, though totally different, is also a masterpiece of characterization in one of the most difficult roles ever presented on The Playmaker—or any—stage. It was sincere, consistant, authentic, and often scintillating. That so young and inexperienced a girl could sustain an interpretation of an elderly woman with such insight and verity and never weaken under the long severe strain of so Herculean a part was nothing less than amazing.

In his praise of Mr. Bond as Aubrey Piper, "the Show Off," I heartily agree with Mr. Mebane. In his criticism of Mr. Bond's laugh, I disagree. To me that laugh was exactly what it should have been. And though Mr. Bond's interpretation of Aubrey differed from Mr. Bartell's famous performance in the New York production, to my thinking it was equally good, and in some ways more enjoyable because of its glints of quaint whimsy and irrestible touches of droll pathos.

Every other role way played adequately, particular credit for fine work being due Whitner Bissel, Joe Fox, Sara Faulkner and Eveland Davies. And instead of undertaking the production as being "below the usual Playmaker standards," to me, and to others here, it seemed, on the whole, the best production ever offered by The Playmakers.

But the greatest credit due any one has not been mentioned at all. That is to Elmer Hall, who directed the production, ably assisted by Robert Dawes. Those who watched Mr. Hall's work at rehearsals, and in the staging, realize his genius as a director. But even those who missed this delight, felt the consumate skill of the director's hand, his deft use of light and shade and color; appreciated the fine mosaic his artistry had created in his masterly unification of all the composite parts of the production—play, set, light cast. There may have been minor flaws due to material inadequacies. But these were lost in the bigger thing,—the unity, the harmony, the perfection in proportions of the whole. This was Elmer Hall's silent, selfless contribution—the contribution that made "The Show Off' the best all round production ever given by The Playmakers. His was "the star" performance. Yet his name has not even been mentioned in any review. I, for one, register protest at this omission, and beg to go on record as voicing appreciation of his work and genius.

More and more it is being recognized that second only to the quality of the play is that of the director in importance. As The Playmakers have been national leaders in other lines, let us create in our Playmaker reviews a leadership equally significant. Let us develop penetrating but constructive criticism, recognition and evaluation of the proportionate significance of the direction as well as of the other intergral parts of a dramatic production. No reviewer is really competent to offer enlightening criticism until he is intimate enough with the art and problems of the theatre to give intelligent analysis of the director work in a production as well as the obvious work of the actors in their individual and group performances.

My opinion, I reiterate, may be of less value than that of your reviewer. But at least it is based on a rather wide experience in the theatre that may warrant it voicing itself in protest—not only to Mr. Mebane's criticisms, but to the general policy of destructive criticism so often noticable in The Tar Heel and other student publications of this and other universities.

When will the sophomoric critic learn that to be able to discover only faults is not a proof of either insight or wisdom, but only of defective vision and—of immaturity? The fact is so obvious to all but the youthful iconoclast as to be almost pathetically humorous!—

It is so easy to throw stones. Any school boy can do that. But try and build with stones—a great viaduct, a mighty cathedral, or even a simple house or wall,—just try it! Perhaps the throwers of stones have not yet tried building. Perhaps when they do, they will not be so ready to throw—at those who are building. Or at the simplest things already built—things built crudely, it may be, and blotched with stain—blood stain from bruised inexpert hands, that in spite of wounds toiled on with patient courage. Perhaps only after he has tried building can any one recognize and understand the meaning of those stains. Perhaps too when the thoughtless stone thrower has really tried building, he will discover interesting answers to two tiresome questions he is often asked—First, "Which is more worth while to throw stones or to build with them?" Second, "Which is greater joy?" —Just try it!

But if the youthful critics everywhere became so mature that they all outgrew the school boy folly of throwing stones, and developed into builders instead —perhaps the millenium would begin! Perhaps it would mean—that everybody had grown up! What a dreadful place the world would be then! For that would mean that there were no more children! And what would life be to any of us without children—to scold,—to smile at,—and—to understand?

REAL ESTATE MEN TO CONVENE HERE

First Session Of Institute To Be Held Under The Auspices Of State Association And Extension Division.

Eighty North Carolina realtors will be in Chapel Hill tomorrow for the first real estate institute to be conducted jointly by the North Carolina Association of Real Estate Boards and the University extension division. The program, extending through Thursday, is in charge of C. C. Smithdeal of Winston-Salem, and is to include an intensive course of real estate selling in North Carolina.

A. John Berge of Chicago, sales counselor of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will conduct the study course. As a representative of the national association, Mr. Berge has previously conducted similar institutes and conferences in several other states. In addition, he is nationally known as a lecturer upon real estate problems, to which field he has contributed several books. Examples of his writing along these lines may be found in the National Real Estate Journal, of which he is a contributing editor. Furthermore, during the past five years Mr. Berge has analyzed over 7,000 real estate plans.

Assisting Mr. Berge will be Guy W. Ellis, president of the Guy W. Ellis Company in Detroit and past president of the Detroit Real Estate Board. This is the first time that Mr. Ellis has appeared on the program of any state institute, but on numerous occasions in the past he has been a principal speaker on the programs of the National Real Estate Convention.

According to V. O. Parker of Raleigh, president of the state association, more than 100 delegates were to be expected for the institute. As yet, however, these are only 80 who have agreed to be present. This number is expected to increase somewhat with last-minute arrivals.

To stimulate attendance, R. E. Dillard of Durham has offered a gold trophy cup to the real estate board having the best representative attendance at the institute. The cup will be awarded with consideration for distance traveled as well as for the actual size of the delegations.

Sessions of the institute and the topics to be taught have been arranged as follows: Wednesday: 10:00 a. m.—Listing Saleable Property and How to Build and Use Sales Kits; 2:00 p. m.—How to Build and Use a Prospect File and Showing the Property; Thursday, 10:00 a. m.—Maps, Charts and Graphs as Aids in Selling and Closing the Sale; 2:00 p. m.—Building a Clientele and Creative Selling.

The regular weekly meeting of the Dialectic Senate will be held in New West building tonight at 7:15 o'clock. All who desire to become members of the senate should present themselves at this meeting in order to be initiated at the second regular initiation meeting which is to be held next week.

No bills appear on the calendar, but opportunity will be presented for the introduction of new ones. Officials urge that all members be present.

Station W4WE To Take Part In World-Wide Amateur Contest

Amateur radio station W4WE, which is connected with the electrical engineering department of the University, is now making preparations for beginning work in the long-distance message handling contest which is sponsored annually by the American Radio Relay League, the organization of radio amateurs.

The contest which is to begin at 7 p. m. on February 15 and to continue for 15 days, is an international competition among the amateurs to determine which station can exchange messages with the largest number of foreign stations.

The University station has a reputation to live up to this year, for last year it finished 11th in the tests in which hundreds of stations were entered. Last year contact was established and messages were exchanged with over 100 different foreign stations, and this year the operators are all primed to run the total well above the mark set in the previous contest.

Station W4WE is not one of the best known amateur stations in the country, and as it has enjoyed an enviable record for long distance work, it is expected to stand high in the contest when the results are announced. During the past fall the station was in contact with the Byrd Antarctic Expedition several times, and for the first time in the history of the station, messages were exchanged with an amateur in Spain.

The station has also received a singular honor with the confirmation this fall of an exchange of messages with a station in Iraq and W4WE joined the ranks of the few stations who have communicated with amateurs on all continents of the globe. When the certificate, stating this feat, arrives, it will receive a place of honor on the wall with the letter that the station received from the commander of the McMillan Arctic Expedition commending the station for the assistance rendered the expedition in handling its messages.

The operators of the local station, Stanley Preston, Jack Houston, and Bill Adams, say that during the contest they will maintain regular watches at the station and that there will be someone on duty there almost continually during the 15 days the contest is running.

It was stated by one of the operators that most of the work done during the contest would be on the 20 and 40 meter bands. The local station is equipped to handle traffic in both of these bands as well as on the other regular amateur wave lengths.

In preparation for the contest the station has recently purchased a new Pilot Super-Wasp receiving set, which is a great improvement over the receiving equipment previously used. This set is one of the most popular among the amateurs and it is now considered one of the best for amateur use.

The transmitting equipment of the station consists of four separate transmitters, two of which are crystal controlled. The transmitter which will see the most service during the contest is crystal controlled and operates on 42.7 and 21.35 meters. The average input to this set will be about 100 watts. The other crystal controlled trans-

CABINETS HEAR THREE SPEAKERS

H. D. Meyer, Dean Bell, And H. F. Comer Address Y. M. C. A. Groups At Regular Meetings.

Three speakers featured the programs of the Y cabinets last night at the Y. M. C. A. H. D. Meyer of the sociology department spoke to the freshman cabinet, Dean Bell addressed the sophomore cabinet, while H. F. Comer talked to the junior-senior group.

H. D. Meyer spoke on a philosophy of his based on key-words. "These words are watchmen to help us to adaptation," said the speaker. He gave six key-words likely to help one to adapt one's self. The first word was attitude. He defined this as: what you think about a thing and how you act to it. Speaking of background as his second word, he was of the opinion that many times we criticize people before we have ground. "If we would first learn background," he said, "we would do less criticizing." Knowledge was the next key-word. The knowledge to which he here referred was the knowledge of one's self. The fourth word was facilities. Faith was the fifth key-word. "I am not necessarily referring here to religious faith," stated the speaker. He said he believed that it was necessary to have faith before one could conquer; one must first have a vision in order to believe and have faith. The sixth and

GLEE CLUB WINS DOUBLE HONORS

Choice And Prize Song Group Gained By University Singers.

The University glee club returned from Greenville last Saturday with the distinction of having won the song championship in the Southern Intercollegiate Glee Club Contest, Friday night.

Of the five schools represented, three were given special honors. The Carolina group was awarded first place as a result of scoring 253.6 points; Furman was given honorable mention with 248.8 points; and Wofford College with a score of 243 was accorded third place. The other schools competing were Guilford College and Erskine University.

Both the choice and prize song groups were won by Carolina, the school songs being sung equally well by Carolina and Furman.

The choice songs of the three winning groups were as follows: Carolina, "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt; Furman, "Lo How a Rose E'er Blooming;" and Wofford, "The Wanderer."

The contest was held in the fine arts building of the Greenville Woman's College. Judges for the occasion were Marshall Bartholomew of New York City, director of the Yale University glee club; Dr. Malcolm H. Dewey of Emory University; and James F. Griffith, of New York City.

At a business session of the association held before the contest, Prof. H. S. Dyer, director of the Carolina glee club, was elected president; E. J. Cullum of Davidson, vice president; and Max Noah of Guilford College, Sec'y-Treasurer.

Professor Dyer speaks of some interesting adventures encountered by the glee club during last weeks trip. The bus ride from here to Greensboro by way of the short route was four and a half hours in duration, the bus having become stuck in the mud no less than three times. On these occasions the glee club members aided in lifting the bus to solid ground.

When three miles beyond Charlotte and travelling at a high rate of speed, the passengers suddenly felt and saw the rear axle and wheels go rolling ahead of the bus. An emergency bus called out of Charlotte

PHI ASSEMBLY TO DISCUSS POLITICS

The Philanthropic Assembly will hold its regular session tonight in New East building. The resolution "Resolved, that political frame-ups for student offices are detrimental and should be discouraged" will be discussed.

Speaker Lang will report on the Woodhouse-Williams debate which was held under the joint auspices of the Philanthropic and Dialectic societies. The matter of the joint meeting of the two societies during the month of February in the Phi hall will be brought before the assembly.

Sophomore Smoker

The Sophomore class will hold a smoker Thursday night at 9:00 o'clock in Swain hall, according to an announcement by the president of the class. The decision to hold a smoker was reached at a recent meeting of the executive committee of the class. The speaker has not been selected.

TAYLOR SOCIETY TO MEET TONIGHT

"Management Problems In The Textile Industry" To Be Subject Of Dr. Murchison's Talk.

C. T. Murchison, professor of economics and an authority on the present situation in the textile industry, will speak on "Management Problems in the Textile Industry" before the University student chapter of the Taylor Society at its regular meeting in Gerrard hall at 7 o'clock tonight.

In his talk Dr. Murchison will point out the problems of buying the raw cotton and marketing the finished goods as the two problems of the industry which are directly connected with management. He will show how the independent manufacturer is unprotected in these two matters, and how the problems differ from those of the same nature in any other industry.

Dr. Murchison is the third of a series of faculty speakers who are delivering addresses before the Taylor Society. On the program for the remainder of the quarter are talks by Professor Strong, Professor Taylor and Dean Carroll.

The meeting this week will be held in Gerrard hall instead of in Bingham hall where the previous meetings have been held.

Recorder's Court Is Moved To Old Pickwick

Because crowds attending the sessions of the Chapel Hill recorder's court which are held regularly at 10 o'clock on Monday mornings, and frequently in the evening at other times, have reached such huge proportions as to tax the strength of the second floor of the city hall, Judge C. P. Hinshaw announced that henceforth sessions will be held in the old Pickwick theatre.

The Pickwick theatre building is opposite the Carolina theatre, and is rented by the latter, who tendered it to the city for use without charge. Monday's session was held there.

"During the last month attendance has been increasing rapidly," said Judge Hinshaw. "Two hundred people often attend, and many others are turned away. We are afraid the floor joists will give way. We attribute much of this attendance to publicity given our proceedings by the Daily Tar Heel, which seems to be widely read."

Hoefer To Address First Year Students

E. G. Hoefer, head of the department of mechanical engineering, will speak to all first-year engineering students at 12 o'clock Wednesday on the different fields included in mechanical engineering.

Concert By Russian Choir Pleases University Group

Seventh Entertainment Presentation Well-Received By Student Audience In Swain Hall.

SING IN NATIVE LANGUAGE

Program Divided Into Three Parts; No Instrumental Accompaniment For Singers.

The Russian Symphonic Choir under the direction of Basile Kibalchich was enthusiastically received in its presentation in Swain hall last night of a program of Russian music, sung entirely in Russian with no instrumental accompaniment. The concert was the seventh number on the student entertainment program for this year.

Mr. Kibalchich and his choir have discarded the traditions of choral singing as exemplified by the old Italian and German schools and have developed a new form of vocal ensemble. He has taken the symphony orchestra as his model and has given each voice of his choir the same value as each instrument has in the modern orchestra. The results, as presented in the concert in Swain hall last night, is a choral body that sings with a beautiful quality of tone and a wide range of emotional appeal.

Particularly beautiful were the folk songs sung by the choir. The colorful and picturesque costumes of the Russian people worn by the singers added much to the effect of the group.

The audience particularly liked the "Gospodi Pomilui" by Lvov. The song consists of the repetition of the name phrase, which in English means "Lord have mercy on us," with different intonations and a feeling for the different parts.

The program was made up of three parts: the sacred, the classical and the folk music. The following numbers made up the first group:

"Holy Week" (Good Friday), harmonized by Kibalchich; "The Last Supper," Lvov; "To Thee We Sing," Rachmaninoff; "Notre Dame" (Holy Virgin), Tschaikowsky; "Psalm XXIV," Archangelsky; and "Gospodi Pomilui," Lvov.

The second, the classical group, included the following: Prelude in C Sharp Minor, by Rachmaninoff; On the Steppes, by Sachnovsky; Peasant Scene from "Eugene Onegin," by Tschaikowsky; Evening Song from "Prince Igor," by Borodin; and Sadko, by Rimsky-Korsakoff.

The folk music came last. The numbers were: "Wedding Bells," by Nikolsky; "Children's Song," Nikolsky; "The Legend," Leontovich; "Morning Song," Lobachev; "The Bridal Song," arranged by Kibalchich; "In the Garden," arranged by Kibalchich; "Volga Boatmen Song," arranged by Kibalchich; "The Toilers' Song," arranged by Kibalchich; and "Gayety," Gretchaninoff.

Dancer Gets Fine

A THOUGHT A DAY

We have created a world in which hardly any man dare move in any matter on his own responsibility.—Sir Ernest Benn.

Socking Old Man
War In A Tender Spot

At today's plenary session the tribunal of the London naval conference will decide the status of the submarine as an implement of warfare. Indications are that Great Britain and the United States will lead the attack upon the underseas craft. It is understood in official circles, according to reports, that the Anglo-American delegates may go so far as to advocate the virtual abolition of the submarine.

On the other side of the fence will sit the delegates from France and Japan. These two nations will plead for the continued life of the submarine, with its use limited to coast defense purposes. It is the "poor man's battleship" will argue the Nipponese and the French. Italy will in all probability take a back seat, although the henchmen of Mussolini will watch the proceedings with eagle eyes in order to prevent France from securing any advantage over her Italian neighbors.

But the most important aspect of the general attitude toward the submarine is that all the five powers seem to be in accord in wishing to "humanize" submarine warfare, to apply to the under-water craft the same rules of handling intercepted merchant vessels as apply to such action by surface ships. Indeed, throughout the conference there has been an encouraging note of sincerity in all discussions of plans for eliminating the most horrible phases of warfare. Even to those skeptics who are inclined to take the professions of faith of disarmament conference delegates with a grain of salt—and that includes practically all of us who are mere onlookers—the unanimous statements of accord on proposals for such humanitarian moves as the placing of food ships in the same category as hospital ships during wartime, have a genuine ring.

Great Britain's delegates appear from this distance to be the most earnest advocates of any and all methods of reducing the cost of warlike preparations and cutting down to a minimum the chances of war. The cause for the British attitude is not difficult to discover. In a radio address Sunday Phillip Snowden, British chancellor of the exchequer, pointed out that the world war cost his country over fifty billion dollars, and that it must spend over two and a half billions annually at present for war purposes. It is not strange that Great Britain is eager for any measures which will lighten her war burden, especially in view of the country's economic condition. Voluntary elimination of two cruisers from her building program and her ready agreement to virtual naval parity with the United States attests to her sincerity.

In many respects the London conference has already produced a great deal to encourage the pacifist. But it has demonstrated that the old international suspicions are still active, and that a long road still lies ahead before war will be effectually outlawed.

The nations have been jealously watching the lineups of the delegates on questions developing at the conference. It is, after all, chiefly a political gathering. The growing evidence of British-American political accord is one of the most encouraging outgrowths of the conference, as viewed from this side of the water.

Although the conference probably will accomplish actually little more than the removal of some of the economic burdens of preparation for war, indications are that it will mark distinct gains for the cause of world peace from a psychological and ethical standpoint. A death blow to the submarine today, even on paper, would hit old man war in a tender spot; here's hoping!

The Other Half
In Orange County

Orange County offers as interesting a sociological contrast as an observer could find almost anywhere. The county itself is poor, sparsely settled, and contains no industries, no magic wand of energetic materialism to boost its economic importance and to transform it into a Forsyth or a Guilford. Yet it is highly advertised and is known even more than the most important counties of the state because it contains Chapel Hill, the seat of the University of North Carolina.

It is here that the contrast becomes sociological. The University is a kind of apex, both figuratively and literally, to the surrounding territory of drab, gray, dreary countryside extending to Hillsboro, to Durham, to Raleigh. In Chapel Hill there are the attractive residential sections of the homes of faculty members; there are the multitude of flamboyantly new and imposing fraternity houses. Above all there is the student body, many of whom, no doubt, come from very modest homes, but practically all of whom have known comfort at least, if not luxury. Back home they have had three meals a day; they have had coal in winter, and have not suffered from inadequate housing. They come down here, mix with boys in still better circumstances: boys who know Packards and prep schools and trips to Europe, and the whole produced is a typical representation of the modern American standard of living. Being one of the units of this group and never in his life having actually felt the pinch of want and the desperation of poverty, the average student never dwells upon the other class, people not so fortunate. Life for him is comfortable; he suffers no privations, and the thought that there are many people who do suffer never occurs to him.

But poverty is present—one might almost say prevalent—among many of the residents of Orange county. Situated around this pleasant spot, Chapel Hill, within a radius of twelve miles there are at least twenty-five cases of suffering and actual want. In some instances these cases approach the stage of desperate need; starvation haunts the wretched household, producing an abject helplessness among the unfortunates who are incapable of dealing with the situation.

It is true that in some cases the conditions are brought about by the unfortunates themselves, who through laziness or drink or degradation have fallen to this level. But the tragic feature of the situation consists in the hardships suffered by deserving ones, people who are really the victims of circumstance. Mr. George Lawrence, director of social welfare in this section, tells of a case in Hillsboro where a widow and three children were on the brink of actual starvation, having only bread and buttermilk to sustain them, and hardly enough of that to last them more than two or three days. What were they to do after that? The mother was sick; she lay in bed emaciated, exhausted. The children were all small, and lack of nourishment had made mere ghosts of them, pitiful wisps of humanity attired in rags. The buttermilk was the last of their rations; it had been purchased some time before with the last cent they could possibly scrape together,—and on that they had been existing ever since.

It is hard for the student to realize that such conditions can exist. Living in comfort and never stepping outside of an environment in which almost the highest standards of living are a convention, he sees the world through the eyes of warm, well fed, and well clothed youth. He never looks on the world through tired eyes; he never shivers in the storm and gathers his scanty rags about him. Aching hunger, numbing cold, a weary, animal bitterness, — these never afflict the collegian; yet they are present, grim specters of poverty, in his vicinity.

It is time for the student to step out of his own self-satisfied routine of existence to give this problem his consideration, at least. He reads of famine in China, and some effect is produced upon him. An appeal for Near East relief, for the Red Cross, always finds the student body susceptible, to some degree, anyhow.

Why cannot the student now concern himself a little not only with how the other half lives, but how they are going to continue living? —R. H.

Library Installs A New Reflector

Library officials have just recently solved another of its light problems. There are two lights located above each end of the main circulation desk on the second floor, which were found to give insufficient light.

Upon recommendation of J. S. Bennett, superintendent of the electric division of the University Consolidated Service Plant, a new piece of light equipment has been installed. A reflector, made of sheet steel and plated with chromium giving a high reflective power, is located behind the skylight above the circulation desk. This reflector shines through the skylight.

Essay on Composition

This is the first of a series of essays on composition which will be presented from time to time in this column. The lead paragraph of the short story will be considered in this issue. There is no better way to learn to write than by studying the styles of established authors. Below we present the lead paragraphs of a short story as three well-known authors might have written them. Let us say that these authors are writing about the same thing. Now, consider the differences in the approach.

(After Jay Curtis)

It is raining today. The rain blows in my face and the brisk wind rushes by me, chilling my body. I look down into the valley, and I see the little stream at the foot of the hill swelling with the rain. I am sitting on the hill alone thinking of a girl I used to know—the most wonderful girl I ever knew—a girl with rosy cheeks and beautiful lips and a slender white body. I see her now sitting beside me on the hill under a mimosa tree with fragrant pink apple blossoms falling into her hair. I see her reaching out her arms to me—beautiful arms, they are, with slender wrists and white tapered fingers. She seems so near to me that I can almost feel her breath upon my face. "Dear Carolyn!" I cry.

(After J. J. Slade, Jr.)

I don't remember how I did it. I am mentally sane and not addicted to drinking as I can amply prove. Let me tell you what happened. It was a cold afternoon and the rain blew in heavy gusts across the top of the hill. I had climbed the hill with two friends earlier in the day. They were geologists and were at present in search of fossils. Well, I sat down under a tall pine tree wishing that I had brought an umbrella. Suddenly I heard a noise that startled me. I quickly looked up, and there was my wife standing before me! Now I am considered a courageous man, but at that sight my blood froze. It was impossible! Why I had murdered my wife four months before. Yes, four months ago yesterday. Yet, there she stood, more beautiful than I had ever seen her. She had on a thin orange dress—the one she had worn that fateful night. She hovered above me and I saw her two dark eyes staring into mine. I was so frightened that I was unable to cry out.

(After Joseph Mitchell)

I was pretty drunk, I guess, toppling up the hill in the rain. The trees looked like gaunt skeletons of huge centipedes spread out against the sky. When I got to the top, I wondered how I would ever be able to get down again. I didn't know what I had climbed the hill for. I wanted to sit right there under the beech tree and let the rain slap at my face. I wanted to lie down and roll over and over. O, Lord, I was drunk. Then I began to think about Mary Elizabeth. I tried to remember her last name, but I couldn't for hell. She had pretty, dark skin and very white teeth. I had met her one night at a dance in Jim Hobson's tobacco barn. She had been dressed in a green skirt that came above the tops of her knees, and she had worn a bracelet on her left arm. Lord, she had been pretty! I could see her before me now, standing right there in the rain. I wanted to call out to her but I couldn't, I couldn't say anything. I was too drunk, I guess.

(The second essay will appear in a later issue.)

Readers' Opinions

CURTIS' ATTACKER IS ATTACKED

Editor Daily Tar Heel:

I read L. Globule Richardson's criticism of "Embers of the Gleam" in Sunday's Tar Heel; and, as I read, there came over me the feeling that that article was the result of the deep calling to the deep—the Atlantic yelling to the Pacific, as it were!

I must confess that L. Globule's globulations thoroughly disillusioned me. For when I read "Embers of the Gleam," I imagined that some time in ages long ago God had struck the harp of love, sending two notes swiftly down the halls of time—two notes at first, then blending into one in Mr. Curtis' story. But (the pity of it!) on reading Mr. Richardson's exposition I came to the conclusion that God must have been playing on a saxaphone and that the two notes were merely a country boy and girl who spent the night together!

It is obvious that Mr. Richardson, despite the wisdom of his years, has not learned that to write one must survive and to survive one must write what the public will read. Time was when people would pay for and enjoy sonnets to eyebrows. But no longer. Whether we like it or not, people demand sonnets to shapely calves and curves. It is, therefore, comparatively simple why Mr. Curtis should write of "pleasurable excitements of the heart."

Mr. Richardson's position is so broad-minded it's transparent. He attempts to make "Embers of the Gleam" fit his own peculiar requirements, and on seeing that it doesn't (praise Allah!), he launches a weak discussion on affected and innate beauty.

Rather than "to impress the reader with a sense of beauty" (as Mr. Richardson asserts), it must have been the aim of the author of 'Embers of the Gleam' to get his story read—and by the greatest number of people. But how? By such vague quotations as " . . . and passion (demands) a peculiar homeliness (the truly passionate will understand me (of course!) which is absolutely antagonistic to this beauty which, I maintain, is the excitement of pleasurable elevations of the soul?" No. No! NO!

The author of "Embers of the Gleam" speaks often of such things as "happiness," "moments of heaven," "cooing turtle-doves," etc. "But with these phrases," Mr. Richardson points out, "he is merely, as it were attempting to cover with a sugar coating that pill which he intends for the reader (poor fellow) to swallow. Now if we were to strip from the tale this exquisite wording . . . " But let's not! For after all, a sugar-coated pill is much easier to swallow—and there is less hangover! Besides a truly well-written story, "Embers of the Gleam," if you please, will not allow stripping of any nature. It is one of the tests of craftsmanship.

Why he should raise the question we do not know, but Mr. Richardson in his criticism of the story, asks "Which is more beautiful, the innate characteristic or the superficial framework of cooing phrases? Should not the innate forever be the more beautiful?" But why? It is the well-founded opinion of many that all beauty is superficial, really dependent upon the mind.

This is not hard to accept because in a work of art beauty depends largely on characters imputed to the work by the artist or the spectator. Thus dead marble looks alive and full of character, or in a picture stable forms are seen, aesthetically, to be in motion, for instance, to be dancing. In literature words are chosen not merely to describe but endow: "two voices are there, one is of the sea, one of the mountains," though neither sea nor mountains have voices.

Thus there is always an element of illusion in art, a character being imputed to the material which it does not possess of itself. Even in nature, beauty may be seen to depend on selection on our part, or on addition. For example, we select in a sunset the features which harmonize, or in a landscape the features which suit our own mood — "Whispering pines." "lilting tunes," "cool shades of rhododendron."

No! we cannot conceive beauty in the innate. On the other hand, the innate is rarely beautiful. What is innately beautiful in a frog, or the light waves that make up a sunset, or the atoms that compose everything save the void? It is the poets' imagination that creates a beautiful frog or sunset, or conceives atoms in beautiful combinations and relationships. Beauty is always superficial, affected, unreal. "Embers of the Gleam," then, is a beautiful story—Mr. Richardson, notwithstanding. —Ivan Idea

TAR HEELS MEET STATE FIVE HERE TONIGHT

Phantoms To Resume Big Five Competition After Northern Jaunt

Two Wins And Two Losses Results Of Annual Trip.

NO EFFECT ON TITLE

Marpet And Neiman Are Stars Against Conference Foes In Virginia And Maryland.

Rested by a mild practice session yesterday, the Flying Phantoms, home from a four-day invasion of Virginia and Maryland, meet the N. C. State aggregation at 8:30 o'clock tonight in the Tin Can. The contest will be the second encounter between the two teams this year.

Favored to win the first meeting by a wide margin, the Tech quint fell before the University five by a two-point margin two weeks ago. Since that time both squads tasted defeat at the hands of Duke, eliminating the possibility of the game tonight having effect on the state title.

The annual northern trip added two Southern Conference victories to the winning side of the Tar Heel average, and at the same time two losses to the opposite side of the ledger. The winning games were at the expense of Virginia and V. P. I. while the losing contests went to Washington and Lee and Maryland.

The lone star of the northern trip was Arty Marpet, veteran guard. The active goal-guarder found the basket for more points than any other member of the squad. Dave "Ookie" Neiman ran Marpet a stiff race for honors.

Probable lineup for the contest with State will be: Neiman and Greene, forwards; Harper, center, and Brown and Marpet, guards.

INVITATIONS FOR CONFERENCE MEET HERE MAILED OUT

All Teams In Conference And Many Prep Schools Invited To Meet Here March 8.

Invitations to the Southern Conference indoor meet to be held in the Tin Can on March 8 have been sent to the 22 other conference institutions, five college freshman teams, 29 prep schools and 43 high schools. Davidson, Wake Forest, Richmond, William and Mary, and Furman are invited to send freshman teams. Among the outstanding prep schools invited are Woodberry Forest, Fishburne, Augusta Military Academy, Virginia Episcopal School, G. M. R., Blue Ridge, Hargrave, Riverside, Oak Ridge, Baylor and Asheville School.

With the Millrose meet out of the way and each man concentrating on individual events, the Tar Heel track team is pointing to the conference meet, in which practically the entire squad will be given a chance.

Candidates for the mile relay team in the college freshman division have been working out for the past several days for this event. Among the most promising of the freshman quartermilers are Mitcham and Evans, running mates on last year's Charlotte high track team; Watkins, winner of the cake race last quarter; Geiger, who showed up well in the gym tests; Drake and Brook, both members of the mile relay team of McCallie School, which won this event in the southern prep school meet here last year.

Wrestling Results

The Carolina wrestlers lost to Princeton by the close score of 15 to 13 at Princeton Saturday afternoon. Up to the last bout the score was 13 to 12 in favor of Carolina.

The bouts were as follows:

125-lb. class—Stallings (C) won over Ihrig (P) by fall, 5:17.

135-lb. class—Kent (P) won over Woodard (C), time advantage 2:20.

145-lb. class—Tsumas (C) won over Myers (P), time advantage 9:9.

155-lb. class—Royster (P) won over Moore (C), time advantage 9:17.

165-lb. class — Hooker (P) won over Cowper (C), time advantage 4:26.

175-lb. class—Ferguson (C) won over Strawbridge (P) by fall, 9:13.

Unlimited class—Barfield (P) won over Houghton (C), time advantage 9:21.

PATTERSON MEDAL ON DISPLAY SOON

Annual Award For General Excellence In Athletics Established In 1924.

The Patterson medal, awarded annually to the student chosen for general excellence in athletics and other predominant qualities, will soon be on display in one of the show-windows in the business section of Chapel Hill.

The Patterson medal was established in 1924 by Lieutenant Commander D. F. Patterson of the United States navy, Alfred F. Patterson and Dr. Joseph F. Patterson as a memorial to their brother, John Durand Patterson, who died that year. The latter attended the University in the years 1904-1906, becoming prominent on the campus and playing on the baseball team. Originally from Newbern, he became connected with a supply-manufacturing company. He was also called overseas during the World War.

Ever since it was established in 1924 this medal has been a prominent goal after which athletes have been consistently striving. There are five elements which compose the qualities for which the receiver of the token is chosen: athletic ability, sportsmanship, leadership, morale and general conduct.

The committee upon which rests the responsibility of selecting the student to whom the award is to be given, is composed of the graduate manager, the athletic director, the football coaches, the baseball coaches, and one student selected by the committee who is not himself eligible for a candidacy.

Names well-known throughout the south have appeared as receivers of this award for the past six years; the medal has often been called the final diamond in the crown for a king of Tar Heel sport. The following is a list of the holders of this honor since the year it was founded:

1924, "Monk" McDonald; 1925, "Rabbit" Bonner; 1926, "Red" Whisnant; 1927, "Ad" Warren; 1928, Galen Elliott; 1929, Henry Satterfield.

SPORT RAMBLES

Roulhac Hamilton

THE BASKETBALL TEAM will meet three of the hardest tests of the season this week. Loyola of Chicago and State will appear in the Tin Can and Duke will be played on the Devils' home floor. In none of the games will Carolina go on the floor as definite favorites to win; in only one game will they be conceded as much as an even chance. Loyola, after winning 34 straight games, met her first defeat in two seasons a few nights ago at the hands of Purdue. The team is exceptionally strong and will probably leave the state undefeated. In the first meeting of the two teams this season, Duke smashed the Tin Can jinx Carolina has held over them in the past and won an overwhelming victory. A victory for the Tar Heels in either of these two games will be a surprising upset of the dope bucket. Carolina defeated State by a narrow two-point margin in the first game of the two-game series between the two teams. There has been a noticeable improvement in the play of both teams since that game. Comparative scores give the Raleigh aggregation a slight advantage, but the game will be regarded as a toss-up.

THE BIG FIVE race will probably be definitely settled during the week. Duke, with a clean record showing five victories, is on top of the heap. Davidson, undefeated in its only Big Five game, occupies the second rung of the ladder. Carolina, with an even break in four games played, is in third place. State is fourth and Wake Forest, without a victory to its credit, brings up the rear. Duke plays both Davidson and Carolina this week and a victory in either game will give the Devils a sure claim on the flag. They seem to be the class of the state on the court and only a break can prevent their taking off first honors.

THE DUKE CHRONICLE has a good deal to say on the question of Carolina students hissing the Duke team in the recent game with Carolina. We did not see the game and therefore did not hear the hissing. If there was hissing, we do not know whether the student body as a whole or some group of students was responsible. It is hard to believe that the Carolina student body is composed entirely of men who are ungentlemanly enough and unsportsmanlike enough to hiss a visiting team. In any case, if there was hissing the student body owes an emphatic apology to Duke. This type of conduct will do much to strain relations further between the two institutions and, if continued against other teams, will do much to hurt the reputation of Carolina wherever sportsmanship is regarded as something fine.

THE SOUTHERN Conference standings show Alabama with eight victories in as many games, holding first place. Close behind come the Generals of Washington and Lee with seven victories and no defeats. No other team survived the week undefeated, but Kentucky has a record of seven wins and one defeat and Duke has lost only one game in six. The conference tournament in Atlanta gives promise of showing some real basketball and providing a close fight for the championship.

FRESHMEN MEET STATE TONIGHT

Yearling Contest To Be Preliminary To Varsity Clash; Tar Babies Favored.

After a disastrous tour of Virginia, in which they lost three out of four games, the Tar Babies started preparation for a game with the State Wolflets in the preliminary to the varsity Carolina-State game in the Tin Can tonight at 7 o'clock. Earlier in the season, the Tar Babies administered a 24-19 defeat to the Wolflets and the visitors are well acquainted with State's Meanwell system, and their defense should hold the Wolflets in check again.

The Tar Babies showed a surprising reversal of form on their trip, starting off with a defeat at the hands of the V. P. I. freshmen. The next night they defeated Augusta Military Academy, their only victory; lost to Woodberry Forest, and lost to the Catholic U. freshmen, a game which was scheduled at the last minute.

This week the Tar Babies play two of their hardest games, encountering State tonight and the Duke Imps Saturday night at Durham. Recently the Imps soundly thrashed the Tar Babies on the home floor. The quint will probably engage a state team in the preliminary to the Carolina-Loyola (Chicago) game.

The starting lineup for the Tar Babies in tonight's game will probably be: Lineberger and Henry, guards; Beale, center, and Hines and Dunn, forwards. The reserves that will probably see action will be Connor, Markham, Moore, Hamlet, Brown and Parsley.

At the end of the regular game the score was tied at 32 all. During the five minute extra period each team scored four points, leaving it 36-36, but in an additional extra two minutes the Chi Psi's sank two long shots while the Delta Tau Delta's were unable to score. DUKE, DAVIDSON LEAD BIG FIVE

Tar Heels In Third Place In Collegiate Circle In State

Winning from Wake Forest and State during the week, Duke's Blue Devils increased their Big Five wins to five. They are undefeated and lead the race for the state championship by virtue of this record. Davidson, also undefeated, is in second place due to a win from Carolina in an early season game. Third in the rankings comes Carolina with two victories and a like number of losses. State, with one win and three reverses, is in fourth place, and Wake Forest, with four losses and no wins, trails the procession.

Duke's two games were the only games in the loop during the week. Wake Forest put up its best showing of the season, but Duke came out on the long end of a 37-30 score. Saturday night found the Devils again hard pressed. State led 18-16 at the end of the half, but the Devils came back after the half to win 33-26.

Davidson's Wildcats and the Tar Heels took northern trips. Davidson made a clean sweep in Virginia, winning from V. M. I., Roanoke, and V. P. I. Carolina did not fare so well, winning from V. P. I. and Virginia, but losing to Washington and Lee and Maryland. State also played one game outside the loop, winning from Georgia Tuesday night.

The standings:

TEAM	W.	L.	PCT.
Duke	5	0	1.000
Davidson	1	0	1.000
Carolina	2	2	.500
State	1	3	.250

Special Business Meeting Mitchell Scientific Group

There will be a special business meeting of the North Carolina chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific research society, Tuesday evening after the meeting of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society.

At this time three matters of importance will be taken up. There will be a consideration of the proposal to amend the constitution of the local chapter to provide for the admittance of new members to the society during the year rather than just prior to graduation. Action will also be taken on the matter of eligibility of associate members. At present only graduate students are eligible for associate membership under the constitution of the local branch, but the proposed amendment would provide for the admittance of seniors who show marked ability in the fields of scientific research.

Negro Visitor Gets Two Months On Roads

Walter Crawford, 28 and colored, who arrived in Chapel Hill ten days ago from Fayetteville, found himself in the toils of the law on two counts yesterday.

In addition to drunkenness, which gave him thirty days on the roads, Walter was found guilty of the larceny of a watch from "Reverend" J. W. Jenkins, a fellow boarder at Jemima Tutt's home. The negro pastor was sleeping after an overdose of spirits, and his acquaintance is said to have rifled his pockets.

Walter found a pawnbroker in the person of Ross Farrington, an employee of the athletic association, who testified that he had "loaned" the negro fifty cents and a pair of trousers, which were exhibited in court, upon the timepiece.

After Judge C. P. Hinshaw had directed that the visitor from Fayetteville would remain two months as a member of the road gang, he was approached by the negro parson whose watch had caused the trouble.

"Boss, ah wants another wahhant swored out fo' dat niggah. Ah sell him some shoes an' he say he'd pay las' sattidy. But he ain' pay, nohow!"

NEGRO'S JEALOUSY GETS HIM IN RECORDER'S COURT

Ralph Cotton, 20, colored, was charged in recorder's court yesterday with assaulting Robert Partee, also colored, with a sugar bowl, in a fracas following an argument over a young negress in a Chapel Hill restaurant. Cotton was assessed with the costs.

Health Department To Meet

The health department of the community club will hold its February meeting at 3 o'clock tomorrow in the home of Mrs. Otto Stuhlman, Tenny Circle.

Hi Schools Enter Basketball Teams.

There are 56 high schools entered in the general basketball series being sponsored by the North Carolina high school athletic association and the bureau of high school debating and athletics of the University extension division. These schools are among the smaller institutions of the state which were ineligible for class A competition—a field limited to the seven largest schools in the east and west.

The general series will be conducted on the elimination plan with the winners in each conference, eastern and western, coming here to decide the state championship. This arrangement differs from that of the larger schools in that the winners in the latter class are determined on a percentage basis.

Play among the entrants in this series will begin within the week. Last night a meeting of the eastern coaches was held in Raleigh, and under the direction of E. R. Rankin of the extension division a schedule of play was arranged. Tonight Mr. Rankin will go to Salisbury where he will meet the representatives of the western schools.

A list of entrants in the east include Ayden, Belhaven, Benson, Bethel Hill, Bragtown, Burgaw, Clinton, Enfield, Farmville, Four Oaks, Hamlet, Hertford, LaGrange, Lucama, Lumberton, Nashville, Rose Hill, South River, Tabor, Trenton and Zeb Vance.

The western schools participating in the contest are Ansonville, Asheboro, Badin, Bakersville, Biscoe, Boonville, Candor, Canton, Claremont, Cleveland, Derita, Elon, Fallston, Farmer, Copeland, Denton, Forest City, Haw River, Henrietta-Caroleen, Kannapolis, Lattimore, Marshville, Mt. Gilead, Mount Airy, Pineville, Rockwell, Shelby, Spencer, Statesville, Troy, Union Grove, Welcome, Wilkesboro, Wingate and Yadkinville.

County Pays Heavily For Coroner's Inquest

It cost Orange county $84.20 to determine officially that Jordan Austin "came to his death through exposure from the cold" recently, according to figures supplied by Coroner S. A. Nathan, who believes the negro could not have raised a quarter of this sum from any source had he been alive.

"Our usual cost of a coroner's inquest is about $36," explained Mr. Nathan, "but this one involved two days' investigations and a roundabout trip through the snow across country."

The costs were divided as follows: Coroner's fee, at $10 per day, $20; mileage, $4.40 and $2.80; six jurors at $3 per day cost the county $36; summons were issued at an expense of $3; witnesses were paid $11; and the county physician drew $10.

Equipment For Making Liquor Causes Trouble

Jeter Lloyd, 31; Charlie Henderson, 40, and Deacon W. T. Dollar, 50, were charged in the Chapel Hill recorder's court yesterday morning with possession of equipment and materials for the manufacture of intoxicants.

Henderson and Dollar were acquitted because of insufficient evidence, while judgment in the case of Lloyd was suspended until next week's session.

Officers assert that they found a quantity of corn meal, mash, and kegs in the woods and observed Lloyd standing nearby. While the officers were present, Henderson and Dollar arrived with empty containers, they aver.

GLEE CLUB WINS DOUBLE HONORS

conveyed the group the remaining 21 miles to Gastonia in a little over 21 minutes, arriving there at five minutes to eight. The concert, scheduled to have been given at eight was delayed only slightly.

As a result of winning first place in Greenville, the club is eligible to participate in the National Glee Club Contest at New York City, March 8. However, the trip is uncertain on account of lack of finances. The club paid its own expenses to Greenville. Until this year the University has provided a small fund for the club, which has enabled it to give campus concerts quarterly without admission. The fund was not given this year and the fall tour resulted in a loss. It has been estimated that the cost of the New York trip would be $850.

last word was release.... "We must be able to release our hands, our mind, and our heart, and be able to use all our body to the best advantage." In closing Mr. Meyer said that it was his hope that the cabinet members would take these words, and probably some day they might help to unlock the door to happiness.

Dean Bell spoke to the sophomores on "Religion of Science." He stated that religion and science have been found to have one connection, that between physiology and ethics. "There are, however, still numerous conflicts existing between these two; namely, astronomy and religion, evolution and religion, and a few others." He stated further that things could no longer be blamed on the mechanical age as of the past.

"New Attitude on Morals" was the subject of Mr. Comer's talk to the junior-senior cabinet. "It is the purpose of this talk," he began, "to find out what human nature is and how to develop it." He was of the opinion that the Y should become a more effective organization for helping students find out what their natures are and how to develop them. Going further he stated that every individual is totally dependent upon other individuals, and that it is this fact that gives rise to social psychology. He closed by saying that the character-building process is at work in human beings continually.

Station W4WE Will Take Part in Amateur World-Wide Contest

mitter, working on 10 meters with a rated capacity of 150 watts, will also be used if reliable communication can be maintained on this little used band. The two other transmitters which are not expected to be used during the contest, are a 200 watt set working on the 80 and 160 meter bands, and a small 50 watt set operating on 20 meters.

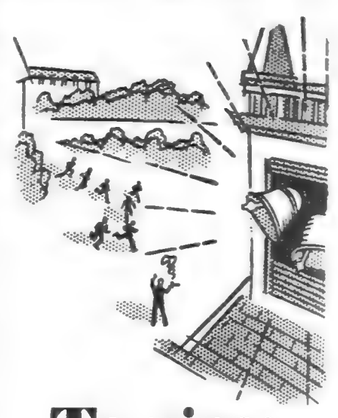
The station boasts a long list of foreign stations with which it has exchanged messages. In North America the station has talked to amateurs in Alaska, Canada, Newfoundland, and Mexico. Among the islands in the Carribbean Sea with which it has been in contact are Cuba, Haiti, Jamiaca, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Isles.

In South America the local operators have talked to stations in Argentine, Brazil, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia, Chili, Uruguay, and Peru. Of the islands near South America it has handled messages to South Shetland and South Georgia, S. A.

On the other side of the world the operators have conversed with stations in Australia, New Zealand, Fanning Islands, and Hawaii. Africa comes in for its share with contact having been made with amateurs in Morocco, Algeria, Cameroons, South Africa, Rhodesia, and Tasmania.

Among the countries in Europe that have been worked are Sweden, Finland, Poland, Denmark, Germany, Holland, England, France, Belgium, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo Slavia, Hungary, Austria, Portugal, and Spain.

The lone station from Asia that has been worked by the W4WE is one in Iraq. It is interesting to note that this exchange of messages took place last March and that only this fall a card was received from the operator of the station confirming the communication. With the arrival of this card the local station was eligible for the W. A. C. club, which is composed of amateurs who have worked all continents.



The preparations for the contest are almost complete now, and with such a record for distance work the operators are all primed not only to live up to the past but to push W4WE up nearer the top in this contest which arouses much interest among radio amateurs every year.

SEMINARS TO BE HELD WEEKLY FOR ECONOMIC MAJORS

To Discuss Approaching Comprehensive Exams And Current Economic Problems.

WILL BE IN BINGHAM HALL

There will be a weekly seminar conducted every Thursday night in Bingham hall at 7 for all juniors and seniors majoring in economics. This seminar which will be held in the regular seminar room will be led by Professor Evans for the first month or two. Later, however, it is planned that the chairmanship will rotate among the students so that each student may get a chance to lead the group. By regular attendance and good work at this seminar there is a prospect of acquiring a course credit for one year's work.

For the first month the seminar will take up some of the questions dealing with the comprehensive examination, which will be given around the first of March to all seniors majoring in economics. After this examination the group will probably take up a study of some of the current economic issues. All students will be allowed to prepare papers to be given before the group.

With the advent of this seminar Dean Carroll wishes to make clear about liberal arts students majoring in economics. Heretofore it has been thought that only those in the commerce school were allowed to major in economics; this, however, is incorrect, because a student taking courses in the liberal arts school has the right to major in economics if it is his wish. The commerce school is an administration unit in business while the economics department is a teaching unit in the liberal arts school.

These seminars will be held for the first time next Thursday night at the stated time, and it is hoped that many juniors and seniors majoring in economics will take advantage of this seminar, not only for the benefit in it, but also probably for the course credit that may be gained.

N. C. REAL ESTATE INSTITUTE OPENS IN VILLAGE TODAY

Dean Carroll To Preside Over First Session Of Conference In Bingham Hall.

Presided over by Dean D. D. Carroll of the school of commerce, the first North Carolina real estate institute will open this morning at 10 o'clock in Bingham hall. The institute, which is expected to attract a group of nearly 100 realtors, is to be given under the auspices of the North Carolina Association of Real Estate Boards and the University extension division.

C. C. Smithdeal of Winston-Salem is to be in charge of the program. While the course in real estate selling is to be conducted by A. John Berge of Chicago, assisted by Guy W. Ellis of Detroit. Mr. Berge, who has previously conducted similar institutes, arrived in Chapel Hill last night. He immediately went into conference with officials of the extension dwivision to arrange the program for today's sessions.

Russian Choir Concert Lacked Spectacular States Reviewer

(By Milton Greenblatt)

The concert by the Russian Symphonic Choir at Swain hall on Monday was a very satisfactory one. There were no spectacular effects, and no startling manner of singing. But throughout there was splendid, intelligent singing by a well-balanced and capable chorus.

It is a relief, in these days when size and quantity are almost inevitable, to listen to a small chorus such as this one. For they give no deafening crescendos and fortes such as oratorio choirs usually display. And their limited size does not handicap them in their interpretations.

The soprano voices sounded very weak when the full choir sang, but the acoustics of the auditorium being bad, it is hardly possible to criticise the voices.

The best part of the program was the first section, church music, which is the most neturral medium for a choir. Holy Week is an unusual and beautiful song, influenced by the ancient Greek musical scale, according to program notes, and still sung in Greek Catholic churches. Rachmaninoff's "To Thee We Sing" was interesting, as is all his music.

In the second group, composed of classical music, the arrangement of Rachmaninoff's C Minor Prelude was disappointing. No transcription can ever be made without great loss to the original, as was evident in this piece. The Peasant Scene from Tschaikowsky's "Eugene Onegin" was an attractive song, sounding in parts like a slavic version of a Carmen chorus. The Evening Song from "Prince Igor," by Borodin was excellent. It had all the strange harmony and oriental quality that saturate this whole opera.

The choir sang with too much formalism and finish the group of folk-songs. Folk-songs are naturally wild, and somewhat crude, and cannot be sung like other music if the proper effects are to be achieved. The words of The Morning Song are extremely interesting in that they are exactly like a Chinese poem. The translation of the song is:

"On the hill the cocks are crowing.
On the lake the water's still.
When the lake begins to ripple,
I, young maid, get sad and blue."

Playmakers Are Highly Praised By Noted Poet

Jane Dransfield Declares That Carolina Playmakers Are One Of Most Important Creative Forces In America.

(By Mary Price)

"The Carolina Playmakers have the reputation of being the most important creative group in America at the present time," Jane Dransfield, playwright, poet and lecturer said in an interview here Sunday. "I know of no dramatic group whose ideals are so sincere and important as those of the Chapel Hill players."

Miss Dransfield is particularly interested in work being done in the experimental theatres of America and has written a number of plays herself that have received wide recognition, the most famous of which are The Lost Peiad, Blood o'Kings, and Joe, A Hudson Valley Play. "The New York theatre," she said, "goes in for perfection of technique, for the production end of the drama; therefore, the work of the experimental theatres is the only creative work being done in this country."

She was interested in the production of The Children of the Moon as staged by the Play-Likers of North Carolina College, which she arrived in time to see Saturday night. Having been connected with the original production of the play, she was pleased to be able to see an amateur performance of it. "The play was uniformly good," she stated, "falling down only occasionally in minor details of acting. The actors worked up well to the second act climax. They interested me."

Miss Dransfield, with her husband, was on her way to Florida from her home in New York and stopped off here from Saturday until Monday. This was her first trip to Chapel Hill, although she expressed herself as always having been interested in the town as well as in the

Alumnus Conducts Research Survey Of "Day Dreaming"

Dr. Harry F. Latshaw, graduate of the University and at present connected with the Harvard graduate school of education, has recently been quoted in the Boston Post with regard to the question of "day-dreaming."

Owing to the fact that Dr. Latshaw is a university extension lecturer on social psychology, his articles have been widely read and constantly given space in the larger newspapers of the north. In the recent interview with the Post reporter he stated that day-dreaming could be an asset only when put to daily use, and that otherwise it was an unwholesome and harmful habit. He stressed the importance vested in a child's education by his mother, advising against letting him follow too much his own desires.

Dr. Latshaw received an A. B. degree from the University of North Carolina in 1920, having been a member of the honorary fraternities of Alpha Psi Delta, Phi Delta Kappa and Sigma Xi. He then went to Harvard where he received his doctorate in the graduate school of education. He has taken up research work and is now in charge of a committee of 21 investigators, called the Harvard Growth study.

This research covers a period of 12 years, during which time children are studied from their first year in graded schools until they are seniors at high school. Psychological tests are made, and mental advancement under various circumstances is recorded. The process is now in its eighth year, with four more remaining. The report, when complete, will be one of the most important contributions to the solution of educational problems in history.

PLAYMAKERS TO LEAVE ON FRIDAY FOR TOUR SOUTH

Twelve Day Tour Will Take Group To Cities In The Carolinas And Georgia.

TO GIVE ONE-ACT PLAYS

The Carolina Playmakers leave here Friday to begin a 12-day tour of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. They will present three one-act plays: "The No 'Count Boy" by Paul Green, "Job's Kinfolks" by Loretto Carroll Bailey, and "Magnolia's Man" by Gertrude Coffin.

A fantastic negro comedy, "The No 'Count Boy," is typical of Paul Green's keen insight into negro personality. The play was awarded first prize in the National Little Theatre torunament in 1925, when it was produced in New York by the Dallas Little Theatre Company.

"Job's Kinfolks" has attracted considerable attention as a study of the problems in the life of a family of mill workers, and because of its clear delineation of these people. The author, Loretto Bailey, attended high school in Winston-Salem where there are no separate schools for mill children. Thus she has gained a background of knowledge which has enabled her to create a play acclaimed by many critics. In her portrayal of the role of Kizzie, the grandmother, she has likewise won a reputation as an exceptional young actress.

"Magnolia's Man" is a mountain comedy based upon the efforts of a young woman to get a husband on the correspondence plan. The real man proves not to be as alluring as the advertisement. Gertrude Conffin, the author, has been highly praised for her acting in the role of Mis' Tish, the village dressmaker.

These three plays were produced on the northern tour last November, when they were presented in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, as well as several small towns. The cast for the present tour will be practically the same as that appearing in the previous presentations. Frederick Koch, director of the Playmakers, and Hubert Heffner, assistant director, will accompany the group. In Atlanta Professor Koch will speak before the Fine Arts Club on "Making an American Folk Drama."

Monograms To Pose

There will be a picture taken of the Monogram Club this morning at 10:30 on the steps of the law building. It is absolutely necessary that all members be present at this time, wearing their monogram sweater.

At the same time there will be a picture taken of the golf team and the cheerleaders. All members of these groups must be present at this time.

ANNUAL SIGMA XI LECTURES TO BE BY DR. SHAPLEY

Director Harvard College Observatory To Speak In Gerrard Hall Thursday And Friday Nights.

IS NOTED ASTRONOMER

Dr. Harlow Shapley, director of the Harvard College Observatory, is to begin the annual series of Sigma Xi lectures tomorrow night in Gerrard hall at 8:30 o'clock. The series is composed of two lectures and the final address will be in Gerrard hall at the same time Friday night.

Dr. Shapley is considered to be one of the most eminent of the younger astronomers in the country, and it is believed that he will bring to the campus much valuable information on astronomical problems. He was awarded the Draper medal of the National Academy of Science in 1926.

Sigma Xi has sponsored this series of lectures for a period of ten years, and during this time has brought to the campus many of the country's most prominent scientists. The 1927 lectures were delivered by Dr. K. S. Lasley, research psychologist of the Institute of Juvenile Research. Dr. F. W. Alston of Cambridge University, England, presented a series of lectures on atomic structure for the 1928 Sigma Xi addresses.

Dr. Shapley has done research work in many branches of astronomy. Some of the fields in which he has worked are photometry, spectroscopy and cosmogony. He is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, a member of the Washington Acamedy of Science, the American Association of Science, the National Academy of Science, the American Astronomy Association, and the Royal Astronomical Society of England.

Saturday Review Of Literature Praises The Virginia Plutarch

(By E. C. Daniel, Jr.)

A thorough analysis, which is at the same time complimentary in its criticism, appears in the Saturday Review of Literature for February 8 as the latest contribution to the rising popularity of "The Virginia Plutarch" by Philip Alexander Bruce, a recent publication of the University Press. This searching critique is the writing of Allen Nevins, metropolitan editorialist, critic and author of renown.

In his book, of two volumes, Dr. Bruce pays a unique tribute to Virginia, as the mother of eminent men. This is the statement of the reviewer, who declares that the Old Dominion, the mother of presidents, "holds a place which Massachusetts and New York alone approach and neither quite equals. It is true that in the fields of literature and learning Massachusetts bears of the palm; Virginia is poor in poets, novelists, and scientists . . . But in war, politics, and pioneering there is no list equal to that which includes Washingtonn, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Madison, Mason, Monroe, Marshall, Winfield Scott, Lee, Jackson, and Woodrow Wilson."

It was the stated intention of the author of "The Virginia Plutarch" to present in his series of biographies a continuous narrative of American effort. Mr. Nevins credits this objective

C. T. MURCHISON FOR INTEGRATION AMONG TEXTILES

University Professor Tells Taylor Society Manufacturers Must Combine For Own Good.

Speaking before the University student branch of the Taylor Society last night, Dr. C. T. Murchison, professor of economics, advocated a program of integration as the only remedy for the present problem of overproduction which he lays to the individual manufacturer's inability to protect himself against fluctuations in the raw cotton market and in the market for finished goods.

The absolute impossibility of any manufacturer to protect himself against the sharp fluctuations in the price of raw cotton and his inability to anticipate demand and so regulate his production were the reasons given for a program of integration.

Dr. Murchison stated that the difficulties and technicalities involved in hedging prevented the ordinary manufacturer from protecting himself from changes in raw cotton prices by this traditional method.

The manufacturer is entirely unprotected in selling his goods for he cannot anticipate the demand, nor can he set the price he is to receive for the goods he has produced. Under present organization, the manufacturer usually sells through a commission merchant, who sells at the best price he can get, not necessarily the one asked for by the manufacturer.

A curtailment of working hours and the abolishment of night work, while it would be beneficial socially, would not benefit the cotton industry, stated Dr. Murchison. If there were curtailment and abolishment of night work, the increased profits of the industry and the small and readily available capital necessary for the establishment of a mill would attract a perfect flood of new mills, and within three years the industry would be back in its present condiiton.

Any integration which is to succeed must have its beginning at the converters, said the speaker. The converters, with a group of spinners and weavers under its control, could in some degree determine what would be the style and the demand. In this way the integrated industry could prepare itself for the future demand as forecast by those who exert some control over styles.

FRESHMEN PREFER GRAT TO LECTURE

The most unusual right of choosing the type of chapel program desired was given the freshmen yesterday by R. B. House, and the most characteristically freshman choice was made.

Mr. House, explaining that he had as usual been asked to say a few words (he is never asked to speak), kindly invited the freshmen to affirm their desire to hear the sermon he had prepared. Certain affirmation, however, was doomed when a possible alternative was suggested. Upon voting a mere murmer of "aye" supported the lecture, while Gerrard hall rang with the reply "Aye, aye, we'll have a grat!"

A THOUGHT A DAY

Life has no special purpose—none that is demonstrable. There is nothing to life but the living of it.—W. E. Woodward.

PURLOINED PARAGRAPHS

Until we heard about this "parrot" disease, we never knew exactly what was wrong with Congress.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Soviet may put a better face on things after all. It has granted a concession to a razor factory.—New ark Ledger.

"Wives don't tell their husbands everything," says Judge Crawford. After all, there are only 24 hours in each day.—Punch.

Tar Heel Topics

They don't seem to have any regard for tradition at State College. They've even started hazing sophomores over at West Raleigh.

President Hoover reports that he landed a 45-pound fish, seven feet long, day before yesterday. Evidently the prexy is no exception to the general rule that all fishermen are disciples of Ananias.

Alas, a labor strike is imminent in Chapel Hill! The linotype operators at the print shop inform us that they are going to walk out, quit flat, if they have to set the "I" dorm basketball team lineup again, what with such names as Turchiarelli and Leibowitz.

In an article in the current issue of the Journal of Adult Education Professor Edgar W. Knight writes of Phillip Melancthon, one-time professor of Greek in the University of Wittenberg—"He was not content to spend all of his time chasing digamma or exposing the infamies of gerundives." Which is all fine and dandy, according to the Greek scholars hereabouts, except for the rather important facts that there are no gerundives in the Greek language.

"Holier Than Thou?"

In last week's issue of the Duke Chronicle the Carolina student body receives a merited verbal lambasting for its conduct at the Duke-Carolina game February 1. Herbert O'Keef, Jr., sports editor of the Duke paper, writes that " . . . we would like to see better relations between the two schools, but when any student body lowers itself to the point of hissing and booing at a rival team, we do not feel like lowering ourselves to such a plane.

"The U. N. C. players showed as fine a spirit towards an opposing team as we have ever witnessed. But, we must say that the spirit shown by the students of that same institution was perhaps the rottenest we have ever been forced to witness.

"We would like to see better relations between Duke and Carolina. But, please remember this, "Charity begins at home," and so does good spirit! We meant this as constructive criticism; we hope that it will be taken as such."

Sports Editor O'Keef had ample justification for his editorial animus. All that he says concerning the conduct at the game here is correct—and then some!

During the past few days we have discussed the past history of the University's athletic relations at length with several alumni. Some rather startling revelations were made in these discussions. In fact, they convinced us that Carolina students are not exactly the only "simon-pure" gentlemen after all.

For instance, one loyal alumnus declared: "When I was a student here we were always beefing about how rotten Virginia's athletics were, and we finally cancelled with them in the spring of 1906 because they would not adopt a 5-month rule. I do not express my opinion as to which was right in the contention, but merely mention the fact that we wanted our way regardless, though we continued to play other schools that did not observe the rule."

Another staunch supporter of the University teams gave us a new slant on the old State-Carolina rivalry—"We fought State College (then A. and M.) quite as bitterly as we now scrap Duke, and broke relations with that institution in the fall of 1907 because they had a man on their team who—according to our reckoning—was ineligible. Six years later we played V. P. I. at the old fair grounds in Raleigh. State college boys came over in great numbers and yelled lustily for us, though we were getting the tar beat out of us. Immediately the University renewed relations with State, and the following spring we beat them in baseball. How does that look? We now meet State in generous rivalry, but it was State that made the advance, and not us—not on your life."

Every alumnus with whom I talked had similar views. In substantiation, we have heard persistant reports from Atlanta during the annual basketball tournaments that all the spectators were deriding the Carolina team because it had not been a modes winner in the past.

It is apparent to the most hide-bound and prejudiced of observers that Carolina should receive at least an even break when the blame for past unpleasantness is distributed. In our opinion the ancient and unjustifiable "holier than thou" attitude, manifest here for many years, must disappear before any material progress can be made in improving the University's relations with other institutions.
